American War and News Weekly Makes Strides

The first chapter of the American War and News Weekly, under its new name, is considered by General Film to be by far the best issue of the twenty-eight put out thus far. Not only is it said to contain up-to-the-minute war news in pictorial form, but also the cream of the week's news. Among the subjects in the first issue under the new title are the drives for the Liberty Loan, dry-docking of a battleship, scene in American oil fields, airplane stunts and Terry's animated war cartoons.

Japanese Scenes in Burton Holmes New Reels

Burton Holmes, in the ninetieth release of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, takes the spectators to Nikko, Mecca of the Japanese, and shows that "Nikko in Snow Time" is beautiful enough to be the Mecca of beauty lovers the world over.

In the days before railroad, the Japanese pilgrims used to come on foot from all corners of Japan to this spot; nowadays they come by train. Among other interesting things that are shown is the "Basha" or Japanese bus, that Mr. Holmes does not advise his friends to ride in.

War Letter Is Feature of Mutual Weekly

What is said to be a very interesting letter from an American soldier in France to his mother is announced as the center of attraction in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 150, which was released November 12. Billy Sunday, the evangelist, is also in this reel, and additional war subjects.

Trench Torches Shown in Magazine-on-the-Screen

Three subjects that are claimed by Paramount to be of unusual interest have been chosen for the ninety-third release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "The Magazine-on-the-Screen." Of these perhaps the most timely is that showing the trench torches designed by Mrs. Edward Stockbridge Gushee. Thousands of these have been made and sent to France for use in the trenches in place of lanterns and candles.

Concentrated Patriotism in Universal Events Reel

Current Events, No. 26, the news feature release on the Universal program for November 10, is expected to arouse more patriotic spirit than is usually the case in reels of the kind. Among the subjects is a series on the recent voyage of the British "tank" through Fifth avenue. Other subjects are: "Mrs. McAdoo Lights Beacon of Liberty" (Washington, D. C.); "London Joins in Opening 'War Huts' for U. S. Soldiers"; "Soldier Fire Laddies Protect Army Camps"; "Aerial Dance Steps" (Somewhere in America); "Governor Whitman Sees Plattsburg in Action"; "Americans in France," training camp scenes and cartoons from the newspapers.

Short Subjects in Review

NEW CONQUEST PICTURES IN PREPARATION

A picture program that the whole family can see, enjoy, and afterward discuss in concert is a program that will bring patrons back to the theatre that shows it.

Conquest Pictures, put out by Thomas Edison, Inc., some months ago, were designed to achieve this purpose, and seem, from letters received by Mr. L. W. McChesney, manager of motion pictures in the Edison Company, to have been most successful in all parts of the country. The pictures have been issued in twelve groups, each group containing a three or four-reel feature portraying the romantic or adventurous side of life, a clean, amusing comedy, and one or two of the scenic, scientific, or natural history subjects for which Mr. Edison has been famous. While the several groups were intended as complete programs, it has been possible for the exhibitor to lease single subjects from them, or to reassemble the subjects into a program to fit his particular need. Two of the Conquest Pictures already released are being widely used for propaganda purposes, "Knights of the Square Table," made under the personal direction of James Wilder of the National organization of Boy Scouts, and "Your Obedient Servant," adapted from "Black Beauty," the greatest plea ever made for kindness to dumb beasts.

Use of such programs as these does not begin till the close of the vacation season, so, as releases were in advance of bookings, the Edison Company has suspended production for a short time. A new series, however, said to be even better than the first, is in preparation, and will shortly be put on the market.

MR. EXHIBITOR

Do you realize that the NEWS WEEKLY, which you have been regarding as a mere "program filler," may be a means of filling your house if you utilize the attracting power of its timely topical interest?

If you run any of the subjects reviewed below, bulletin them in your program, your house sheet, the local press, or even on a placard in front of your theatre in something this fashion:

ITALY: Short of Coal but long on Ingenuity. She harnesses a VOLCANO and uses its steam to turn the wheels of her munition factories. Leventhal's drawings in motion show you how the trick is done. (Paramount-Bray Pictograph.)

PROHIBITION gains a new recruit. Redondo Beach SPRINKLES ITS STREETS with the contents of its wine bottles. (Mutual Weekly.)

BRITISH TANK tamed for parade purposes. A FIVE-STORY BONFIRE blazes the success of our Five Billion Dollar Liberty Loan. (Universal Current Events.)

Guns plus MACHINERY will win our war. Ore for our Allies hastened on its way by giant unloaders handling 17 TONS at ONE SWING. (Universal Screen Magazine.)

The latest in DERBIES! Not a hat but a HORSERACE. Head-on scenes at the famous race track in Latonia, Ky. THANKSGIVING is coming. Flocks of cheerful gobblers are doing their bit of preparation for the feast by eating every last crumb handed out to them. (Hearst-Pathe News.)

GOATS to the rescue! Great flocks of these thrifty animals in California promise an increase in the MILK AND WOOL SUPPLY. Work and play at the TRAINING CAMPS. Equally exciting are TREE FELLING and OBSTACLE RACES. (Hearst-Pathe News.)

Consider the TOAD. He's going to be very useful in keeping your next summer's garden free from destruction. Mr. Ditmars snaps him in the act of SNAPPING THE CUT WORM.

An Example

¶The Broadway Photoplay, a house in the early hundreds, with a patronage of the highest class, and changing its bill but twice a week, runs the Hearst-Pathe News during the first half of the week, the Universal Weekly during the second.

¶At the entrance of the lobby, the poster on the Weekly stands shoulder to shoulder with those announcing the feature and comedy.

¶"Every evening," says the manager, "I am called up several times and asked at what time the Weekly will go on. At least three hundred of my patrons come for that alone, sometimes not even remaining for the feature."

BOXING BY THE WHOLESALE

An army that must be raised over night, as it were, cannot receive much individual instruction. So Martin Delaney, training reserve officers at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, in the art of boxing (Mutual Weekly No. 149) takes them in batches of 300. The work is amusing to the spectators, but is taken very seriously by the men themselves.

Another out of the ordinary effect of the war is the manner in which Redondo Beach, California, carried out its bone-dry decision. To show its contempt for intoxicants it literally lays the dust with them by pouring gallons of wine into the town sprinkler and sending it on its irrigating way.

In these days of like work and equal suffrage among men and women it is hardly possible to set apart any subjects as appealing especially to one sex or the other. Yet we imagine the very chic boots displayed by Mollie King will cause many a woman a pang of envy. Were we ourselves to own a pair of "Mollie King boudoir sandals" we fear the boudoir would be our favorite abiding place.

Interesting pictures of how well German prisoners are faring at the French front complete the reel.

LIBERTY LOAN IN A BLAZE OF GLORY

In all the numerous parades which have graced, more or less, the length of Fifth avenue during the past months probably nothing excited interest in greater degree than did the British tank, which under the guidance of her own crew (Universal Current Events No. 26) lumbered with surprising agility in the last Liberty Loan procession. The title man has prefixed each view with a clever jingle which adds to the spectator's enjoyment of the celebrated monster. The harvest of bonds being gathered in, a suitable celebration was in order, and this was supplied in the national capital by a huge bonfire. As Mrs. McAdoo pushes a button the pile becomes ignited and in a few moments is a gorgeous tower of flame.

Glimpses of a spirited boxing match between Lieutenant Barrett and A. Drexel Biddle show one way in which our men are getting fit. Views of our airmen in France present another side of the training. Three cartoons from leading newspapers drive home their lesson with suggestive humor.

JAPANESE ART AND ITALIAN ARTIFICE

The lightning has been chained, Niagara harnessed. The latest natural force to come under the yoke of man's ingenuity is the volcano. In Laredererello, Italy, a clever scientist, with a title by the way, has tapped the subterranean steam passages leading to a local crater and by connecting them with dynamos and driving wheels and forcing them to generate electricity and run munition works, is offsetting to some extent Italy's crying need for coal. How this is done and how the steam itself is formed in the depths of the earth are cleverly illustrated in animated drawings by J. F. Leventhal in Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 93.

The turmoil of war has not yet upset the patient tradition of Japan. Handed down from generation to generation is the lore of flower arrangement, a science as exact as mathematics, though much more charming in effect. Miss Mary Averell, an American woman, has won the title from her Japanese friends of "Lady of All Flower Knowledge," and with the aid of a Japanese pupil illustrates the interesting principles of artistic floral arrangement.

War thrift on the one hand and wilful extravagance on the other. The woman whose bank balance is comfortably large must still have her silver fox, and this number of the Pictograph contains shots, "snapshots" in more sense than one, of a farm where the handsome fur bearers are bred. Their manners are as bad as their coats are beautiful, as witness the actions of a couple of pups worth all of $1,500 each. Indeed, domestic pets that require the most careful handling, strong wire fences to keep them in place, and an armed guard accompanied by a Great Dane to keep marauders out, are not to be commended to the farmer seeking a quiet life. However, one may endure much for the $2,500 which each adult skin brings.

WAR'S WORK AND WAR'S REWARDS

So excellent and interesting throughout are issues 89 and 90 of the Hearst-Pathe News that it is difficult to choose any part of them for special mention. For instance, in No. 89 are views showing the increasingly important goat industry, with charming pictures of the flocks in California. There is a thrilling tree-chopping episode, taken near Houston, Texas, where negro infantrymen are clearing the grounds for their training camp. One catches one's breath as the tree swoops to the ground, with the men barely escaping from the crashing boughs. Quite as exciting are the athletic contests at Camp Lewis, Washington, which include a tug of war, hurdling and an obstacle race. The sad and sober part comes with those scenes in which the men and women who have already dared and suffered receive the thanks of England's King. But again, the brighter side of war appears in splendidly photographed scenes at the front, where American aviators, ready at last, take their place of duty in the air.

No. 90 contains such lively subjects as a football game between sailors and soldiers at New Haven and the running of the famous Derby at Latonia, Kentucky. The horses are snapped head on as they rush down the track and are shown rounding the curve in close formation. A most interesting sight is the submerging and rising of a submarine being tested at New London before being shipped to the Chilean Government.

The ever present food problem receives attention in two pleasing forms. Whether or not we are going to be thankful on the last Thursday of the month, we are hoping to eat turkey and it is reassuring to see large flocks of them happily preparing for the feast at Calapatria, California. Of more than a festive day's interest, however, is the sugar problem. Down around New Orleans the women are out in the fields garnering the cane, while mechanical loaders and giant crushers hasten its transformation and transportation.

PUTTING THE TOAD TO WORK

Your garden was a prey to vermin? They bored into your cabbages and chewed up your tomato plants? What's the answer? Why, a small army of toads, who just love to dine off cut worms and cabbage worms, and snap like a hair tripper when one such delicacy appears on the path.

But toads are not yet for sale on the market, so Mr. Ditmars in his "Enemies of the Garden" (Educational Films Corporation) shows other methods that can be employed to preserve our vegetables. Discarded paper drinking cups form excellent shields around the roots of young plants and a tempting meal of bran and arsenic soon proves fatal to the greedy intruder.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Hart Feature Released by W. H. Productions Company

"The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," a William S. Hart feature, one of the first to be offered on the independent market by the W. H. Productions Company, is reported to be going big in the territories for which it has been sold. The feature has been recently released by the W. H. Company and last week the Canadian rights and the New York City territories were sold. It is said that "The Bargain" presents Mr. Hart with opportunities never before offered him and that his role of "Two-Gun" Stokes is typically Western and an ideal Hart role. It is said that "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" shows the quality of his work as well as any picture that he has ever done.

U. S. Exhibitors Name Metropolitan Heads

Sales force of the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation for the metropolitan district was practically completed this week with the announcement of the selection of P. E. Myer as resident general manager of the New York Exchange, with headquarters at the Hoffman Four Square offices, 729 Seventh avenue, and A. J. O'Neill in charge of the Brooklyn sales with his headquarters in the same offices.

Both of these gentlemen will work under the direction of Lynn S. Card, general sales manager of the booking corporation.

Green Controls Canadian Rights to "Great White Trail"

Due to a typographical error, it was erroneously stated in the November 10 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that M. H. Hoffman, Inc., controlled the Canadian rights to "The Great White Trail," produced by Wharton, Inc. John C. Green, manager of Wharton's Canadian Features, is in sole control of the Canadian and Alaskan rights to this production. Mr. Green reports that the picture is a "very big success" in this territory. The feature is handled through the six branch offices of the Regal Films, Inc. The picture is booked, states Mr. Green, until February 1.

Mammoth to Handle Ivan Feature in Southern New Jersey

The Mammoth Film Corporation announces that arrangements have been completed whereby this company is to handle the distribution of Ivan's production, "Married in Name Only," in the Southern New Jersey territory. The Mammoth company handle the distribution of other Ivan productions in Northern New Jersey. Milton Sills is featured in "Married in Name Only."

Frank Seng Explains His Advertising "Parentage"

Says That His Plan Was Original and That It Brought Unheard of Results—"Runs in Legitimate Theatre Have Lost Their Significance," He Says

FRANK SENG, who has accomplished such good results with "Parentage," which he placed on the independent market last summer, tells in the following interview the results he obtained from a campaign of advertising which he says was marked originality. Mr. Seng said:

Frank J. Seng, Whose Feature, "Parentage," Has Made Good at the Box-Office

"In THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS of May 5th, 1917, there appeared a series of simple, yet very effective 'teaser' ads scattered throughout its pages announcing the coming of a new film production. These 'teaser' ads, followed by others, were the opening guns for 'Parentage.'

"From such an humble beginning there developed one of the best directed campaigns of trade paper advertising ever launched in this industry. Within thirty days there wasn't an exhibitor in the United States and Canada who did not know about 'Parentage, A Message,' and feel that it was really a 'worth while' production. No extravagant claims were advanced. In fact, all of the word and illustration ammunition seemed to be concentrated on getting over the fact that here was a picture that differed radically from anything previously released through independent channels.

"On the sixth day of June 'Parentage' was given its trade showing at the Rialto theatre to a large and enthusiastic audience. I immediately followed this showing with a 'straight from the shoulder' statement explaining in detail why I chose the Rialto theatre for a first run of this production, instead of placing it in a legitimate theatre. That advertisement sounded the death knell, I think, of forced runs in legitimate theatres by which means many had tried to inflate the value of a production by pocketing a big loss on a 'New York run.'

"So-called runs in legitimate theatres in New York have lost their significance. During the past year many mediocre films were given forced runs on Broadway at heavy financial loss. Buyers and exhibitors no longer consider a run a mark of quality. 'Parentage' is not a $2.00 film. Folks in New York City should not be asked to pay $2.00 to see it, when it is afterwards to be shown all over the United States at from ten to fifty cents. But it is, we think, the greatest film ever screened to be played at fifty cents top price."

"'Parentage' broke all records at the Rialto. More than ten thousand were turned away during the week. In the advertising that followed, I made it clear that the prestige of the Rialto alone could not of itself make this picture an overwhelming success throughout the country. I urged every exhibitor to use his own initiative, and place liberally the many ad helps that had been prepared for him on this remarkable film."

To the distributor of "Parentage," who is himself a successful exhibitor of Wilmette, Illinois, goes the credit for the introduction of the first house organ to be launched in the state rights field. This little magazine of service has now reached its eighth issue and promises to be continued until every exhibitor in the country has had an opportunity to book and play "Parentage."

Big Advertising Campaign Planned for Flynn Serial

M. H. Hoffman, Inc., which has the distributing rights to the serial written by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, is busy completing plans for an extensive advertising campaign that is to be launched soon and arranging for adequate distribution. Mr. Hoffman said:

"Our various exchanges, both in this country and Canada, are in receipt of requests for information concerning this serial, and fourteen branch managers are asking for prints. As a consequence our organization is working overtime getting data prepared and every executive staff member realized that in point of volume Chief Flynn's serial will establish a record.

"The Whartons are busy casting the serial, and expect to have the first episodes under production soon."

Via States Rights

By H. J. Shepard

FIRST OF A SERIES

¶ "Via States Rights" is the first of a series of articles on the independent field, based upon long experience, by H. J. Shephard, in which he promises to call a spade a spade.

¶ The second is entitled "Sharpshooters in the Industry," and will appear next week.

THE States Rights market is here to stay. It is a big, new, lasting institution and nothing can prevent its rapid growth and development. Even though all the "stars" who enjoy such enormous popularity were gathered into the fold of the large program distributors, who claim them to be the real box-office assets, there would sill be a possibility of producing good photoplays from strong, virile stories, which have proven in the past to be more lasting. Film "stars" are the most transient of beings, and many of them take the plunge over the horizon of dramatic obscurity only too quickly,—while stories live forever,—if they are good. Shakespeare never saw a motion picture, nor did he ever exploit a "star," but he certainly whispered something in that little remark of his about "the play being the thing." This is not an empty statement, but one which has been indubitably proved over and over again by the success in this field of any number of big features, which depended entirely on their stories to carry them through. So strive as the program distributors may to gather all the good material into their nets, there will always be sufficient productions to fill the States Rights market.

States Rights vs. Program

There is no strongly defined line of distinction between a States Rights and a program picture. An exceptional program feature can be turned into a States Rights production, if it falls under the classifications of the pictures designed for that field, and if it is properly advertised. No picture, no matter how valuable, can be successfully "put over" without recourse to the medium of a well-planned advertising campaign; on the other hand, an exceptional program picture, with the force of an organized campaign behind it, can be made a very good States Rights proposition. The industry is coming daily to see this more clearly, and in consequence the market in this field is becoming correspondingly enlarged. This is borne out by the fact that many of the large program organizations, when they find that one of their releases is of more than usual merit, and falls under States Rights classifications, take it off their regular program and charge a special price for it.

The successful productions for the States Rights market come under three classifications: the sensational, the propaganda, and those containing an exceptional story. If the release is built around some sensational event or happening of the day, or has a plot filmed under such trying conditions as to cause public comment, it falls under the first class, and may be judged fit for the States Rights market. It may contain a preachment on suffrage, war, peace, religion, any subject that offers material for a sermon or a teaching, rendered in a dramatic and interesting way, and come under the second. And finally, a story of exceptional power and force, containing perhaps a little historical value, will serve to bring a release into the third class. Of course, even a combination of all three of these qualities will not bring a picture within the radius of the States Rights limit if the utmost thought and care are not put into its production.

Producer's Conception Wrong

Unfortunately, the average producer does not know anything about the above. The trouble with the average producer's conception of a States Rights picture is that he hasn't any. He does not distinguish between picture values. He gives no consideration to the fact that his picture may or may not be adaptable to the States Rights market. His story may not qualify under any of the three qualifications of the pictures successful in that field. That doesn't make a bit of difference. All his work—in his own estimation—is so far superior to anything that has ever been done previously—by anyone else—that he succeeds in very successfully pulling the wool over his own eyes as to the true value of his production. He doesn't know the market nor does he know the values of the various territories. In consequence, if he attempts to go ahead upon his own initiative, he gets into trouble. In the first place, he may not really have a States Rights picture, and, if so, he is naturally wasting his time. In the second place, granting the former, he has no understanding of the proposition with which he is dealing, and probably will end by getting thoroughly "stung."

In putting a picture on the States Rights market, one great question faces the distributor and the territorial buyer. This is the question of percentage and cash. The distributor usually wants cash. He wants to get his money out of the picture in the quickest possible way. He will promise everything—and give nothing. After he has gotten the purchase price out of the territorial buyer, the deal is finished in so far as he is concerned. There is no co-operation—he just forgets all about him. The buyer, left to hoe his own row, may lose or win. Consequently, the next time that he buys a picture he negotiates for it upon the percentage basis. He wants the distributor—and he is justified in this—to take a chance with him. In other words, he is assuring himself of co-operation.

The distributor usually doesn't respond. He feels that the buyer is trying to let him in for a share of his possible losses. There is a mutual distrust. The distributor has no confidence in the buyer. If the buyer has lost money on a previous proposition, it is because he has bungled his territorial distribution—never because his picture has not been practically and properly backed up by the distributor. The buyer naturally has little faith in the distributor, for he feels, and in many cases he is justified, that his failure with a former picture is due entirely to the desertion on the part of the distributor. And so it goes.

The Unsuccessful Many

It is undoubtedly true that the failure of many States Rights productions is due to the foregoing reason. They do not succeed because there is little or no assistance given to the territorial buyer by the distributor after the sale. A competent, careful distributor knows the financial value of his picture and he also knows that the picture is fifty per cent sure of success if he aids the territorial buyer with the proper information and backs him up with an advertising campaign. When all our distributors come to the realization of this important fact, we shall find the number of States Rights failures materially reduced. The slogan of the development of this new field of the industry should be: "Co-operation," and it is that and that alone which will win for us in the long run.

One of the greatest evils of the States Rights trade is a wedge that has long stood between the distributor and the buyer. This is the middleman, or broker. The industry is crowded with these men who are entirely lacking in the principles of decent business. They prey upon the distributor and territorial buyer alike. Retained by the one, they play both ends to the middle, and it doesn't matter who gets stuck, so long as they get theirs. It even frequently happens that more than one of these chevaliers of industry will claim the representation of the distributor or the buyer, and all will claim the commissions, so that there are several percentages to be deducted from the final settlement.

It is unfair to make the statement that all the middlemen in the industry are of this type. There are some very good ones, who are doing the States Rights trade a vast deal of good. Moreover, they are gradually eliminating the disreputable faction in their own trade, for they are daily bringing both the distributor and the buyer to closer understanding of conditions, and teaching them to deal with those who make use of only honorable business methods.

A Solution

If every States Rights organization, being formed at present, is really "all for one and one for all," the solution is easily found. However, this is a distinctly hypothetical proposition. How many States Rights organizations have thoroughly analyzed the market conditions of the country? How many have listed and graded the theatres in each territory? Have they even obtained general data in connection with them? The answer is: No. They should be in a position to estimate the approximate returns from each territory for each production. They should realize that the market conditions vary throughout the country as to bookings, and that therefore in the matter of territory percentages the value of each picture is different. It is only by thoroughly familiarizing themselves with this data that the distributors can place themselves in a position to really consistently work with the territorial buyers and not leave them to shift for themselves. It is only by this method that a proper understanding between the two parties can be built up, and the States Rights sphere come into its proper degree of efficiency.

The solution of the States Rights problem lies then in three things: The analysis of all territories by the distributor, the proper consideration of the story of the picture and of those other essentials which go to make up the careful preparation of a feature picture, and—co-operation. The last is perhaps the most important of all, for the best of releases can be made or broken on the wheel of negligence. The distributor must support the territorial buyer. He must give him the benefit of a comprehensive and thorough advertising campaign, and special, personal help when necessary. In the matter of percentage, he must not only be willing, but be glad to take a chance on the success of his picture with a reliable buyer, realizing that if they work together the production has a much better chance of going across.

Duskin Joins Sales Forces of Wolfberg Attractions

J. M. Duskin has been engaged by the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, to handle the Western Pennsylvania territory, it is announced. He will devote his time to the exploitation of "The Mad Lover," "The Deemster," "Today," "The Crisis" and "Persuasive Peggy," all of which features Wolfberg controls for this and other territory.

"Lust of the Ages" Sells More Territory

Robert C. Crown, of Dallas, Texas, has purchased the rights for "The Lust of the Ages," starring Lillian Walker for the states of Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas, announcement is made by the Ogden Pictures Corporation, which had just completed the second Lillian Walker picture, "The Grain of Dust."

The sale to Mr. Crown completes the disposal of all the world's territory with the exception of Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska, and the territory in the South with Atlanta as its center. Negotiations are now on with interested parties and Jessie Goldburg, promotion and sales manager for Ogden, expects to sign the last contract within a few days.

Great demand is already reported for the second Lillian Walker as the result of the money that "The Lust of Ages" had made for the purchasers of territorial rights. Albert Scowcroft, president of the Ogden company, is now in New York for the purpose of conferring with General Manager Lester Park and Mr. Goldburg relative to enlarging plans for the company's operations. Although "The Grain of Dust," taken from the famous novel by the late David Graham Philips, is complete, no offers for its sale are to be considered until after its public showing.

"First, in order to establish the Ogden trademark and, secondly, to test out the full popularity of Miss Walker as a star, we disposed of 'The Lust of the Ages' at prices that are profitable to us, yet were exceedingly reasonable to state rights buyers. We, however, keep in touch with territorial buyers on 'The Lust of the Ages' and find that although the production has been released less than two months, every one of them have bookings that cover the full cost of the production to them, together with a fair margin of profit.

A notable cast, which is announced for the first time, supports Miss Walker in "The Grain of Dust." Ramsey Wallace, who appears opposite the star, has had a noteworthy career in this country and England on the legitimate stage. Miss Corinne Ursell is seen as his sister and Miss Edith Day plays the role of his fiancee. The remainder of the cast includes George Henry, Jacques Tyroll, Redfield Clark, Cecil Fletcher, Marjorie Vonnegut, Charles Eldridge, R. Wangerman and Lawrence Evart.

Hirsh Optimistic on Conditions in Film Industry

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, who has booked the late William S. Hart production, "The Cold Deck," on the Loew Circuit, speaks in optimistic phrases on the present conditions of the film industry. He said:

"It is strange, but true, that at this moment of unsettled times, a special feature is responsible for exceptionally fine business at the Loew houses. This assures me that conditions are rapidly improving, and can be made to improve if you have the proper productions. 'The Cold Deck,' wherever played,' has proven to be one of the best Thomas H. Ince-Wm. S. Hart productions made, from a box office standpoint. Exhibitors everywhere have voluntarily reported to me that 'The Cold Deck' has proven the best money getting attraction this season.

A Scene from "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," an Ince Produced Picture, the First Released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation

First U. S. Corporation's Release Well Received

"The Zeppelin's Last Raid," a Thomas Ince Production, Has Trade Showing in New York and Boston—Gordon Gets New England Distributing Rights

THE U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, of which Frank Hall and William Oldknow are the leaders, announces that after the trade showing of its first release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," there is little doubt of the success of the newly organized company's first venture. The picture was presented last week at the Broadway theatre, New York, and those who saw it pronounced it an unusual production. It was presented for the first time in Boston last Tuesday night, at the Fenway theatre, and, according to reports from the Massachusetts exhibitors, the picture proved satisfying in every respect. It will be shown to Pennsylvania exhibitors this week, in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. The picture will be shown in Philadelphia Sunday night. The date for Pittsburgh has not been announced. The distribution of the corporation's features will be handled by Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges, with the exception of the New Jersey territory, which will be handled by Gersten Exchange, operating from headquarters in New York.

The management of the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., has obtained the first-run privileges for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

The Gordon interests, comprising one of the biggest independent distributing companies in the East and a chain of theatres in New England, have affiliated with the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation to market special productions by a novel system of distribution.

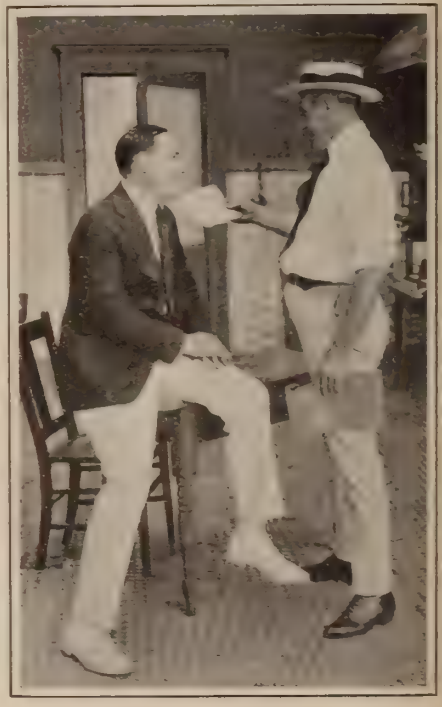
After viewing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Nathan Gordon, of Boston, directing head of the New England enterprises that bear his name, contracted for the sole distributing rights to U. S. productions in New England. The U. S. subjects will be marketed through the Globe Feature Film Company, of Boston, of which Mr. Gordon is president and general manager.

The arrangement guarantees to the U. S. franchise-holders and the open market in the New England territory a most efficient distribution and promotion service.

Arrangements also have been completed for a pre-release engagement of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" at the Scollay Square theatre, Boston, beginning November 12. Thereafter the Ince spectacle will be released both to franchise-holders and the open market, with the former, of course, getting preference of runs at the franchise-fixed price.

"It is the intention of the new concern to handle only productions that are above the accepted program standard," said Mr. Hall. "At present it is planned to distribute about twelve a year, all of which will be purchased outright for cash and a majority of the subjects will feature a noted star and will be adaptations either from a well advertised book or a successful play. Only pictures that possess exceptional exploitation possibilities will be selected.

"We do not fear any possible shortage of suitable productions," he said, "but in order to safeguard ourselves against such a contingency we have decided to have a series of special productions made for us. Just what they shall be and who will make them we are not yet in a position to divulge. We have inspected perhaps twenty different subjects since getting the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation under way, and only three met our requirements. 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid' and two Bessie Barriscale subjects have already been chosen, and in the near future we shall announce the acquisition of at least two more."



Among the recent additions to the sales forces is Frederick Holderman, veteran film man who invented many of the sales forms now in use by exchanges the country over, the first booking manager of the General Film Company. Mr. Holderman will be in charge of the marketing of the U. S. subjects in Northern New York, having headquarters in Buffalo and Albany.

A. Lincoln Ehrgott, who recently resigned from the managership of the Boston office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, will handle the same field for the U. S. For a number of years he was manager for the General Film Corporation at Bangor, Me., and New Haven, Conn. A. A. Lee, who for years has served as special representative for Gaumont Company in the West, will have charge of the Michigan territory for the U. S., with headquarters in Detroit.

Friedman Reports Good Sales for "The Mormon Maid"

Benjamin Friedman, president of Friedman Enterprises and owner of the world's rights to "The Mormon Maid," featuring Mae Murray, announces that he has disposed of the entire United States with the exception of three territories. Mr. Friedman has just returned from an extended tour of the country and reports that the feature is making money for exhibitors.

Turner & Dahnken bought the rights for Southern California and Arizona; T. L. Tighe for Northern California and Nevada; the Greater Feature Company for Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; the Westcott Film Company for Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin; the Supreme Film Company for Iowa and Nebraska, and Aaron Jones, of the Central Film Company, Chicago, for Illinois and Indiana.

Mr. Friedman is making his headquarters at the office of Hiller & Wilks, his New York representatives, and announces that he is in the market for world rights to other big pictures.

Southern Exhibitors Need More "Pep," Says Royster

Nat L. Royster, sales manager, Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., writes that after an extended trip through the Southern territory, he finds that two out of three of the best houses in the South are leaving one and two days each week open on their program for independent features, the managers claiming that they get the biggest results from the right kind of independent feature.

"Exhibitors through the South," says Mr. Royster, "are generally pessimistic concerning business. They all declare that business is 'rotten' and that they will probably have to close because of the war tax. I find that in most instances it is the exhibitors' own fault, and not that of the war tax, that they are not doing a good business. The great trouble seems to be that the exhibitors need more 'hustle' and 'pep.' Most of the evils of the business could be remedied if the salesmen, exchange managers, exhibitors and all concerned would work together," concluded Mr. Royster.

Flynn, Who Directed "Alimony," One of Youngest Directors

Emmett J. Flynn, who directed the production of "Alimony," which was purchased recently by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, to be released through its exchanges about December 3, is one of the youngest men directing the destinies of the silent drama. Mr. Flynn is only 25 years of age. His first experience with theatricals was an engagement with Willard Mack in Salt Lake City. Some of his first work in the studio was done under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, playing opposite Francelia Billington and Irene Hunt. He played opposite Myrtle Steadman in her first Paramount picture and later was assistant to John B. O'Brien, director. "Alimony" is Mr. Flynn's first big production for the independent market. The story was written by Hayden Talbot and deals with the divorce question.

Select Reports Big Business in South and West

Arthur S. Kane, General Manager of Select Pictures, Gives List of Prominent Theatres in South and West That Will Show Select Product

REPORTS received by the home office of the Select Pictures Corporation would indicate that Select Pictures are being heavily booked in the South and West. Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, announces that he received during the past week contracts from the managements of some of the finest theatres in the South and West for Select Pictures.

Select Pictures have already been booked heavily in the New York and Middle Western districts, he reports. "V. P. Whitaker, the manager in charge of the new Select Exchange in Washington, D. C.," says Mr. Kane, "has been particularly successful in landing some big contracts. He has signed Crandall's new Knickerbocker theatre for all pictures of Select stars. These include all the pictures made and presented by Clara Kimball Young and her own company; the pictures made by Norma Talmadge and presented by Joseph M. Schenck; Constance Talmadge's star pictures, presented by Lewis J. Selznick; and the pictures of Select's latest star, Alice Brady. Mr. Crandall also obtained the Select Star Pictures for his other houses in Washington, the Savoy, the Avenue Grand, and the Apollo theatres.

"In Baltimore, Mr. Whitaker has placed a contract for the Select Star Pictures with Bernard Depkin for his house, The Parkway theatre, which is one of the finest in Baltimore. When Mr. Depkin's fine new house, now under construction, is completed, Select Pictures will be shown there. Mr. Depkin has also contracted to show the Select stars in his Wizard and McHenry theatres.

"Mr. Whitaker also signed Otto Wells' theatre, The Colonial, in Richmond, Va. Mr. Wells will also obtain the Select Pictures for his Wells theatre at Norfolk. Besides these contracts for the Select Star Pictures, some notable contracts have been signed for Eva Tanguay's first screen offering, 'The Wild Girl.' In this territory Mr. Whitaker's contracts include E. D. Craver's Paris theatre, in Durham, N. C., and the Broadway theatre in Charlotte.

"In Georgia, Walter J. Price, Select's executive in charge of the Atlanta Branch, has been placing Select Pictures to advantage with the prominent theatres of the Southern district. In addition to the Criterion theatre in Atlanta, where all Select Pictures are presented in runs of a solid week each, Mr. Price has signed up the American theatre, conducted by S. E. Posey, at Columbus, Georgia; W. A. Wassman's Knickerbocker theatre in Nashville; the Signal Amusement Company's Alcazar theatre at Chattanooga; the Strand at Knoxville; the Capitol theatre at Macon, conducted by Ralph De Bruler; and the Rialto at Birmingham, conducted by the Mudd-Colley Amusement Company. These theatres have contracted for all pictures of the four Select Star Series, and in addition splendid contracts have been signed with the Rialto theatre at Birmingham for Eva Tanguay in 'The Wild Girl,' and for Select's big patriotic photodrama, 'Over There.'"

"On the Pacific Coast, the San Francisco branch manager, X. K. Stout, has shown the way with a splendid contract for all Select Pictures to be exhibited at Eugene Roth's magnificent new California theatre, which was opened on Thursday, November 1. This two million dollar palace is situated at the corner of Fourth and Market streets in the very heart of San Francisco. In Sacramento, Mr. Stout placed Select Pictures in Godard's 'J' Street theatre, the beautiful new picture house opened last May.

"In the Pacific northwest, B. R. Keller, manager of Select's Seattle Exchange, has contracted with the Jensen & van Herberg interests to place all pictures of the Select stars in their chain of theatres in Seattle, Portland, and Butte, including the following leading houses: The Liberty and Coliseum in Seattle; the Liberty in Portland; and the Rialto in Butte.

"Another contract in the Pacific northwest district was closed with W. W. Freeman of Great Falls, Mont., for all Select stars to be shown at his Imperial theatre in that city.

Leah Baird Signs for Six Super-Productions

It is announced that Leah Baird signed a contract to appear in six super-productions during the coming year. The company which will produce these pictures has not as yet taken out incorporation papers, and until these are on file in Albany, the name will be withheld, it is announced.

Warren's "Souls Redeemed" Praised by Welfare League

Edward Warren, of Edward Warren Productions, is in receipt of a letter from E. J. Meagher, chairman of the Mutual Welfare League, Sing Sing Prison, thanking him for the courtesy shown the members of this league when his feature picture, "Souls Redeemed," was shown at the prison last week.

Mr. Meagher speaks highly of the picture and voiced the opinion of the members of the league in the following extract from the letter received by Mr. Warren:

"No doubt you observed the picture went over 'big' and that fact speaks for itself as a production to merit the approval in this way, unless a picture pleases them much."

Hoffman Establishes First Foursquare Exchange in South

The first Hoffman-Foursquare exchange to be established in the South is located in Atlanta, Ga. M. H. Hoffman, last week completed arrangements for the first Southern exchange branch. Offices are located at 73 Walton street. Jerome Abrams, assistant general manager of exchanges, is in Atlanta superintending the opening.

Charles W. Harden will take charge of Hoffman-Foursquare pictures in this territory.

Mr. Abrams writes: "They all feel, down here, that our attitude is one which gives first consideration for the prosperity of the men who really give us a chance. The fact that Hoffman-Foursquare intends—as it now is—paying the war-tax on positive prints is evidence of a sincere desire to help the exhibitor during a time when he needs help. From the way matters are shaping up I can see that my preliminary work in Atlanta will be finished soon. First trade showings of all our subjects are now being given, and I expect to be able to report splendid business in time for Thanksgiving celebration."

"Oro to Shoulder Burden of Expense and Work"

H. Grossman, President and General Manager of Oro Pictures, Says That Plan of Distribution Designed to Help Exchange and Exhibitor

THE initial announcement of Oro Pictures contained information to the effect that the productions were to be distributed under a co-operative plan, which was to place "the burden of the work and expense upon the shoulders of Oro Pictures, Inc.; and not upon the exchange handling its product."

Since this announcement, Oro Pictures, Inc., has been the recipient of a large number of inquiries relative to its co-operative plan whereby the burden of expense and work is borne by it, and not by the exchange. In answer to these inquiries, H. Grossman, president and general manager, says: "The Oro plan of distribution has been designed to help the exchange and the producer for the betterment of the mutual interests of these two important factors in the motion picture business. The Oro Picture is not sold to the exchange, but is placed there in such a manner as will meet with the exchange's approval. The Oro plan is a quasi partnership agreement between exchange and distributor whereby both derive a proportionate remuneration for their work.

"Under the Oro plan each production will measure up to the highest standard in motion pictures. Each picture will bear the stamp of perfection. This precaution in the part of Oro Pictures, Inc., will be taken on all of the pictures released under the Oro banner in order to insure a profit to the exchange, which will inevitably mean a profit for Oro Pictures.

"One of the outstanding features of the Oro plan of distribution will be a service to the exchange. This service will comprise not only the publicity and advertising in the numerous trade journals, but will also include a direct-by-mail advertising to practically every exhibitor in the country. This spirit of co-operation between exchange and distributor will tend to establish a bigger market for Oro Pictures, and will incidentally result in larger returns on each Oro production.

"Isadore Bernstein will personally supervise every Oro production.

"Big stories by big writers; big stars in big pictures; big service and big advertising; all these will go in the making and distribution of Oro pictures, with a hope that a new standard will be set as an example of the highest attainable in motion pictures."

Thomas-Raver Combination Take Initial Step

Augustus Thomas, Who Has Recently Joined Forces with Harry Raver, Commences Work on Story for Initial Production

AUGUSTUS THOMAS, playwright, who has joined forces with Harry Raver and will co-operate with him in future productions, has taken up the reins, it is announced, and is working on the story which will be the foundation for the initial release of the Thomas-Raver combination. The title of the story has not been announced. Mr. Thomas, it is said, hopes to have it finished and ready for production within the next week or two. Mr. Thomas announces that the main theme of the story will be based upon a subject of current interest.

Mr. Thomas's ability as a playwright and author is well known. He has given to the speaking stage a number of successful dramas, "As a Man Thinks" and "The Witching Hour" having been pronounced by critics to be the best examples of his work for the stage.

Mr. Raver announces that the Thomas-Raver productions will be made in the East and that Mr. Thomas will have supervision of casting for the production, staging the production and incidental details relative to direction and the marketing of the new productions.

"Struggle Everlasting," Featuring Florence Reed, Completed

HARRY RAPF announces that "The Struggle Everlasting," his latest production for the independent market, is completed. The finishing touches were given last week. The production is in seven reels and is said to be of an allegorical nature. Mr. Rapf says that the production has cost him more than any previous one he has attempted due to the extravagant "sets" for which the story called.

Florence Reed presents the featured role. In the supporting cast are Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, E. J. Radcliff, Wellington Plater, J. Albert Hall, Fred C. Jones and Edwin Hoyt. Mr. Rapf says that it is the biggest thing he has ever done for the screen. A scene showing the grandeur of restaurant life in New York and one showing a cabaret setting, are said to be example of detailed work and realistic reproduction. A detail of the cabaret scene is a huge tank used for the diving girls to perform their aquatic feats. James Kirkwood directed.

The picture will be given a trade showing at one of the Broadway theatres within the next week, it is announced.

According to his present plans Mr. Rapf intends to release "The Struggle Everlasting" on the states rights plan. He may, however, sell the picture outright as he did with previous productions.

Warren Production Booked on Big Circuits

B. M. Mills, Elk Photoplay Company, reports a thriving business with "Souls Redeemed," Edward Warren Production, which is now playing the Keith, Proctor and Fox houses. Mr. Mills also closed a deal with the M. & S. houses. The picture is reported doing great business on this circuit.

M. F. Sanford, Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., Dallas, Tex., reports that he is getting liberal bookings and excellent results from "Souls Redeemed."

Standard Film Sells Hart Re-Issues to Metro, Texas

Phil L. Ryan, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, recently returned to the Kansas City office after a trip to Dallas, Texas, where he sold the reissued William S. Hart-Thomas H. Ince two-reel productions, which the Standard recently purchased from Warner Brothers, New York, to the Metro Exchange, of that city.

These Hart pictures were made nearly three years ago, at a time when both Hart and director, Thomas H. Ince, were aiming for the success which is now theirs, and it is to be safely said, Mr. Ryan claims, that there is more action in some of these pictures than some five-reel Western productions made recently. "I believe," says Mr. Ryan, "that Hart and Ince realized, at the time they were making these pictures, that the public would have to be educated to like Westerns of the type that is now demonstrated Hart and Ince alone can make, and they accordingly took every advantage of the opportunities offered by the two-reel length. I was myself surprised at the remarkable amount of story that Hart has crowded into each of these pictures. But possibly Mr. Ince's directorial brain should have the credit for that. It is nearly unnecessary to say that these pictures did much to make 'Bill' Hart. The surprising thing about it is the fact that the 'Bill' of three years ago is the 'Bill' so well-loved by theatregoers today. Perhaps here again Mr. Ince should be awarded the honors. It is certain that Hart has fought and struggled hard for the honors and the financial reward that is now his—and I feel, as I said before, that these pictures are very human signs of 'Bill's' determination to gain an everlasting great success."

Mr. Bickell, of Metro Exchange, Dallas, is highly elated over acquiring the Hart productions and looks forward, as does the Standard Film Corporation, to doing a big business with them.

Art-Films First Comedy Release—Dooleys Featured

"A RAG, A BONE AND A HANK OF HAIR," the first comedy release of the Fun-Art Films, Inc., was completed last week at the Thanhouser studios. Gordon and Ray Dooley, brother and sister, are featured. The comedy was written by Vincent Bryan, who is responsible for most of Charlie Chaplin's successes, such as "Carmen," "Police," "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," "The Count," "The Pawnshop," "One A. M.," "The Cure" and others. Mr. Bryan is also well known as the author of many successful plays and popular songs, such as "Down Where the Wurzburger Flows," "Cubanola Glide," "Tammany," etc. He also wrote "The Man from Now" and has written successful songs for Montgomery and Stone, Lew Dockstader, Nat Wills, and others.

Gordon Dooley and his sister Ray, who are featured in the comedy, are a well-known team on the big time vaudeville circuit. The Dooleys, although young in years, are live wires that need no recharging. Gordon Dooley, famous for his falls, slips and slides with utter disregard for limbs or neck, has never failed to convulse his audience with his sure-fire rapid style of entertainment. He has duplicated his vaudeville stunts on the screen in the opinion of all who have seen "A Rag, a Bone and a Hank of Hair." The cast also includes Edward Kimball, father of Clara Kimball Young, Tula Belle and Helen Badgley, two little children well known for their exceptional work in many prominent film productions.

It is the intention of Fun-Art Films, Inc., to release eighteen two-reel comedies a year, and will be marketed on the state rights plan.

Defeat Stirs Interest in Italian War Films

Instead of having any bad effect on the bookings, the Italian disaster of the past two weeks has boomed interest in the Italian Official War Pictures, according to announcement of William Moore Patch, president of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, which is releasing the picture in this country.

It is pointed out that the pictures show the tremendous part that Italy has already played in the war and there is bound to be the greatest interest of the public in seeing exactly what was done during the victorious advance on the Austrians.

The following territories have already been released, and Mr. Patch has personally selected the following exchanges to handle the films for him: In New England, Nathan Gordon; in Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia; in Illinois and Indiana, Jones Linick & Schaefer; in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Idaho, Supreme Feature Film Company; in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia, the Fort Pitt Theatre Company Exchange; in Pittsburgh, Norman S. Carroll, manager.

"Those Who Pay," Second U. S. Corporation Release

The U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation announces as its second production for release following "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," which was shown to the trade last week, will be "Those Who Pay," a Thomas H. Ince production, featuring Bessie Barriscale.

This production is said to be a strong drama of romance and political intrigue. C, Gardner Sullivan is responsible for the scenario. Mr. Sullivan will be remembered as author of "Civilization." He wrote, also, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid." The main theme of the story deals with the "eternal triangle"—one man and two women. It will be released about December 15.

Peggy Hyland's Next Picture Adapted from "Why Not?"

Mayfair Film Corporation's next production featuring Peggy Hyland will be an adaptation from the novel, "Why Not?" Work on this second Hyland feature will be commenced within the next week.

Max A. Schlesinger, president of Mayfair, announces that owing to mis-statements concerning Peggy Hyland's future activities he desires it to be known that Miss Hyland is under a ten year contract with the Mayfair Corporation, to appear exclusively in its productions.

Mr. Schlesinger announces that "Persuasive Peggy," featuring Miss Hyland, is meeting with unexpected success. Buyers who have acquired territory for this six-part feature, report that they have contracted for extended bookings and that exhibitors express satisfaction with the picture. The production has been launched successfully as an independent feature and Mr. Schlesinger expresses confidence that it will "get over" big.

THE WORLD MARKET

Flynn to Australia

J. C. Flynn, who recently resigned his position as manager of the Cleveland General Film Branch, will represent Goldwyn in Australia. He will open a distributing office in Sydney. Mrs. Flynn accompanied him to San Francisco last week, where they embarked on one of the Union Line steamers for their new home.

Record European Shipment Made by Blumenthal

What is said to be one of the largest exporting shipments to Europe has been made by the Export and Import Film Company, of New York, of which Ben Blumenthal is president.

Notwithstanding the difficulties that beset exporters under present conditions, it is cited by Blumenthal as a very significant fact that his concern should place in transit over 400,000 feet of film for release in Europe. It is pointed out in film circles that the only time that this record has been equalled is in the shipment of second hand films. This shipment includes eight complete multiple-reel subjects of the Ivan Film Company's productions and eleven comedies, hitherto unreleased in the European territory covered by Mr. Blumenthal's activities.

The Export and Import Film Company also owns the rights for the entire foreign market on "Man's Law," in which Irving Cummings is featured, and the most recently exploited Bernstein productions, "Loyalty" and "Humility" of six reels each. The "Tweedledum" comedies featuring Perez, the eccentric comedian, have also been contracted for, the company now owning full foreign rights on them.

Louis Brock Has Film Knowledge Worthy the Name

Louis Brock of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation

Although young in years, but twenty-seven summers, Louis Brock, nephew of the late Henry J. Brock, has to his credit quite a few years in the motion picture business, having commenced his career with the Kinemacolor Company of America in 1910 at their Whitestone studio as assistant director and later became manager of the same plant. During that time he accumulated considerable knowledge in the technical end of the industry, which has been a valuable asset to him in later years.

After the Kinemacolor Company had ceased active operations in this country young Brock proceeded to the Dominion of Canada and there acted in the capacity of exhibitor and managed the Scala and Francais theatres in Montreal and the Strand theatre in Toronto and later took up the exchange end of the business, managing Allfeatures, Ltd., both in Toronto and Winnipeg.

It was not long after this that the great rush was made to the South American republics, and Louis Brock was one of the first in the field with American productions. Having thoroughly finished his missionary work in Argentine and Brazil, he immediately changed his course to countries on the Continent, visiting Spain, Switzerland and France, in each country gaining knowledge that is invaluable as sales manager for the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, whose film business encircles the entire world. In visiting each foreign field Brock not only obtained valuable information as to the film situation but gained further knowledge of each language. Spanish, German, French, Portuguese is all as familiar to him as his native tongue.

Foreign Rights Are Sold for "The Grain of Dust"

UNDER the contract entered into between The Crest Pictures Corporation and The Ogden Pictures Corporation, the rights to the entire foreign territory were sold to the Crest Pictures Corporation on the next Ogden Pictures Corporation's release, "The Grain of Dust," adapted from the novel written by the late David Graham Phillips and in which production Lillian Walker is starred.

The Ogden Pictures Corporation has been engaged in the making of "The Grain of Dust" three weeks and will require six week more to complete.

The Crest Pictures Corporation has advised the Ogden Pictures Corporation by letter that they have executed contracts for the exclusive exhibition rights for Scandinavia on "The Grain of Dust" for the sum of $1,500. Carle E. Carlton, the president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, further stated: "This is the largest purchase price for rights on state rights productions registered to date in Scandinavia."

Harry Raver, director of "The Lust of the Ages," the initial Ogden Pictures Corporation's release, is directing "The Grain of Dust."

London Theatre Is Bomb-proof

The Stoll picture theatre, of London, formerly famous as the London Opera House, has a bomb-proof, Zeppelin-impervious roof. The roof is of heavy concrete, three feet thick, built to withstand the most violent of German air bombs.

They have been running the following advertisement in London newspapers:

"Two men took twenty-two hours to chisel a 12-inch diameter hole through the 3-foot flint concrete roof (1 foot is considered bombproof) that protects this palatial theatre. Our stalls tea room will accommodate 1,000 people. It is 16 feet under the level of the street, with 15 feet of concrete and iron girders overhead. Here you have a veritable Gibraltar of safety, where you can enjoy the most wonderful entertainment in London."

Current Broadway Feature Is O. Henry Story

The O. Henry Western story, "Hygeia at the Solito," is announced by General Films as the current Broadway feature on the General lists. Chet Ryan and W. L. Rodgers, who have been featured in nearly all of the two-reel Western stories in this series, are the principals in the picture.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Taylor, of Des Moines, Well Known in Industry

C. W. Taylor, who sits in the executive chair at Select's Exchange headquarters in Des Moines, Ia., is probably one of the best known executives of the Iowa and Nebraska territory.

Mr. Taylor was but recently appointed to look after Select's interests there. He is one of the newcomers in the motion picture field. More than a dozen years ago he might have been found doing business for the Amusement Supply Company in Chicago, and a little later with the Theatre Film Service Company in the same city. This was the concern founded by Hutchinson and Aiken, and Mr. Taylor remained with them for several years, finally becoming their assistant manager. Later on he became manager of the City Hall branch of the General Film Company, but left this firm to go with the Mutual Film Corporation in 1915 as manager of their Omaha branch.

For the last two years he has been located in Omaha as manager for first the Mutual, and afterwards, one year later, for the General Film Company.

Herbert Brenon Opens Company Branch in Montreal

The Herbert Brenon Film Corporation is opening a Canadian Branch of the organization in Canada, and of which Chandos Brenon, of Montreal, will be in charge.

Chandos Brenon made a hurried trip to New York last week, to make the final plans for the opening of the Canadian offices, arrangements for which have been pending for some time. Mr. Brenon will have his headquarters in Montreal, and will have complete charge of the exploitation of Brenon pictures in Canada.

Chandos Brenon is the brother of the director and producer, and is widely known in the film world of Canada, having been the Canadian representative of several big American moving picture concerns in that territory.

Victor Film Handles Bluebirds in Cleveland

The announcement was made last week by E. J. Schmidt, manager of the Victor Film Service Company, of Cleveland, that in the future he will look after the handling of all Bluebird pictures for the Cleveland vicinity. For this purpose a special sales department will be created in connection with the Victor Film, to insure good service to all Bluebird exhibitors, but the department will be directly responsible to Mr. Schmidt.

Since Mr. Schmidt took over the management of the Victor Service many innovations have been introduced into the office, and most of these, it is said, have been profitable.

Here and There

H. A. Bandy, manager of the Cleveland Goldwyn office, was in Columbus last week, carefully guarding the new Goldwyn acquisition, "The Auction Block" against any harsh treatment at the hands of the censor board.

Joseph R. Diener, former manager of the Bluebird exchange in Cleveland, is now in the real estate business in the Ohio city. His partner is Max Schactel, formerly manager of the Victor Film Co. It is said the latter intends to establish a chain of motion picture theatres and operate them on a circuit.

Sam Morris, who is handling the Select Pictures in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, has spent the past month making a comprehensive tour of his territory.

A recent change in General Film's sales organization is the return to that company of J. W. Hicks, Jr., who is now branch manager at the Omaha office. Hicks was formerly with General Film as branch manager at Kansas City and left to take charge of a Paramount exchange.

Billie Allen, the Montreal manager of the Kleine-Edison office, left Montreal last week for a short trip to the Maritime Provinces.

"The Bar Sinister," the first Hoffman-Foursquare production in Canada, was screened to a full house at the Strand theatre, Toronto, recently. Hoffman-Foursquare productions are being handled in Canada by the Metro Film Service, Ltd.

The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions is gradually getting its forces together in Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati. Every week additions have been made. The latest announcement is that J. J. Laughlin has been appointed special representative for the Cleveland office for northern Ohio. He will expend his energies on "To-day" and "The Mad Lover." The Cleveland office is in charge of Thornton M. Eckert, who made such a good showing with "The Deemster" and "The Crisis" that he has been given full charge of the First National Exhibitors' first release, "On Trial," for the entire State of Ohio.

Manager E. A. Eschmann, of the World Film branch in Cleveland, last week received a print of the latest war preparation film, "Over Here."

Milton Feld, Jewel manager at Kansas City, has moved Jewel headquarters to the Boley Building, Twelfth and Walnut streets, Kansas City, because, it is said, of the increased Jewel business on "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea," "Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent" and "The Price of a Good Time."

F. J. Flaherty, special representative of Jewel Productions, Inc., in Pittsburgh, has returned to that city after a successful two weeks' road trip in the interests of Jewel Productions. E. H. Goldstein, New York manager of the exchanges, expresses himself well pleased with the outcome.

Allan Christie, who has been managing the office of the Independent Film Company in St. John, N. B., is to be transferred to the company's Montreal office, it is announced. His successor in St. John will be S. Starfield, of Montreal.

The Specialty Film Import Co., of St. John, Canadian distributor of Pathe films, reports many inquiries for the new serial, "The Hidden Hand," which is expected to be released in that territory about the last of December.

Mutual New York Exchange Moves to Broadway

The Mutual Film Exchange in New York has moved from 71 West Twenty-third street to quarters in the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, with executive offices on the fifth floor temporarily, and film and poster departments on the tenth floor. It is expected that all offices will be on the tenth floor shortly, making Mutual one of the most complete exchanges in New York.

Universal's Montreal Manager Takes the Leap

Ed. S. Gronau, Montreal manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., was married recently to Miss Jeanne Lionais, amid scenes of festivity that gave the couple a decidedly good send-off on the mysterious sea of matrimony.

On the eve of his marriage, Mr. Gronau was tendered a banquet by his friends and associates in the motion picture industry, at which every exchangeman and prominent exhibitor in Montreal was present. George Nicholas, manager of the Strand, was toastmaster. Among the speakers were H. W. Conover, of the Imperial; Mr. Bary, of the Windsor; Mr. Clancy, of General Film, and T. O. Beyerle, of State Right Features. Jim Malone, Johnny Smythe, of Griffin Pictures and Jim O'Loghlin, of Metro, furnished the humorous stories, while Mr. Eckstein demonstrated his skill on the piano. Messrs. Flannigan and Johnson sang.

Changes Take Place in Toronto Film Exchanges

A number of changes have taken place in the film exchanges of Toronto recently. C. A. Garner, formerly of Mutual, has become affiliated with the Kleine office there, and Frank Mulhall and J. Nelson, former road men for Mutual, are also employed in a similar capacity with the Kleine office.

James Travis, formerly manager of the Toronto Pathe office, and later with Bluebird, has been placed in charge of the Mutual office as manager.

The Toronto Pathe office has also changed managers, James Davidson having resigned and John Collaton being placed in charge. The latter was on the road for the old Standard Film Service, but for the past year has been on the road for Pathe, and still later with Metro.

Dan Freeman, formerly working out of the Vancouver office of the Regal Film Company, has gone East and is now on the road for the Toronto office of the Regal.

Pathe Club Officers Elected at Annual Meeting

The annual election of officers of the Pathe Club was held recently, and J. A. Berst was re-elected president, Paul Brunet, vice president, and J. W. Kyle, secretary. J. Egan was chosen treasurer. M. Ramirez Torres, P. A. Parsons, L. E. Branconi and M. W. Davidson were re-elected to the board of governors. A. Gini

The treasurer's report showed the finances of the club to be in good shape, with a surplus in the bank.

It is planned, according to announcement last week, to secure a club house within the near future, and a committee has been appointed by President Berst to look up desirable quarters.

NEWSY REPORTS FROM ALL SECTIONS

Regal and Triangle Merge in Maritime Provinces

The merger of the Regal and Triangle Film services in Canada has taken effect in the Maritime Provinces. In St. John, Manager Sourkes of the Regal will continue in that capacity, while the interests of the Triangle will be looked after by Don Macrae, formerly of Halifax. A. K. Mundee, recently appointed manager for the Triangle Service, will, it is understood, take up another connection. The Triangle has already signed up a number of good accounts in the Maritime Provinces and business is reported to be good.

Canadian Exhibitors Dislike Deposit System

A meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces, held in Halifax, decided against the proposal of the Famous Players Film Service that exhibitors should make a cash deposit or else give a bond before they could be supplied with that company's productions. Letters were read from Manager Golding of the Imperial, St. John; F. G. Spencer, of the Spencer chain of theatres, and J. J. Gaudet of Summerside.

Boston Theatre Converted into Picture House

The Castle Square theatre, Boston's home of stock productions, repertoire and grand opera, has been converted into a motion picture house, reopening last week after being thoroughly overhauled and redecorated. The opening show drew a packed house.

The initial bill included "The Manxman," Hearst-Pathe News Reel, a General Film comedy and an American War News Weekly.

Some Cleveland Houses Lower Admission Prices

In spite of the many excellent reasons for raising the admission prices to motion picture theatres, it was reported last week from Cleveland that several of the downtown houses in that city are either reducing their prices or are advertising that they are not advancing admissions for what is known as the super-picture.

The Mall and the Alhambra announce that in the future they will ask 15 cents, except on Sundays, when the price will be 25 The Standard, beginning last week, charges 15 cents straight, Sunday excepted, and the Strand, another downtown theatre, is laying particular stress on its 10-cent seats, whereas the house formerly catered to the 15-cent trade.

The Stillman took the first step toward a general reduction in prices several months ago, when Marcus Loew announced a 10-cent scale.

VERMONT—Bennington: J. B. Hart has taken over the Opera House here and will operate it as a motion picture theatre.

Sunday Shows Threatened in Cleveland District

The Sunday motion picture show in the Cleveland district is being threatened, according to developments last week. Judge Leighley sustained the action of the Probate Court of Medina County in fining William Standen, an exhibitor, for keeping his show open on Sunday. The decision is liable to affect all motion picture theatres in Cuyahoga County, in which Cleveland is located.

Baltimore Exhibitor Favors National Army Men

The drafted boys from the Sixteenth Ward of Baltimore, now at Camp Meade, will be looked after by the residents in the section from which they were drawn. With a view of giving the fund for this purpose an impetus, Eugene B. McCurdy, manager of the Lafayette theatre, donated the use of the theatre and the performance for a special benefit last Sunday.

The pictures, as well as the special music for the benefit, were donated by the management of the house. The proceeds of the entertainment will go directly to purchasing necessities and comforts for the boys.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Artcraft Press Agent Suffers Breakdown in Chicago

Pete Schmidt, of the Artcraft pubilcity department, came into Chicago last week after his strenuous trip through the country with Douglas Fairbanks. He was met at the station by W. K. Hill, of the Chicago Paramount office, and taken to the Congress Hotel in a wheel chair to recuperate for a few days before attempting to go to New York.

Pete had tried to keep pace with the speedy Douglas on the latter's bond selling trip through the country, a trip which, by the way, netted the tidy little sum of $1,000,000. After signing up folks for half a million dollars' worth of bonds in New York and $50,000 worth in Chicago, Doug and Pete boarded the train for the West.

Rothacker Appointed to American Cinema Commission

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has been appointed a member of the advisory board of the American Cinema Commission, which will have charge of the circulation of motion pictures in Russia, France and Italy. The pictures will cover the industrial life of America and are intended for the soldiers at the front, and also for the general instruction of the public in the three countries mentioned.

The personnel of the board besides Mr. Rothacker comprises the following: Wm. M. Sherrill, Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, R. A. Rowland, J. A. Berst, S. L. Rothapfel, Carl Laemmle and Harold Edel.

Wholesome Finishes First of Its Comedy Films

The Wholesome Film Corporation has finished the first of its comedy releases. The release stars Rex Adams, a new comedian, in a knock-about farce entitled "His Awful Downfall." It is in one reel, and is booked only in conjunction with "The Penny Philanthropist," "Cinderella" and other Wholesome releases. Since finishing this picture, Mr. Weisfeldt, the manager of Wholesome Films, has gathered a company together to begin work on the next feature release, to be entitled "Little Red Riding Hood." According to the plans and hopes of Mr. Weisfeldt this picture will surpass the recent "Cinderella" production.

"The Penny Philanthropist," recently released, was put on the screen at the Hyde Park theatre, on the south side of Chicago, on Tuesday night, Nov. 6.

Jos. D. Roderick, formely connected with the Universal Exchange in Chicago, has gone to the Wholesome Film Corporation as assistant general manager. Mr. Roderick has had a wide experience in the film industry, and numbers his acquaintances up in the four figure mark.

Leaks in the Loop

B. W. Beadell, assistant manager of the new Chicago offices of Select Pictures Corporation, announces that Constance Talmadge in "Scandal" is proving a winner. Sigmund Faller, proprietor of the Bijou Dream, ran it last week.

The booking club of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association started work last week at its new offices on the seventh floor of the Mallers Building. Louis Frank declared that they are cooperating with both exhibitors and film concerns and making it easy for both.

At the last meeting of the Exhibitors' League some forty theatre owners signed up for the one-reel film "Who Leads the National Army?" which is being distributed by Triangle for the Training Camps Association.

George Lewis Roberts, now of the United States Aviation Corps and formerly connected with the office staff of the American Film Co., dropped in at the American plant Saturday, November 3, in his new uniform.

W. K. Hill of the Paramount office furnished the film and Sales Manager Gunderlock of the De Vry Portable Projection Machine Co. furnished the machine for a showing last week at the Old Ladies' Home. "Never in my life did I see anything so appreciated," said Mr. Hill.

Si Greiver, of Greiver & Herz, announces that Lillian Walker in "Lust of the Ages" opens this week throughout the Lubliner and Trinz houses.

Alfred Hamburger, director general of the Continental Theatres Corporation, will show Mary Pickford in her latest play, "The Little Princess," at the Ziegfeld theatre this week.

E. J. Arnold, manager of the poster department for Mutual Film Corporation, is a firm believer in service and efficiency. He has placed his department on a systematic basis and is cooperating with the exhibitors in every way possible.

Mary Anderson, formerly of Vitagraph, stopped off in Chicago, Tuesday, November 6, while en route to her home in New York. Miss Anderson has been with Vitagraph for more than five years and did not give her reasons for leaving.

The Imperial theatre, 1,210 East Sixty-third street, which has been featuring vaudeville, has changed into a picture house. It opened up to the new order Wednesday, November 7, with Jack Mulhall in "The Hero of the Hour."

Bryant Washburn is certainly having some trouble establishing his claims to exemption from military service. Life for him is just one appearance after another before the appeal boards and exemption officials. The appeal board in district No. 2, however, last week finally affirmed the finding of the trial board before which Washburn claimed exemption because of having dependents.

C. W. Phillips, for three years representative of World Film Corporation on their sales force, has left them to handle the Paramount and Artcraft brand of celluloid.

Irving Mack, the live-wire publicity flinger for Universal, has pushed his wedding date up a couple of months. He figures now on "stepping off" about the first of December.

C. W. Bunn, dynamic manager of the local Pathe office, declared that the past week was the biggest in the history of the Chicago exchange. He said that despite the high current of feeling among exhibitors over the reel tax that business had never been better and that the cancellations had been surprisingly few and unimportant.

Otto Golz, Milwaukee branch manager for Mutual and brother-in-law of President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation, is reported as very sick. He has been taken to a hospital to be operated on for gall stones.

Hiram Abrahms and B. P. Schulberg, president and general manager respectively of Paramount, arrived in town Saturday, November 3, on their cross country trip from Los Angeles to New York. They are making a tour of all the towns of 20,000 population and upward, visiting the theatre owners and getting in touch with exhibitors.

John Emmerson and Anita Loos, associated with Douglas Fairbanks in the respective capacities of director and scenario writer, paid Chicago a visit for a couple of days last week.

Unity Photoplays Co., distributors of George Loane Tucker's "I Believe," has prepared a very effective circular on this feature, with numerous clippings from newspapers in which the play has been heartily endorsed and with many favorable quotations from Chicago clergymen.

Percy Plummer, of Amusement Supplies, reports that business is sort of crowding him. One of his latest jobs he admits has been that of furnishing the Simplex machines, spotlight and dissolver for the big, new Broadway Strand, near completion, on the corner of Twelfth street and Paulina.

The efficiency of Paramount's "set 'em right" man, known to the trade as W. K. Hill, is shown in reports he recently got from an exhibitor who was having a hard time getting people into his house on Monday and Tuesday nights. Hill wrote some letters to the exhibitor's patrons from the Paramount office, with the result that Monday and Tuesday are now on a par with Friday and Saturday for this theatre owner.

Ben Edelman and G. L. Levine, on the road for the Laemmle Film Service, have been called into town for a couple of weeks to try their hands or rather their arguments on the sophisticated exhibitors of the big metropolis.

H. J. Smith, former Mutual branch manager at Fargo, North Dakota, is now under Terry Ramsaye's tutelary wing in the Mutual publicity department.

A. E. Curtis, who, until a few days ago, was managing editor of Motography, has resigned his position with that publication to enter the educational film field on his own hook. Since entering the moving picture field he has been interested in the possibilities of films for educational purposes.

Superintendent Ziebarth, of the American Film laboratories, is spending much of his time studying the possibilities of a new process of film making brought to the laboratories last week by a Nashville (Tenn.) firm. The film is four inches wide, containing pictures in rows of five each, and destined to give an entire view of any scene.

Manager Bayley, of the local Vitagraph Exchange, announces extraordinary bookings for the serial "The Fighting Trail." Every village, hamlet and town in Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana is running the serial, and, according to reports, exhibitors consider it one of their best drawing cards.

C. R. Seelye, business manager of Pathe, stopped off in Chicago for a few hours last week on his way from Los Angeles to New York. Mr. Seelye has been spending his time of late on the West coast directing and overseeing the work on the new studios Pathe recently took over. He was preceded by a day on his return by A. Carlos, former studio manager for Pathe, who was also on his way to New York.

Abe Teitel, of Chicago, recently completed his biggest job, cleaning the many reels of an "Intolerance" print.

Aaron Jones Optimistic Over the Coming Year

Aaron Jones, president and director of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, one of the foremost theatre operatig companies in Chicago and throughout the Middle West, has given forth his prediction as to what is in store for the motion picture business during the approaching new year. Together with a most optimistic prediction for the business during 1918, he states officially for the first time that Jones, Linick & Schaefer plan to build the most magnificent motion picture theatre in Chicago in the near future. "We have the location selected and leased," he said, "but the present war conditions make the investment too great and hazardous to begin at this time. I will say, though, that we plan to take active steps to build such a theatre when the time warrants."

Doll-Van Corporation Makes Big Strides Forward

The Doll-Van Film Corporation, of Indianapolis, recently organized, bids fair to become one of the most potential factors in the State rights field during the coming year. Following the opening of its first office in the Merchants Bank Building, at Indianapolis, a Chicago office was opened on the thirteenth floor of the Consumers Building. Henry Dollman, well known business man of Indianapolis, is president of the organization, and D. M. Vanderwalker, Jr., is vice-president. Mr. Dollman is in charge of the Indianapolis office and Mr. Vanderwalker is directing the business from the Chicago end.

"We are in the State rights field to stay," said Mr. Vanderwalker at the Chicago office. "We have taken a franchise in the State Rights Distributors' organization for Indiana and Illinois, and our first quota of pictures shows that we will always have something worth while. 'Big stuff' is to be our slogan. We have a Triangle picture, 'The Cold Deck,' for Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky; Florence Reed in 'To-day,' and Robert Warwick in 'The Mad Lover' for Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin."

Mr. Vanderwalker has been elected to the Board of Review of the State Rights Distributors. He also announces that he has already signed up the first quota of their controlled productions for Ascher Brothers' string of theatres in Chicago. They will be played two days in each house. While the Doll-Van people will buy pictures independently they will also make purchases through the State Rights Exhibitors.

Funkhouser Again Opines That Film Morals Are Punk

In an address before the Irish Fellowship Club last week at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Major Funkhouser delved into the so-called moral standard of the motion picture again, this time declaring that next to the cabaret it is the greatest agency of immorality in the city.

"Will we allow the motion picture to tear down our morality?" he asked, "when it can be made such a potent force for good. America is dollar mad. And this applies to the motion picture industry which does not care for the moral calibre of its films. All they want is a picture that will bring in the money at the box office. They don't care what children are taught nor what happens to their moral fibre."

The major then appealed to the women to help remedy this condition by standing by him and he told of his personal part in the fight for morality.

"First I was accused of being anti-Catholic," he said. "And then when it was found that I had a Catholic son-in-law, the charge was forgotten. Then they said I was anti-Jewish. I stopped three pictures caricaturing the Jews and that talk was stopped. Lately I have been accused of being pro-German, and there has been an appeal to that effect filed in the Federal courts. But I can trace back my American ancestry to the year 1700, and I defy any one to produce evidence of a lack of patriotism on my part."

The first picture of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation featuring Charlotte, the skater, will be given a trade showing this week at the Rialto, New York. H. A. Spanuth, president of the company that made the feature of the ice-skating star, left Chicago with a tinted print under his arm to personally oversee the premiere and to talk with prospective buyers.

After completing the picture, which was photographed and made at the Rothacker studios, the Commonwealth heads were so elated over the result of their labors that they made a present of a good-sized block of stock to each member of the company who had materially aided in making the film a success.

Up to the time of leaving for New York Mr. Spanuth declared they were still undecided as to the name they intended to bestow upon their initial production with Charlotte

"We have had thousands of names submitted in the contest we have conduceted," he said, "but even now I can't tell definitely which one it will be."

In speaking of the plan he intended to pursue in disposing of his production, Mr. Spanuth announced that he would sell outright for the whole United States or else follow the original Commonwealth plan of selling to the state rights buyer, who in turn would act as an agent for all future productions of the company.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Nehls Thinks Censorship Will Fall to Producers

Richard R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, made a stirring address before the members of the Illinois State Women's Press Association recently, in which he pointed out that the trouble with the early history of the motion picture industry was that it was built upon a foundation of suspicion, distrust and greed.

"All that has gradually been eliminated with the passing out of the men who cared merely for the grabbing off of quick profits," he said. "The strength of the film industry today lies in the fact that it is being built upon a solid foundation of business integrity, by men who have brought into it both dignity and well directed effort. I believe that the majority of the producers today are honest in their determined effort to put out better films. The day will soon come when the public censor will be out of a job because each producer will be his own censor and the most severe critic of his own productions."

Peggy Hyland Too Busy to Make Personal Appearances

Since the Mayfair Film Corporation has placed "Persuasive Peggy" on the open market and Peggy Hyland has been seen in action, there have been numerous requests received at the offices of Mayfair Corporation asking that the star make personal appearances at motion picture theatres. Owing to the fact that Miss Hyland will start immediate work on her next picture, titled "Why Not?" she will be compelled to decline these invitations, it is announced. "Just too busy to spare the time from her work," said Mr. Schlesinger.

Mentioning Hilarity; a Glance at Billy Ruge and His Large Company in This Scene from "On the Love Line," a Sparkle Comedy, Would Indicate That Fun-Making is the Best Thing They Do.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

EDWIN F. MURPHY, superintendent of Universal's laboratory at Fort Lee, N. J., has been having a lively time in his campaign for the office of Mayor of that town. When the soldier vote is all counted, Mr. Murphy will know whether or not he must congratulate his opposition. Murphy is a Democrat, and the forces contesting the election have been using his occupation as an argument against his fitness for office. To be in the motion picture business is said, in Fort Lee, to make a man open to all sorts of suspicion.

THERE was a delay of four days recently in finishing "The Painted Madonna," a drama starring Mme. Sonia Markova, which is scheduled for release November 11 as a Fox special feature. The delay was occasioned by the theft of an oil painting—a portrait of Mme. Markova, which a New York artist had completed only a few days before. The portrait was used in several of the scenes. The filming had been completed when it was reported that a short section of the film could not be found in the cutting room. Arrangements were accordingly made for the star and Sidney Mason to retake this portion of the picture. Everyone reported bright and early at the Grantwood studio, but when they looked in the property room for the essential portrait it could not be found.

The story goes that the portrait was never located, but that the missing strip of positive had been found on the fourth day after it disappeared.

CAMOUFLAGE in the form of make-up is said to be one of the chief tricks-in-trade of Elizabeth Risdon, star of George Loane Tucker's "Mother." It is told that Miss Risdon recently invited an actress friend to be present at a private screening of "Mother." Due to a delay in rehearsal, the artist in question was a few minutes late and projection of the feature had started. Throughout the length of the Tucker picture she commented upon the acting of the player in the title role of the picture, and at the conclusion of the performance she turned to Miss Risdon and inquired as to when the picture in which she appeared was to be screened. The young star of "Mother" then gently broke the news to her blissfully ignorant friend. She had been sitting there watching Elizabeth Risdon in the character part of an old woman and did not know it.

GEORGES ARCHAINBAUD, who is directing Montagu Love and Jeanne Eagles in a film feature for the World Film Corporation at the Peerless studio, has reason to feel right at home in this production, the locale of which is laid in France and Belgium, territory which Archainbaud travelled extensively while on theatrical tours as assistant to Emile Chautard while the latter was a stage director in France. He came to the United States when Emile Chautard was signed by the Peerless Producing Company, and was assistant to M. Chautard until a few months ago, when he was promoted to the rank of director. Since then he has directed Montagu Love in two features, Ethel Clayton, Alice Brady and Kitty Gordon.

ESTLEY N. ROTHSCHILD, the youthful screen player, has completed work in a five-reel Edison production called "Three Things," in which his idea of make-up for the role he played is expected to create quite a bit of attention. In order to get the proper "atmosphere" and the realism necessary, Rothschild had all his hair removed for a scene requiring a "fractured skull."

KAJ GYNT, who has the role of Kate in support of Ethel Barrymore in "The Eternal Mother," a Metro production, is well known on the Swedish stage and screen. She is of Viking ancestry and is the possessor of numerous copper heirlooms handed down from the days of the great Norsemen. Miss Gynt made her motion picture debut with the Swedish Film Company and has also played for the Kino Company of Germany and several Scandinavian companies. Most of her work has been in features of four and five reels.

GERALDINE FARRAR and Mary Garden met at the Goldwyn studio in Fort Lee, N. J., a few days ago during the making of Miss Garden's Goldwyn production of "Thais." However, "met" is said to be hardly the proper word, for it was the renewal of old operatic acquaintance. Miss Farrar, who has returned to New York for her season's work at the Metropolitan Opera House after a summer in the Pacific Coast studios, has long known Miss Garden, and it was a sincere desire to renew an old acquaintance and to compare notes on screen work which caused Miss Farrar to determine on paying the Goldwyn star a call.

A two-hundred-and-four-pound pumpkin arrived in New York last week as another tribute to the popularity of Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox kidlet stars. The pumpkin, which won a prize for weight at the recent New Jersey State Fair in Trenton, was used by the Lee children as a Jack-o-Lantern on Hallowe'en night, when they were hosts to a party of friends.

MARIE SHOTWELL was greeted by about half of the population of the Bronx, it appeared, when she appeared in person on the night of October 26 at the Webtser theatre. She was given a rousing reception. "Married in Name Only," one of the late Ivan Film Productions, in which Miss Shotwell starred and which received the highest number of votes in the Bronx as the most popular play, was the attraction. The drawing power of the picture passed all expectations of the manager of the Webster, who said that October 26 and 27 would stand out as the red letter days of the theatre, for Miss Shotwell's appearance on the first day is said to have spread its influence even to the second day.

VIOLA DANA, star of the forthcoming Metro production of the melodrama, "Blue Jeans," jumped from the loft window of an old sawmill at Roslyn, L. I., for one of the many thrilling scenes needed in the picture, which was directed by John H. Collins. As the little Metro star would run the risk of at least breaking an ankle, not to mention more serious injury, Director Collins offered to get a double to jump from the loft. Miss Dana would not hear of a double performing the feat, as she believes in the truth always. So Miss Dana did the jump. Below there was a large heap of sawdust, and she landed in the middle of it and jumped up from the pile laughing. Her shoes were full of sawust, and she declared that it reminded her of jumping into the sand from the boardwalk at the seashore when she was a youngster of six or seven years.

GEORGE C. BOLDT, JR. and Mrs. A. Graham Miles, recently gave Director William Christy Cabanne permission to use their magnificent country estate, one of the show places of New York's millionaire colony in the Thousand Islands.

It is with the various backgrounds of the country home of the proprietor of the famous Waldorf-Astoria hotel that many of the exterior scenes of "Miss Robinson Crusoe" were taken.

The company supporting Miss Wehlen took pictures of the country club lawn, the private golf course and the boathouse. One of the scenes flashed was that of a fancy dress party on the green lawns of the Boldt estate—taken at night. Mr. Miles had lights strung all around the lawn. A special cable was run to work the spot light.

PAUL SCARDON, senior director at the Eastern studios of the Vitagraph Company, after completing twenty feature productions within a period of sixteen months, has established what is said to be probably the record for volume of footage and for successes in big subjects. These features are said to represent one hundred reels, containing a total of 100,000 feet, and, according to records kept by Vitagraph, each of the subjects that Scardon has directed since joining the directing forces of that company has proved a box office winner.

The feature on which Director Scardon is now working is starring Earle Williams, with Grace Darmond as his leading woman.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

WILLIAM H. HART and company, who have a camp at Hessen, in Chatsworth Park county, forty miles north of Los Angeles, staged a genuine train hold-up last week. Hart learned that President Adolf Zukor and Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky were to be on the train passing through Hessen, and made arrangements with the railroad officials to stop the train there for a minute or two. Members of the Zukor-Lasky party on the way to San Francisco to attend the opening of the new California theatre, arranged details on the train so there would be no opportunity of Hart or any of his players being injured. The heads of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were on the rear of the observation car when the thirty cowboys, headed by Hart, all wearing black masks, appeared after a fusillade of shots, and demanded money and valuables. Hart was recognized after securing a portion of Lasky's valuables, and was congratulated by the film men and hundreds of passengers for the realistic manner in which he staged the "stick up."

Enid Bennett Picture Started

Work was commenced at the Thomas H. Ince Studio on the first Enid Bennett Paramount picture last week. This has not been named, and only the preliminary scenes in which Miss Bennett does not appear are now being made. While working in these, Bob McKim fell upon a broken bottle, and seven stitches were required.

The title of the second Dorothy Dalton release for Paramount by Thomas H. Ince will be known as "Love Letters." This picture was originally titled "The Edge of Sin." Miss Dalton and a company of forty are still in the northern California woods country securing exteriors for "Flare-Up Sal."

Victor Schertzinger has begun the making of another Charles Ray picture, but no title has been selected for it.

Metro Begins a Dana Western

Filming of the first western made Metro picture starring Viola Dana, was begun last week under the direction of John Collins. The story is of the early western mining day type, and several historical characters who lived during that period will be portrayed. Two large sets will be built for this picture, one on the Mojave desert and the other at the studio. Western Representative B. A. Rolfe, Director John Collins and Cameraman John Arnold made a trip to the Mojave desert to select a location for the setting to be built there. Clifford Bruce will be the leading man opposite Miss Dana, and others in the cast are Mabel Van Buren and Hayward Mack, well known for their work in Paramount and Ince-Triangle productions.

Western Representative B. A. Rolfe last week engaged Eva May Roth to take complete charge of the wardrobe department of the West Coast studios of the Metro Company. Miss Roth has had considerable experience along this line, having formerly been connected with the Lasky and Keystone Studios for a number of years.

Edith Storey, the Metro star, who is working at the Western studios in "The Legion of Death," has volunteered her services as an active member of the committee which is arranging a benefit for the purpose of sending Christmas boxes to our boys in France. The benefit will be held at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, November 26, and Miss Storey will be seen in a sketch which she will stage for this event.

Helen Holmes Near Death

The Helen Holmes Signal Company, under the direction of J. P. McGowan, last week completed the twelfth chapter of the "Lost Express" serial which is titled "Daring Death." The story for this installment called for scenes of a burning Pullman car, and in order to get the required atmosphere, Director McGowan had one end of the coach "Signal" saturated with distillate. It was during the making of these scenes that Miss Holmes narrowly escaped death. An instant after the signal was given to start the fire, the flames became uncontrollable. Miss Holmes started from the burning end of the Pullman car but found her way blocked by the camera which Cameraman Wayman had been using, the tripod having become jammed between the berths. Miss Holmes finally escaped by crawling on her hands and knees under the tripod of the camera. This Pullman car, which has been used for many scenes in Helen Holmes serials, is now a total wreck.

After two weeks spent at a local hospital, Leo D. Maloney, well known heavy and leading man with the Helen Holmes Signal Company, has returned to the studio ready for work. S. A. Sues, superintendent of the Signal laboratories, is still confined at his home suffering with a severe cold and general break-down. During his absence Elmer Wayman, assistant superintendent of the Signal laboratories, who is also an expert cameraman, is serving as chief cameraman for Director J. P. McGowan.

Helen Holmes was the guest of honor at a banquet and ball given by the exhibitors and operators of San Bernardino, Cal., on Saturday, November 3. Miss Holmes autographed 100 of her photos, which were sold by the ball committee and the proceeds turned over to the local Chapter of the Red Cross.

Triangle Starts New Plays

Two new plays were begun at the Triangle studios last week. Director Raymond Wells has put in the making "Man Above the Law," which will have an early-day Western atmosphere, and many of the scenes laid in the Navajo Indian painted desert country. Director Wells has a big cast that includes Jack Richardson, Josie Sedgwick, Claire McDowell, Olga Grey and Dark Cloud. Roy Stewart is next to be starred in "The Law's Outlaw." Director Cliff Smith is to be in charge of making this, and Fritzi Ridgeway will play the feminine lead, and George Hernandez the important character part.

Since completing "The Ship of Doom," Wyndham Gittins has been working with the scenario and production department on matters pertaining to his next photoplay, which as yet is untitled. It will deal with the capture of river pirates and a gang of counterfeiters, and the company will go to San Francisco for many of the exterior scenes.

"Betty Takes a Hand," the coming Olive Thomas subject which has Charles Gunn in an important role, is nearing completion under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Venice has been built at the Triangle Culver City studio for a number of scenes for "The Passion Flower," which Walter Edwards is making, with Alma Ruebens and Wheeler Oakman as principals.

Lynn Reynolds and a company are working on "The Gown of Destiny," for which he has worked out a great number of new photographic effects that will add materially to this subject. Reynolds has completed a number of very exceptional photoplays since his affiliation with the Triangle, and continues to uphold the Reynolds quality which he established while affiliated with other organizations.

ATTENTION - MR. W. A. JOHNSTON

Dear Mr. Johnston:-

I note that you are about to issue a 1918 edition of your studio directory. As I have found your previous issues of great value in this department, in the way of furnishing tabloid information about various players, I would request that as soon as issued you send me a copy of the directory.

Frequently we sign up new players and in order to get information concerning them speedily, I have made considerable use of the directory. It certainly is a valuable help to the publicity and advertising man.

Yours very truly,

The scenario department of the Triangle has been increased by two additions this week. Hayden Talbot, playwright, has been added, and is now working on his first photoplay. Hazel MacDonald, formerly of the Photoplay Magazine staff, is a new reader for the Triangle scenario department.

Norbert Myles, heavy, and Eugene Corey, juvenile, are new members of the Triangle stock.

Mrs. William Desmond, wife of the Triangle actor, died early this week at their home in Hollywood. She was a sister of Nance O'Neil, and had been an invalid for several years, as the result of a fall while with her husband in Australia when he made his stage debut there.

Keystone Loses Three Members

The Triangle Keystone organization lost three members last week when Ray Griffith, featured comedian; Roy del Ruth of the writing staff, and Duke Reynolds, assistant director, went to American Lake, Washington, as members of the Liberty Army.

Reggie Morris, who has had Ray Griffith as featured comedian, has started a new picture, and Harry Gribbon, late of the Sennett organization, has been engaged. He will make his first reappearance in Keystone comedies in the role of a dancing master. Claire Anderson, Franklin Bond, Dora Rogers, Mario Biancho, Lallah Hart and Aileen Allen appear in the cast.

Harry Williams, who has been directing Keystone, has tendered his resignation. His most recent subject, which has just been filmed, had Max Asher, Alatia Marton, Mal St. Clair and Eddie Gribbon.

This story was centered about a big ball, and required an unusually attractive setting.

Herman Raymaker is at work on a picture with Blanche Payson in the role of a boarding house keeper. Dale Fuller takes the part of her assistant, and others appearing are Lloyd Bacon, Milton Sims, Maude Wayne and Billy Franey.

Lasky Leaves for the East

Jesse L. Lasky, who has been at the producing plant since early in September, departed Thursday of last week for the East by way of San Francisco. Mr. Lasky has been serving as director-general during the absence of C. B. deMille, who has spent a six weeks' vacation in the East, and is expected back at the studio about Nov. 20.

President Adolf Zukor arrived in Los Angeles the early part of last week, and will remain in active charge at the studio until the arrival of Mr. deMille. Mr. Zukor states he has come to California for a vacation, and the business of his trip here is to have a rest. He was accompanied by his son, Eugene, who is making a study of the film business.

The need of increasing the size of the laboratory building at the Lasky studio has been found necessary, and work on this is now being done. The addition will contain a projecting room, the third of the studio, and drying and printing rooms. To supply the necessary prints of Paramount and Artcraft productions made at the Lasky plant, the laboratory for the past year has been using two shifts, and turning out approximately 600,000 feet weekly. When the addition is completed the output can be increased to a million feet weekly.

William D. Taylor has commenced the production of a subject co-starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, at the Morosco studio.

Julian Eltinge, having completed his engagement at the Lasky plant in the making of three subjects, has departed for the East, where he will complete negotiations for future affiliations. When Mr. Eltinge came to California, it was with the intention of appearing in two pictures, but he was induced to remain for a third. Mr. Eltinge is now building a residence in Hollywood, and will remain here permanently.

William Russell Cast Selected

Complete cast for the next William Russell American-Mutual subject has been announced by Studio Manager J. R. Crone to include, in addition to Francelia Billington, who plays the feminine lead opposite Russell, Harvey Clark, Bull Montana, Carl Stockdale, Lucille Ward and Fred Smith. "In Bad" is adapted from a story by Raymond L. Shrock, scenarioized by Chester B. Clapp, and deals with the adventures of a young man who scorns society for a busy life. His adventures take him to Yucatan where many of the scenes filmed will represent the Aztec ruins. Miss Billington takes the role of a society girl whose snubs to Russell causes many complications. Bull Montana appears as a prize fighter, Harvey Clark as the father of the society girl, and Carl Stockdale the heavy. Edward Sloman continues as director of the Russell features.

"The Veil of Memory" is the title selected for the next Mary Miles Minter American subject, and work has already been started on this by Director Henry King. The scenario is being prepared by Daniel F. Whitcomb and Chester B. Clapp. The cast for the subject has not been selected.

Two Fox Films Under Way

Filming of two subjects will be commenced early this week when Bertram Bracken, directing Gladys Brockwell, and Frank Lloyd, who has a company headed by Jewel Carmen, will commence production. The supporting cast has not been selected for the Carmen picture, but it is definitely decided that Willard Louis, Charles Clary and Colin Chase will be the principal males of Bracken's picture.

The Franklin brothers, C. M. and S. A., have completed the children's picture, "The Mikado," and are now both giving their attention to the making of scenes for "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." At the studio "The Mikado" is spoken of as the most beautiful child picture completed by the Franklin brothers.

Arrangements are rapidly being made for the beginning of work on the first Tom Mix Western Fox picture, in which Marin Sais will play the opposite lead.

Richard Stanton and his assistant, Cliff Elfelt, together with Ed. Sedgwick, scenario writer of the Fox organization, have gone East and will make one or more subjects at the Fox studios.

Henry Lehrman, managing director of the Sunshine Comedy Studio at the Fox plant, is spending a week in San Francisco filming scenes for a coming picture. He was accompanied by Billie Ritchie and other players of the staff.

An early Sunshine comedy release will introduce Winifred Westover as leading woman, and at the same time a specially designed wardrobe of particular charm.

Theda Bara Goes Back to the Modern Role in "The Rose of Blood," Written Specially for Her by Richard Ordynski, and Offered by William Fox as a Standard Picture

Universal Starts New Ones

Several new productions were commenced at Universal City last week. One is directed by Stuart Paton, and is an adaptation from the Charles Edmond Walk novel, "The Green Seal." The screen version is being prepared by A. G. Kenyon. This subject will offer Carmel Myers as star.

Gretchen Lederer, One of the Most Prominent Members of the Bluebird Stock Company

Joseph de Grasse has begun the filming of "The Catamount," with Franklyn Farnum as the featured player. The story is by R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark, and the continuity was written by Charles Keynon. Edith Johnson will continue to play opposite Farnum. Others selected for this photoplay are Fred Montague, Charles Mailes and Morris Foster.

Louise Lovely, it became known this week upon the return of the E. J. LeSaint company from Bear Valley, was injured there early last week when a horse she was riding in scenes for "The Wolves of the North," stumbled and fell, throwing her. The supports of Miss Lovely in this picture are Betty Schade, Hart Hoxie and Alfred Allen.

Forty people were used in scenes made under the direction of Ida May Park at Long Beach this week for "Broadway Love," story of New York theatrical life adapted from the magazine story by W. Carey Wonderly. Dorothy Phillips is starred in this picture with William Stowell as leading man, and Lon Chaney in an important part. Miss Park has a very large cast of well-known players for this photoplay.

Two Reel Keystones Completed

The production department of the Triangle-Keystone has completed six two-reel subjects which are now on their way east for printing.

Director H. Raymaker and company which includes George Binns, Dale Fuller, Lloyd Bacon, Maude Wayne, Andy Anderson and Tim Donnelly, have filmed "A Grave Undertaking," a suicide's and undertaker's story involving the collection of insurance.

Three stories have been finished by Harry Williams and organization which is composed of Dora Rogers, Eddie Gribbon, Mae St. Clair, Rose Carter, Blanche Payson, Alice Davenport and Max Asher. These have been titled "An Ice Man's Bride," "His Nimble Twist" and "A Coward's Courage."

"A Sanitary Scandal" is the name given to a picture in which Paddy Maguire, Fritz Schade, Joseph "Baldy" Belmont, Peggy Pearce and Claire Anderson take part, under the direction of William Beaudine. This company also made "Won by a Fowl" which will be released during Thanksgiving week.

Real Artillery in American

When Santa Barbara citizens entertained twelve hundred members of the California Artillery Corp at breakfast while they were being transferred from one camp to another, Director Lloyd Ingraham and company headed by Margarita Fischer, made more than fifty scenes for "A Daughter of Joan." The making of these completed the subject, and Miss Fischer and company are now beginning work in "Molly Go Get 'Em," from scenario written especially for her by Beatrice Van. Jack Mower has been retained as leading man opposite Miss Fischer for this subject.

The artillery corps taking part in "The Daughter of Joan" has been named "The Grizzlies," and is the first organization since the cantonments were organized to take part in a West coast made film.

Henry King, director, and the Mary Miles Minter Company of Santa Barbara

Gail Kane, Who Has Never Been Known to "Misfit" a Role, Is a Stunning Horsewoman in This Scene from "A Game of Wits," a Mutual-American Production spent a portion of this week in Los Angeles, securing the final scenes for "The Mate of the Sally Ann." A new story is now being prepared for a Minter production by Charles Dazey, who is author of "In Old Kentucky"; the William Russell story, "The Sea Master" and "Her Country's Call" and "Peggy Leads the Way," both Mary Miles Minter pictures.

The William Russell Company which is directed by Edward Sloman, has now started work on the filming of "In Bad." Besides Francelia Billington, who plays the role opposite Mr. Russell, Harry Clark, Lucille Warde and Bull Montana are taking leading parts.

Every member of the American Film Company's staff, according to statement by Ralph W. Hiett, special representative of the United States Government, has purchased Liberty Bonds during the second loan campaign. Furthermore, practically every one took a very active part in the sale of the bonds. On Liberty Day, Mary Miles Minter led the parade at Santa Barbara, and sold $18,000 worth of bonds in addition to the $20,000 worth which she purchased. Little six months old Leslee Sloman, daughter of Director Edward Sloman, purchased $6,000 worth. All banners, flags and decorations for automobiles taking part in the Liberty Loan Day parade were furnished by Manager J. R. Crone of the American Studios.

Parsons Starts Zoo for "Tarzan"

Manager William Parsons of the National Film Corporation of America, has purchased from the city park commissioner, two large speimens of African wild animals, a lion and leopard, which will be killed for scenes in the picturization of "Tarzan of the Apes." Some sensational work which endangers the life of the leading player, Elmo Lincoln, who takes the role of Tarzan in the principal section of the story, will be filmed by the use of the animals, it falling to Lincoln to leap upon the back of the lion and kill it by choking it to death, or breaking its neck. Lincoln will be remembered as the Mighty Man of Valor of Griffith's "Intolerance," and is the giant of the West coast film colony.

When it became known the city had sold the animals to Parsons, a number of the members of the local humane society, sought by court injunction to prevent the staging of the scenes, but decision was given Parsons, and the pictures will be made in Griffith Park. All scenes for the National photoplay will be completed within the next ten days, and the officers of the company anticipate the subject will be ready for the market about December 1.

Mabel Normand, the Beloved Comedienne, in One of Her More Pensive Moments in Goldwyn's "Joan of Plattsburg"

The Romayne Super Film Compan which recently leased the Yorke-Metr Studios, have completed their first pictur "The Crimson God," of two reels whic makes a patriotic appeal for aid to th Liberty Loan. The subject has been show to the trade at two private exhibitions, an is now being arranged for its releas throughout the country through the Re Cross Association. Henry P. Romayne i president of the company and George I Hutchins is director general.

"Public Defender" Endorsed by Current Periodicals

Harry Raver's "The Public Defender," propaganda play written by Mayer C Goldman and produced by Mr. Raver, i the subject of praise in the columns o some of the leading publications. The Roycroft Magazine, successor to "The Fra," the late Elbert Hubbard's periodical, endorses "The Public Defender" in its editorial columns. The writer says "Goldman, the author of 'The Public Defender,' is very mild, in that he simply suggests that a public defender as well as a public prosecutor be engaged. One to protect the innocents while the other runs down the crooks. That suggestion is all right, but it falls fifty per cent short. Only one man is necessary; that one a public defender."

Krellberg Closes Territory for "Russian Revolution"

Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, reports big sales in the West for his latest production, "The Russian Revolution." Last week a trade showing was held at the Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, and Western buyers expressed satisfaction with the production. Arrangements have been made for the feature to have its Boston premiere at the Tremont Temple for a run of two weeks. The road companies, it is announced, are now touring the New England States. Mr. Krellberg reports that it is one of the biggest successes he has ever handled.

AT first glance one is at a loss to know whether the New York Star is featuring Bill Beecroft or Bill Beecroft is featuring the New York Star.

OUR freely given advice to manufacturers is to lay off the production of pictures dealing with the Russian question until all the revolutions are catalogued and numbered.

THERE is no truth in the report that Roy Somerville is attending the current Purity League Convention in Louisville, Ky.

"IN one episode of this serial ('The Seven Pearls')," says Mollie King via the press agent, "two of the pearls I am looking for are hidden in the eyes of an image. In my effort to secure them the arms of the image close in on me and hold me in their grasp."

This and the rest of the story makes interesting reading, but why didn't the p. a. get the facts straight? It is not Mollie King that has this adventure but Leon Bary.

WHEN the Famous Players company uncovered a blackmailing, wife-deserting fortune hunter in "The Antics of Ann," it is gratifying to note that they saw fit to entitle him Gordon Trent, who by his writings in the Telegraph has long proved himself just this sort of a fellow or worse. Now if some producer will only use the name George T. Pardy as typifying a gangster, trafficker in forbidden things and fugitive from justice, he will have our hearty endorsement of the choice.

THE Cinema Camera Club held its fifth annual ball at the Hotel Plaza on Saturday evening, November 10. A more detailed report concerning the merrymaking of the crankers will appear in next week's issue.

SINCE last week's issue and at this particular moment of going to press Jerry Wilson has twice rejoined Universal in some capacity or another and has resigned an equal number of times. Doubtless when this is published he will have been in again and out again a little more. Personally we have given up all hope of attempting to keep tab on Jumping Jerry. When interviewed on this question his enlightening reply was: "I am working on a number of scenarios which it is only natural to assume the best producers will produce."

WISH all of our readers could glimpse the front page of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser of Honolulu, dated October 23, showing H. H. GEORGE DU BOIS PROCTOR, just about as well known in the trade as the Godfrey Building, and a durn sight older, by heck, suddenly loomed up on Broadway last week after an extended period of exile on the other coast. George's right mitt is working overtime as a result.

"PRETTY Girls and Wild Animals Furnish Humorous Situations"—Headline in Exhibitors Herald. If anything, rather tragic, we should think.

"HERE'S a day from the life of Louise Huff," remarks a particularly frenzied press agent. "She had seventeen different gowns fitted at seventeen different dressmakers, made seventeen scenes for the Paramount picture "Bunker Dean" and during her spare moments acted as hostess at a dance given for the sailors stationed at San Pedro. Outside of this she had nothing to do. Who says the life of a motion picture star is an easy one?"

Only trouble with this is that it should have been sent out when "Seventeen" was in course of production.

IF anyone finds it hard to believe the following story, Mr. Rothapfel of the Rialto, is willing to make an affidavit that it is true. He has just received the self-explanatory letter printed below and in his opinion the search for an honest man, begun by Diogenes some centuries ago, will come to an end the moment the writer is located. Here is the letter:

"To the Managers, or whomsoever receives this, of The Rialto Theatre:

"On Saturday, October 27, I enjoyed the performance, and on leaving the theatre took a drink of water on the second floor by means of one of the free drinking cups. Being curious, I took another cup from the holder, and wasted it. As I am very conscientious, I am enclosing one cent for same. Please accept it for the above cause.

"PATRON OF THE THEATRE."

MARY GARDEN, it has been observed, has lived so long in Paris that she speaks French with greater fluency than English. Frank H. Crane, her director in Goldwyn's "Thais," sat up nights with a language phonograph to be able to tell her in French, "You are beautiful this morning, mademoiselle," but the only approach to that speech offered by the phonograph was, "I shall want a boiled egg in the morning."

It is with great regret that we print below the last of Pat Dowling's sensational articles entitled "How They Did It in the Good Old Days." These have proven very popular through the trade we understand from no less an authority than Mr. Dowling himself. And besides they have rid us of a lot of trouble—which is more important from our point of view.

"The Pioneer Producing Co., Morris Sheppard, vice-president, treasurer and general manager, staged a number of stupendous battle scenes for its forthcoming thousand foot spectacular feature, 'The Blue and the Gray,' at Asbury Park recently.

"It is said that fifty extra actors, aside from the members of the regular company, were hired to play the parts of soldiers in the Union and Confederate armies. This is probably the largest number of people ever caught by the motion picture camera. These 'extras,' as they are called, alternated in appearing as Northern and Southern soldiers, changing their uniforms in the bushes nearby.

"Mr. Sheppard issued the following announcement after the scenes were completed: 'I consider this an entirely new departure in film production. However, the motion picture business is still in its infancy and doubtless the Pioneer Producing Company will take the initiative along other lines as well. The field embraced by the motion picture camera is unlimited in its scope. Such spectacular effects as we have secured for 'The Blue and the Gray' could never have been obtained on the stage.'"

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Secret of the Storm Country"

(Joseph M. Schenck-Select—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"WHEN yer don't do right, Frederick, everything goes wrong," remarks Tess to Frederick Graves when he proposes a secret marriage. But the ceremony is performed anyway, and sure enough, everything goes wrong until the road is paved for a very happy ending. But that which is wrong does with the case of "The Secret of the Storm Country" turn out to be dramatically powerful as well. The supreme hardships endured by Tess before the sun consents to shine on her world furnish moments of suspense and pathos that serve to make the entire picture one of the most thoroughly entertaining that Norma Talmadge has yet done.

The talent of the star has never been taxed so varyingly as by the role of Tess, heroine in Grace Miller White's novel herein presented on the screen. As the daughter of an old ex-convict, living in a section almost exclusively peopled by his one-time cell mates she is at first the attractive and care-free young girl, later the trusting wife of a moral weakling, then the mother "churched" as a magdelene by the hypocritical landlord because of the cowardly silence of her husband and lastly the contented woman living in the happiest of environments. Miss Talmadge brings out every emotion demanded by the various transitions of her character with the sincerity and appeal that is always synonymous with her work. It is a distinct triumph for her—this latest Select picture.

Miss White's novel lends itself admirably for picture purposes. It sounds the depths of pure pathos particularly in the episodes concerning the escaped Andy accused of murder and the branding of the innocent Tess, while its dramatic moments of both mental and physical variety offer further attractions. For instance the rain storm and the fire and the meeting between Tess and Frederick after his second marriage and the silence in which she bears the contempt of Walderstricker, the hypocritical member of the church. These crises come thick and fast—not too thick and fast—but regularly, and the action bridging the space between them can never be anything less than unusually entertaining.

Niles Welch presents the character of Frederick in all its weakness and a more convincing Walderstricker than J. Herbert Frank's could not be found. Charles Gotthold, Ethel Grey Terry, Edwin D. Denison and James Mack figure to very good advantage in prominent parts. The production is thorough and while some of the scenes appear to be under-exposed they never interfere with the absorbing interest which Miss Talmadge's performance and the excellent character of the story create.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tess (Norma Talmadge) daughter of Orn Skinner (Edwin D. Denison), a squatter on land controlled by Ebenezer Walderstricker (J. Herbert Frank), secretly marries Frederick Graves (Niles Welch), a student. Shortly afterwards Frederick is forced into a marriage with Madelene Walderstricker (Ethel Grey Terry) by his mother (Mrs. J. H. Brundage). For his sake Tess remains silent. When, however, Madelene discovers that Tess is shortly to become a mother she is ordered before the churchmen and practically cast out for refusing to tell the name of the man. Frederick attends the meeting and despite the suffering endured by Tess remains silent. With the death of her father, Tess is taken into the home of Young (Charles Gotthold), a middle-aged man who has always admired her. Here she lives with her child for a number of years. There comes a time when old Mother Moll (Julia Hurley) kidnaps Walderstricker's child (Lorna Volare), the only being he loves, because of her hatred of the landholder. The squatters' village is set ablaze and Tess rescues the little girl. Frederick's cowardly silence has begun to tell upon him and shortly after this he suffers a heart attack and dies and only then does Tess accept Young's long-standing proposal to make her his wife.

Helen Bahl, Albert Hart, W. W. Black and Ann Pallett complete the unusually large cast.

"Easy Money"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"EASY MONEY," by Gladys Johnson, is one of those pictures wherein a girl makes a marriage for convenience in the first reel and learns to love her husband in the fifth. She goes through mental torture after mental torture while accepting the bounty of her chosen mate and refuses even to let him touch her until a second man proves himself a villain and not her friend. Then, presto, she wakes up to the fact that her husband isn't such a rapscallion after all.

This transition in her character has not been well brought out by the scenario writer. After the wife has resisted a drunken attack of her husband she scurries away on an auto ride with the other fellow. He takes her to a roadhouse and then attacks her. Husband enters, completely demolishes villain, and then wife goes to husband's arms. Evident moral: If between two evils, chose your husband.

In fact "Easy Money" never rings altogether true. A plentiful supply of mechanics was employed to create the main situation and subsequent events, though many of them might probably be natural under the curcumstances, seem on close inspection very artificial due to their unnatural source.

Ethel Clayton, effective in an emotional way in the part of the wife, manages to arouse a portion of sympathy, and Frank Mayo is at least an energetic villain, more potent in this line than John Bowers is as the husband-hero. Louise Vale is a tempestuous siren and the support is efficient.

Travers Yale directed. The production is adequate and includes a number of "drunk" scenes that are humorous in their own particular way.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Richard Chanslor (John Bowers) marries Lois (Ethel Clayton), a sculptress, in order to secure his inheritance. Each agrees to live totally apart from the other. So Chanslor continues his drunken escapades with Lily Lorraine (Louise Vale), of the Follies, and Lois goes about her study. When Richard begins to show some slight interest in his wife, she gives him the cold shoulder. One evening he returns to his home under the influence of liquor and attacks Lois. The next day she accepts an invitation from Hildreth (Frank Mayo), an artist, whom she believes is her friend. But he, in a disreputable road house, proves a villain, and Lois is glad to accept the love and protection of Richard after he has rescued her from Hildreth.

Jack Drumier, Eugenie Woodward and Charles Morgan complete the cast.

"The Price of a Good Time"

(Jewel Productions—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LOIS WEBER'S first contribution to the Jewel series of features based upon a story entitled "The Whim," by Marion Orth, advances the sound preachment that in the environment of the home rest the influences that predominate in a young person's future life. To score this point she introduces two girls, one from a happy home and the other from the most contrasting surroundings. Her picture deals largely with the latter girl who after a taste of luxury that lasts a short week is unable to bear the return to her sordid life and suffer the stinging suspicion of her mother and brother and who as a consequence chooses suicide as a way out of her troubles.

The suggestion of a sex muddle carried in the title is never a reality in the picture drama. It resolves itself into a human story, well told and strong, preying heavily upon the sympathies, particularly in its latter reels and entertaining from the very first. There were many unable to suppress sniffles after an afternoon showing at the Broadway theatre last week and when a picture can produce such results on its audience it is deserving of the highest praise for its realism. And as it is absolutely devoid of anything objectionable, anything at all offensive and while it does at the same time carry a moral—a healthy, digestible moral—under a cloak of absorbing entertainment, it may well be termed a fine picture. Blessed with such a wallop in its title it should certainly prove a complete box office success.

A remarkably good cast was assembled to interpret the leading roles, which under the discriminating direction of Miss Weber does, individually and collectively, superlative work. Mildred Harris as Linnie, the girl from the second home, gives a wonderfully appealing characterization. It was not so long ago that Miss Harris was doing kid stuff. Her rise to prominence during the past year has been almost meteoric and certainly her performance in this picture is her crowning achievement, sufficient alone to lift her to the ranks of stardom. Kenneth Harlan as Preston Winfield, the man innocently responsible for Linnie's downfall, gives a clean, well-defined interpretation of the idle society man. Helene Rosson, Ann Schaefer, Alfred Allen, Adele Farrington and Gertrude Aster have all been selected for roles into which they fit with perfect ease.

The production furnished the picture by Miss Weber and Phillips Smalley is the most remarkable in its taste and faithfulness to detail that the writer has seen outside Thomas Ince's pictures. The photography and light effects show the same close attention to detail and are as a result extraordinarily realistic.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Linnie (Mildred Harris) salesgirl at the perfume counter in a large department store operated by Winfield (Alfred Allen) has been reared amidst distressing surroundings. Her father a paralytic, her mother neglectfully indifferent, and her brother absorbed in anarchism, her home is little better than a jail. When Preston Winfield (Kenneth Harlan), son of the store owner is left alone he encounters Linnie one day and noticing the forlorn look in her eyes asks her whether she has ever had a good time. And the girl's negative reply leads him to suggest a week of pleasant evenings in his company. In order to do this, she lies about extra work to her mother. For six nights she enters a world she has never known before and enjoys herself thoroughly. On the seventh she elects to spend in the Winfield home (the family being away) pretending that she owns it. Preston good naturedly lets her have her way. An innocent desire leads her to don a negligee of lace and silk she finds in a closet and so attired she spends an innocent evening with Preston. But when her brother, having discovered her whereabouts, enters, he naturally misinterprets the situation. He and Preston engage in a furious fight until the police interfere. Under suspicion Linnie returns to her home. But her life is unbearable. The attitude which her mother and brother take toward her and her longing for the other life and lastly her love for Preston drive her distraught. One evening she wanders out into the streets and when she catches sight of Preston driving in his car, in desperation throws herself under the wheels. In the hospital she dies.

"The Antics of Ann"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE ANTICS OF ANN" is a light and breezy comedy which opens with the heroine in a boarding school, playing all sorts of tricks on the staid old matron in charge. It belongs to a school of light comedy that producers usually see fit to produce as vehicles for actresses of the type of Ann Pennington, who is starred here. And Miss Pennington it may be remarked does full justice to the confidence placed in her by the producers. She performs the various tricks allowed her with a sincerity, an absence of affectation and a fine sense of comedy. The result is that "The Antics of Ann" is a succession of hearty laughs.

We were going to say one long laugh, but the story prepared by Frederic Chapin is distinctly episodic and prevents any such statement of effect. However, the personality of the star and the truly humorous nature of the various complications in which she finds herself furnish entertainment aplenty and the lack of a sustained story is never felt. Miss Pennington has been given opportunities to dance and to wear fetching costumes and to pose, but despite the fact that she has been obviously featured her every appearance is a real delight.

Harry Ham makes a likable hero and W. T. Carleton as Ann's harassed father and Charlotte Granville as the stately boarding school mistress have important comedy parts. The picture was staged by Edward Dillon, who knows comedy values to a nicety and who has gotten the most from every situation provided by Mr. Chapin's script.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ann Wharton (Ann Pennington), after being expelled from boarding-school because of a number of hoydenish tricks, arrives at a summer seaside resort to join her father (W. T. Carleton), and older sister, Olive (Ormi Hawley). She continues her pranks in this locale; goes in swimming in a one-piece suit, and impersonates a Russian dancer. Later she exercises her wit, and prevents Olive from marrying Gordon Trent (Crauford Kent), a fortune hunter, and then to prevent any scandal circulating about herself she marries Tom Randall (Harry Ham), who has stood ready for such a moment since her school days.

"Courage of the Commonplace"

(Perfection-George Kleine-Edison—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE F. WORTS

A SNAPPY fight at the bottom of a mine dump strikes the top level of interest achieved in Edison's latest Perfection Release, "The Courage of the Commonplace." Before and after the fist battle the tension is somewhat uncertain, fluctuating in one direction and then another as the interest shifts.

"The courage of the commonplace," says a father to his unbrilliant son, "is greater than the courage of the crisis." On the son's failure to qualify as one of Yale's brightest scholars his father gives him this sound advice; on that sentence, Mary Andrews Shipman, the author, builds her plot with screen results not always telling.

The point widest open to criticism is the action of the heroine. Story and screen heroines are supposed to be sacrificial creatures, who willingly follow their lovers across burning desert sands, treacherous rivers, continents, etc. But this heroine does not do so. Apparently disgusted with her lover's lack of brilliance, she waits for him to make good, come to her and tell her about it. When convinced that he no longer is as stupid as originally supposed, she accepts him. The "for better or for worse" clause seems not to enter her calculations. She is pretty certain he is a comer before she capitulates.

After his failure to win top honors at Yale he attends the Boston Technicology School of Mines, emerging at the head of his class. He tries to reform a very degenerate mine, to which he is appointed superintendent, encounters the inevitable labor troubles and rises to the opportunity of a fist fight with the gang leader at the bottom of an isolated sump which is cut off from the surface by an underground fire. The fight is clean, fast and exciting. First the hero is knocked out. When he recovers he turns loose a pair of beautifully trained fists, and beats his assailant all over the place.

Some interesting night and day scenes of a class re-union at Yale wind up the picture.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Johnny McLean (Leslie Austin) graduates from Yale without honors, breaking a family tradition. His sweetheart (Mildred Havens) witnesses his humiliation. Three years later he graduates from Boston Tech at the head of the class, is appointed superintendent of the Oriel mine. Labor troubles come up, the mine is set afire and the gang leader is trapped underground. Johnny puts on a helmet, the imprisoned crew is rescued, shortly previous to which he engages O'Hara in the fight aforementioned. Returning to Yale in time for the re-union he is hailed as the university's hero.

"Up or Down"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

TRIANGLE'S late production, featuring George Hernandez, might be placed in most any class of the drama. There is Western stuff, there is comedy and there is the melo element—all coming in for about an equal share of prominence, with the Western stuff in the driver's seat. It is not certain in which class Lynn F. Reynolds, author and director, meant to have this photoplay placed, but it is certain that he did not mean to have his play left out of the dramatic category entirely. He was pretty sure of having it in one of the various classes—for he has made possible a good bit of every element that goes to make up an hour's entertainment at the theatre.

Comedy is assured with George Hernandez in the principal role. He couldn't be serious if he tried. In this production the droll comedian is unconsciously humorous. Attired as the typical "bad man" of the West he looks the part from head to feet, but from the round, jovial face of the comedian emanates a certain humorous atmosphere that is undeniable and ever present. Even when he sits astride his mount and scans the horizon for the bandits his attitude is the essence of comedy.

Without any preliminary advances Mr. Reynolds has jumped right into the midst of his story and started things moving from the beginning, and from the time "Dallas Mike" finds himself free from the confinement of prison walls to the final fade-out there is action—action every minute. Mike is whirled away to the Western plains and bumps into excitement before he has actually got his bearings, grasps the situation with both hands and starts to create material for his benefactor's "great" novel. Your most conservative patron and the one who drops in—"just to pass an hour"—both will find in this Triangle production something that touches the responsive chord. The children will come in for their share when Elwood Bredell, a youngster, assumes the title of a young "Sherlock Holmes." Very little encouragement can be given the class of patrons who desire the heavy element in the screen drama, unless the three bad men tally up to their idea of the heavy element. Mr. Reynolds has given "Up or Down" a good production. He could have given it a more meaning title. Exterior scenes predominate throughout. Clyde R. Cook did the camera work and registered some good "shots."

Fritzi Ridgeway, in the leading feminine role, smiles as though she meant it, screens well and presents a pretty Esther Hollister. Jack Gilbert in the juvenile lead does his usual good work. Jack Curtis, Graham Pette and Ed Burns handle the character work convincingly.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"Dallas Mike" (George Hernandez) has just completed a long term in the penitentiary. He is debating whether or not he should turn a job when, by accident, he meets Allan Corey (Jack Gilbert), a young author, who has decided to go West for "local color" and an idea for a big story. He enlists the services of Mike, and after selling his household furniture, stakes Mike, and they start out. In the heart of the Western country, the wagon in which they are riding is overturned and demolished, and Mike gets a job as cowpuncher on a ranch in the Rancho Verde country. The proprietress of the ranch, Esther Hollister (Fritzi Ridgeway), takes a liking to Corey, and permits him to work on his novel at the ranch. She suggested that he accompany her to town for the payroll, and, Mike, seeing in this venture a means of supplying Corey with a suggestion for a punch for his story decides to impersonate "Texas" Jack (Jack Curtis), a notorious bandit, and holds up the two when they return with the payroll.. The hold-up is attributed to "Texas" Jack and his gang. A posse is organized, and the country is searched for "Texas" Jack, and Mike leads the searching party. Mike, in the meantime, robs the town bank, and swings a few other notorious deals, all of which are attributed to "Texas" Jack and his crowd.

Corey gets the material for his greatest story and Mike figures that he has done his duty. "Texas" Jack and his gang are caught by Corey, after Mike has "fixed" it up, and he is a hero in the eyes of Esther. Afterward Mike engineers a "jail-breaking." and "Texas" Jack and his gang are liberated. Mike's secret is known only to himself and all ends happily.

"Sylvia of the Secret Service"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"SYLVIA OF THE SECRET SERVICE," another feature presenting Mrs. Vernon Castle in the title role, is a high speed melodrama similar in situations and development to a Pathe serial. Even the precious jewel is present which Sylvia struggles to regain from a band of crooks in order that the man she loves be freed from the clutches of the law. The chase for the jewel starts in Holland, proceeds to England and winds up in the United States, and there are any number of subterfuges employed by both parties to throw their antagonists off the track that serve to keep the suspense well up on the scales, while there is an abundance of hand to hand encounters, in which Mrs. Castle displays almost as much ability as a wrestler and pugilist as she has as a dancer.

Incidentally the fascinating Irene appears arrayed in any number of peculiarly Castle gowns and her posing has been nicely introduced so as not to interfere with the action of the melodrama. Elliot Dexter is a fairly pleasing opposite and Suzanne Willa, by reason of her ability, and J. W. Percival, by reason of his role, contribute some excellent helpings of comedy. The gangsters, with Macey Harlan leading, are generally good as to performances and types, save for the exception of one vaseline-haired youth with a baby face who might have been plucked from an afternoon tea. Still, if one wants a few more laughs——

As a piece of pictorial construction "Sylvia of the Secret Service" is sometimes illogical, but usually so speedy that logic is forgotten. It seems peculiar that none of the gang recognized Sylvia when she set herself up disguised as a Western millionairess, while the business in the cheap cafe preceding the climax is rather befogged. And though the feature will probably please large audiences it appears to the writer that Astra in the production of the majority of its recent pictures has absorbed too much of the serial idea. One high light after another in the story is touched and there is hardly enough detail for intermediary respites to make certain twists stand out with the proper degree of significance.

George Fitzmaurice has endowed the picture with a rich production and the technical detail is quite perfect.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prescott (Elliot Dexter) traveling from Amsterdam to England aboard ship is robbed of a valuable diamond, which he has been commissioned to deliver to the English Crown. Sylvia Carroll (Mrs. Vernon Castle), of the U. S. Secret Service, also aboard realizes the robbery is the work of the Wade Gang, but Hemming (J. W. Percival), of Scotland Yard, believes Prescott guilty, and also accuses him of the murder of his former employer, Van Brunn (J. H. Gilmour), a diamond merchant of Holland, who in reality was killed by a member of the gang. Sylvia returns to the states, and shortly afterward Prescott arrives, having escaped from the British detectives. The rest of the picture is taken up with Sylvia's ultimately successful efforts to regain the diamond, prove to Hemming that he is not the good detective he believes himself and free Prescott, whom she loves, from all suspicion.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Eleventh Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SEVEN PEARLS" is reviving melodramatic tricks of the long ago—stuff that is seldom seen on either screen or stage in the present day. "The Gems of Jeopardy," as the eleventh episode is entitled, introduces Leon Bary in a high silk hat and black mustachios curling villainously. In addition he attempts in the most fiendish manner to force Ilma to give him information concerning the whereabouts of three of the seven pearls. He binds her to the crossbar of a table, hangs a pair of scales (miraculously produced from his vest pocket) on his cane, and placing a burning candle on one side and a bottle of strong acid on the other, gloatingly awaits for his victim to either confess or have her eyes burned out and her "fatal beauty" destroyed forever more.

Kismet, he who persistently has worn a raincoat throughout the serial, arrives just in time to dash the acid aside as it is about to fall on the prostrate Ilma. Subsequently Kismet informs Ilma and Harry that one of the pearls has fallen into the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Stokes. Harry, disguised as a gas man, and Ilma, playing the detective, visit the house and attempt to gain the jewel. Harry finally gets it but is pursued by Stokes, Mason (Leon Bary) and others. They chase him over several house tops and when the episode finally closes Harry is grappling with one of them on the very edge of the roof.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Nineteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE CRYSTAL MAZE," from latest reports, the second hindermost episode of this highly successful serial, features a fight between Pearl and her aides, Carslake and his band, and the members of the Sacred Order of the Violet God. This takes place underground, in a winding, treacherous passageway walled with mirrors which leads to the den of the Spider, Pearl's ally. The fight is quite exciting as the various searchers fire often and usually break a mirror instead of wounding an opponent.

The episode opens with Pearl and Tom in possession of both the diamond and its setting. They are examining the treasure in the Spider's den when the Sacred Order bears down upon them en masse and proceeds to capture the precious spoils after a hot fight. They make for the "next boat to Arabia," leaving one of their number to guard the exit way of the passage. When Pearl and Tom finally gain the open they are held by this sentry.

"The Cricket"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LITTLE ZOE RAE, Universal's clever child actress, is featured in "The Cricket," one of the most thoroughly enjoyable pictures released under this brand. It is essentially comedy but balancing this element is a wealth of fine human interest provided by the little lead and her support.

The three old actors who adopt the Cricket after the death of her mother supply much of this welcome sentiment. Fred Ward, Harry Holden and Winter Hall take these parts, and the human things they do are alternately lightly humorous and wholesomely entertaining.

The vehicle supplied by Elliott J. Clawson to exploit the talents of Zoe is immaterial when merely the outline of the plot is sketched. It is the incident and the acting that counts. Elsie Jane Wilson has given it a most satisfactory production.

Rena Rogers, Gretchen Lederer, Hal Cooley and George Hupp complete the cast rendering appropriate and attractive performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

On the death of her mother (Gretchen Lederer), the Cricket (Zoe Rae), her daughter, is adopted by three old actors. She brightens their bachelor home considerably.

After the passing of years, the Cricket (Rena Rogers) announces her intention of marrying an actor, Pascal (Hal Cooley). Her guardians, now wealthy, refuse to permit this selecting for her a foolish young man with a lot of money. But the Cricket takes matters into her own hands and elopes with Pascal. The old men remain obdurate, and refuse to forgive her, and, what is more, this leads to quarrelling among themselves and they separate. A few years later they all happen in to see Pascal and the Cricket perform. Their child (Zoe Rae) sitting in a box with one of the old men indirectly proves the means of a very happy ending.

"The Fringe of Society"

(George Backer-M. H. Hoffman—Seven Parts)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE FRINGE OF SOCIETY," a melodrama from the pen of Pierre V. R. Key, sets out with prohibition as its theme but this shortly dropped in all but a merely superficial way, and the story resolves itself into a battle royal of the eternal triangle type with the head of a prohibition paper pitted against the captain of the liquor trust, with the former's wife creating the third angle.

It is a picture rich in typical melodramatic situations. The villain compromises the perfectly innocent wife by seizing her in his arms just as the husband arrives. The wife is practically ready to barter herself to save her husband and there is the roaring fight between the two men out of which the hero eventually emerges triumphant.

Ruth Roland, Milton Sills and J. Herbert Frank, a popular trio, take the triangle roles successfully. An effort was made to find room for George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, Leah Baird and Julis Cowles at the top of the cast, but Larkin is the only one who gives more than an extra's account of himself. His rescue of his employer from the gangsters' den is his big stunt. And the big should be capitalized. The two are successful in escaping from at least a score of antagonists. Here was another chance for realistic stuff but two vs. twenty and successfully a that seems rather impossible, all things considered.

Plainly the strong point in "The Fringe of Society" is the cast. To be sure, there is some suspense allowed toward the end and there are parts of it that interest averagely well, but its editing and inconsistencies in incidents seldom allow the plot to exercise what dramatic force it might possess.

The photography and lighting are somewhat below the standard of the day.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Martin Drake (Milton Sills) supports Prohibition through the columns of his paper, "The Record," because of his own secret and at times assertive craving for drink. He is unaware that his close friend, Medford (J. Herbert Frank), leads the liquor interests, nor does he for the moment suspect him of coveting his wife, Esther (Ruth Roland). Tip O'Neill (George Larkin), a "Record" reporter, acquaints him with the former fact, and shortly afterward Martin happens upon Medford, just after he has seized Esther in his arms. In a rage he takes to drink, and the next morning faces the judge on a charge of disorder. Rather than give his real name he assumes a fictitious one, and goes to the island for ten days. One of Medford's lieutenants (Tammany Young) sees him, and when he is released blackjacks him and makes him captive, so that he will not be able to produce evidence obtained by Tip, which will incriminate Medford. In the meantime Esther has gone to Medford's rooms in the hope that he will listen to her pleas for her husband. Instead he attacks her. Tip discovers Martin's whereabouts, and, breaking into the place, assists him in escaping from his captors. Tip takes the evidence which serves to show Medford up. Martin hurries to Medford's apartment, and nearly strangles him to death after a furious fight. Esther intervenes and explains all to her husband.

"The Fuel of Life"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture the central figure of which is a woman who has sworn to be avenged on all men because of a faithless husband and whose heart is finally melted by a strong minded Westerner, fails to come up to the average that Triangle has maintained since its recent change of policy.

The story written by Maude Reeves White and adapted to the screen by Grant Wallace doesn't deserve five reels in the first place. This superfluity of footage results in a number of scenes that contain just action and hardly any significance. And this naturally has the effect of putting a large crimp in the interest.

Furthermore it delves so far into the intricacies of stock-jobbing—the minor details of it, that the spectator will very likely become confused. A large cast appears, the chief pastime of the majority of its members seems to be double crossing one another and there is too much of this.

Belle Bennett is featured but has few real opportunities. Texas Guinan as the vimpire overacts considerably and can't quite shed her musical comedy mannerisms. The rest of the cast does its best but is naturally handicapped by the character of the picture. Walter Edwards directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Angela De Haven (Belle Bennett), discovering the weak character of her husband (Lee Hill) leaves him, and embittered against the world she resolves to vent her anger on everyone, the male sex in particular. She sails along smoothly for the time, working hand in hand with Brant (J. Barney Sherry), a dishonest promoter. But when she encounters Spalding (W. H. Newburg), a western miner, she meets the Waterloo of her futile life. She tricks him from his entire holdings, but when the showdown comes is unable to betray him into Brant's hands. Instead her love for him leads to a happy ending.

Margaret Shillingford, Alberta Lee, Lee Phelps, Eugene Burr, Edward Hayden, Thomas S. Guise and Estelle La Cheur complete the cast.

"The Rose of Blood"

(Fox Standard Pictures—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THEDA BARA'S latest picture, "The Rose of Blood," deals with the Russian Revolution. It was written for her by Richard Ordynski, himself a Russian and well known in the theatre. He has provided Miss Bara with a role rich in opportunities for her to display her special talents and has built about it an actionful piece of fiction that has a wealth of popular appeal, besides possessing most of the other attributes of a successful picture.

Dealing with a section of Europe that is now more than ever in the public eye and favoring the masses as against the aristocracy of the Russia that was, "The Rose of Blood" seems certain of finding favor. And particularly in houses of the type of William Fox's Academy of Music in New York, where it was first shown. A large audience, the majority of which probably knew Russia better than the alphabet, was moved to applause several times when the story struck a popular note.

J. Gordon Edwards, director of all Miss Bara's recent successes, was in charge of production of "The Rose of Blood." His work is effective in every department, the mob scenes being particularly realistic. Ordynski himself is seen as Vassya, a revolutionist leader, and Charles Clary and Herschel Mayall appear to striking advantage in parts calling firstly for an imposing appearance.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lisza Tapenko (Theda Bara), governess in the household of Prince Arbassoff (Charles Clary), looks with envy on the aristocracy of Russia. When his wife dies she eventually fills her place in everything but name. The Prince refuses to marry her because of the difference in thir social station. Vassya (Richard Ordynski), a revolutionist, Lisza's former lover, urges her to join the cause. Smarting under the Prince's refusal, she does so and leaves for Switzerland, the headquarters of the revolutionists. But the Prince's boy insists on Lisza's return. The Prince eventually yields to the child's demands and asks her to return, with the promise that he will make her his wife.

As Princess Arbassoff Lisza still continues her activities with the revolutionists. She succeeds in causing the death of officials high in Russian diplomatic circles. Koliensky (Herschel Mayall), her husband's friend, discovers her duplicity and agrees to remain silent providing she pay the price. The climax comes when the revolutionists order Lisza to slay her own husband. Torn between love for the Prince and love of Russia she is in a tumult until finally her devotion to the cause triumphs. She accomplishes the demands of the revolutionists but dies with her husband.

Marie Keirman, Bert Turner, Genevieve, Joe King and Hector Sarno complete the cast.

"The Zeppelin's Last Raid"

(U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE ZEPPELIN'S LAST RAID" is a Thomas H. Ince production. Every detail speaks of Ince supervision. The spectacular is in evidence in every reel—in every scene. This, the first release of the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation is a typical state rights' production and will take rank with some of the best, along spectacular lines. With only a thread of a story running through its six reels, this Ince production runs, with a smoothness that is seldom apparent in screen productions. The story is that of the unfortunates who have met the fate decreed by the destructive air monster, known as the Zeppelin. Seldom has the screen witnessed an exhibition wherein action has taken such prominence. There is action with every flash—moving with the swiftness and regularity of a rapid-firing gun. A flash of the observation room in the huge aircraft—then a "long shot" of the monster sweeping through space—a "close-up" of the electric magnet releasing the death-dealing bomb—this missile plunging through the air and then—destruction on the ground beneath. All this taking place in what seems an instant. Action is the strong point in this spectacular screen version of what the German aircraft accomplishes.

With a meaning, powerful title to announce its advent, the story of the Zeppelin—disclosing the ways and means of this destructive machine of war—is everything that speaks for a successful showing at a motion picture theatre. The title will first incite everything that goes to arouse curiosity in the minds of the public and having once aroused within the man, woman or child this curiosity, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" will not disappoint when that curiosity is once given the opportunity to be satisfied. It is not ordinary but on the contrary marvelous. Some of the "tricks of the trade" which have been evidenced by Mr. Ince and his cameraman in the production of this picture are beyond the comprehension of the one who is not conversant with the secrets of artificiality in screen reproduction. The actual happenings could not have been more impressive—more spectacular. There are "spots" in this production that are too obvious but these are passed over hurriedly and will be forgotten in the realism that follows.

Much of the photographic work is nothing less than marvelous. "Trick" photography is the only fair way to describe it, but when this term is employed it is not meant to detract from the value of the production. Every one knows that it would be next to impossible to "shoot" the activities of these war monsters. Realizing this and at the same time deceived because of the realism that Mr. Ince has made possible in this production, it makes his work all the more marvelous.

And the climax to all these spectacular events is the destruction of the Zeppelin, high in the air. Of equally great importance to this action in the climax, is the thought that prompts the commander of the death-destroying machine, to throw the electric switch that means self destruction. It is hardly conceivable, considering the past performances of the Germans, that one of their kind would be touched as is Howard Hickman who presents the rôle of the commander of the Zeppelin, but this fact serves to whet the rough edges and leaves an audience in a more quieted frame of mind. There is one fault that is noticeable in the staging of scene in the climax and that is that Mr. Ince has permitted the Zeppelin to remain in the air, apparently intact and still retaining its "lighter-than-air" qualities after it has been enveloped in flames. In this, the reviewer is of the opinion that Mr. Ince has overlooked the significance of the law of gravitation.

"The Zeppelin's Last Raid" is characterized by a strong title, swift, impressive action, spectacular scenes and the height of cleverness in the use of the camera and "props." It will meet every demand of the exhibitor whether he cater to a hundred a night or two thousand, and regardless of his neighborhood. It is far from being the best work that Mr. Ince has done, but considering the difficulties which presented themselves, it is a production that can well stand for Ince supervision.

"I Will Repay"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"I WILL REPAY" will stand as the best O. Henry subject that has been adapted to the screen. It is adapted from Mr. Henry's "A Municipal Report," and presents a most human story in a most human way. William P. S. Earle directed and has transferred to the screen Mr. Henry's idea of "A Municipal Report" with full appreciation for the author's ideas. "I will Repay" is not alone the best O. Henry subject that has been seen on the screen but it ranks with the best that Vitagraph has produced for the screen. With every flash there is some detail of importance told. There are no far-fetched situations—there are no unnecessary details. Realism is the foreword and realism holds throughout the run of the five reels. Unlike most of Henry's works that have been transferred to the screen, this subject affords as sound entertainment in pictures as in words. It will "go over" before the most varied audience, not by virtue of the unusual but because it tells of natural events and presents its characters in human, natural, homely rôles.

The scenes, excepting the first flashes, are laid in the South and they are typically Southern in every detail. The scene which is laid at the railroad station could not have been shown with a more realistic setting. The "darkey" with its "jitney" and his older competitor with the time-worn hack—both spell the "sunny South." With the opening of the first scene to the final flash there is action. Not the virile, strong action that is registered in our Western dramas or those relying upon fist fights and Indians to give rise to action, but the drowsy, free-and-easy action that typifies the people of the South. And every scene is a link in the chain that gradually and with natural movements, winds around the plot material and closes tight with the climax. The

C. P. Sheehan, special representative of the William Fox releasing organization, has been in Los Angeles getting acquainted with conditions at the studios of the Fox Company and working with the local exchange in the handling of Fox subjects. A great number of new accounts have been added by the Fox Los Angeles exchange, Mr. Sheehan reports, since September 1. Mr. Sheehan has completed a tour of the west coast, visiting Seattle, Portland and San Francisco, and will return East by the way of Salt Lake and Denver after spending another week at the Fox Studios. He speaks very enthusiastically of conditions in all western territories with respect to the Fox programs being attractions in the important cities. The first run bookings have been made by most of the leading houses, and in all instances the Fox pictures get into practically every town in the territories.

Field Carmichael, Los Angeles branch manager, is now completing a trip through Arizona and reports from him are to the effect that Fox pictures will go into every town of that State where there is a theatre with the exception of Clifton and Morenci, where strike conditions at the present time have caused the closing of the theatres.

Five Companies Make Bluebirds on the Coast

Equal Number Busy on Butterflys, and Two Organizations Are Working on Serials—For Release After First of the Year

ACTIVITIES at Universal City, and on locations thereabouts, engage ten companies making five-reelers for the Bluebird and Butterfly programs, with two organizations working on serials. These subjects will not reach the screen until early in the New Year.

The activities of Director Robert Z. Leonard are now centered in a production he is creating for Mae Murray, to be called "The Eternal Columbine." In this, her third Bluebird, Miss Murray will introduce her dancing.

Dorothy Phillips, under direction of Ida May Park, is creating "Broadway Love," prepared for the screen by Miss Park. William Stowell again becomes Miss Phillips' leading man.

Joseph De Grasse is directing Franklyn Farnum in a Bluebird, to be entitled "The Catamount," using Charles Kenyon's scenario of R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark's story. Edith Johnson becomes Mr. Farnum's permanent leading lady with this feature.

Rupert Julian's production of "The Highest Card" is being largely created at Seven Oaks, Cal., with Ruth Clifford in the star role and Monroe Salisbury her leading man. Elsie Jane Wilson is also at Seven Oaks with Ella Hall and Emory Johnson directing them in "Green Magic," a five-reeler.

Production has begun on a Harry Carey Butterfly, "Back to the Right Trail." Molly Malone will play opposite "Cheyenne" Harry Carey.

"Wolves of the North" is being produced by Edward J. Le Saint, with Louise Lovely figuring in the stellar role.

Walter Woods also furnished the scenario from which Elmer Clifton is directing Herbert Rawlinson, with Sally Starr heading the support.

Douglas Gerrard has returned to directing and is now doing "Madam Spy," with Jack Mulhall and Donna Drew leading a company that includes Maud Emery, Claire Du Brey and Wadsworth Harris.

Universal serials now in process of production are "The Mystery Ship," with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, and "The Bull's Eye," having Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed as chief adventurers.

Netter Buys Territory for "Lust of the Ages"

Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Attraction, Cleveland, announces that he has bought the rights to the Ogden production, "The Lust of the Ages," featuring Lillian Walker, for the territory of Ohio and Kentucky. Mr. Netter is associated with Sol Lesser in the independent field. The other features controlled by Masterpiece in this territory are "The Garden of Allah," "Redemption," "The Cold Deck," "Beware of Strangers," "Purity," John Mason in "The Libertine," and "The Ne'er Do Well."

Buffalo Manager Thinks Tax Will Hurt Business

"While we have not at present noticed any falling off in business on account of the tax on tickets, I believe that this additional levy will eventually cut into box office receipts," said Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., "and we are figuring on increasing our advertising and booking the biggest features possible in order to combat this eventuality.

"If business is poor and you begin cutting your program, business becomes worse. We are planning to add to it and keep business normal.

"We are living in critical times. Every cent counts in the family expenditures, especially those devoted to amusement. It was with this fact in view that we hesitated to raise our Sunday prices five cents, which includes the war tax, but we found that otherwise we would never be able to handle the crowds. However, simultaneously with boosting the admission we bettered the program and to date have received no kicks."

Mr. Franklin is a firm believer in the power of publicity to pull in the patrons and his weekly advertising bill mounts to a tidy sum. No local legitimate attraction is advertised bigger on the Sunday drama pages than are the Hippodrome attractions. The result is that not only are seats at a premium Sunday evenings but it is indeed a difficult matter to get into the theatre at all.

In spite of the fact that two box offices are kept open on this day long lines are seen until after the second show.

Directors Needed in Africa

Max Schlesinger, American representative of the African Films Production, Ltd., with offices at 10 Wall street, New York, last week announced that high class motion picture directors are badly needed for production work in South Africa.

Chicago Picture Club Hears Tax Addresses

Daniel J. Chapin, revenue agent in charge of the Chicago district, and Robert W. Blair, revenue agent of accounts from Washington, D. C., were the principal speakers at a luncheon of the newly-organized Motion Picture Club of Chicago held at the Hotel La Salle, November 7. The men spoke on film taxes and confined most of their remarks to the construction and interpretations the revenue department has placed on the manufacturer's footage tax a feature of the tax that has been grossly misinterpreted from time to time.

While admitting that there was still considerable doubt on the measure, and that details on the department's construction were changing daily, they declared that the whole thing was first being taken out of the nebular stage. They assured producers that there would be no floor tax on film, and that, unlike the case of whisky and perfume manufacturers, they would not be charged for goods on hand prior to October 3.

"Persuasive Peggy" Booking Becomes Rather Brisk

Rights to the six-part Mayfair production, "Persuasive Peggy," are going fast, according to announcements made by the Mayfair Corporation, of Wall street, New York. The entire foreign rights to the feature have been disposed of, it is announced, and the Dawn Masterpiece Company, of Detroit, has acquired the rights of the picture for Michigan.

The New Jersey rights to "Persuasive Peggy" have been bought by the Civilization Feature Company, of Newark. These state rights deals were put through by Shallenberger and Priest, in the Times Building.

their experience thus far has proved in most instances that there was no real ground for timidity in the matter of demanding higher prices for what are admittedly higher class productions than were offered several years ago, when 10 cents was actually regarded as a fair price from the exhibitors' point of view.

S. Rudolph, representative in that territory of the Philadelphia office of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Harrisburg last week, after a tour of the larger cities of central Pennsylvania, and asserted that while in the smaller towns exhibitors, as a rule, contented themselves with merely adding the amount of the war tax to the price of their tickets, exhibitors in the larger cities have almost all come up to the 15-cent price of admission and that thus far they have had no reason to regret it.

Patrons Require Little Time

"It will take some theatre patrons a little time to realize the justice of the increased charge," said Mr. Rudolph, "but it is my belief the increase to 15 cents will not have any permanent effect of keeping any large number of patrons away. I have heard of some cases in which patrons have refused to buy tickets at a box office upon learning of the 5-cent increase, but upon going to other theatres in the same town and learning that the increase has been made by all the houses of their city, they have become reconciled to paying the higher price.

"In some of the smaller towns where the 10-cent price, with the addition of 1 cent war tax continues in force, some of the exhibitors are planning to give 10-cent shows four days a week and to give special attractions, with a better class of films, on two days a week, charging 15 or 25 cents on the days of the special attractions."

Peter Magaro, proprietor of the Regent theatre, Harrisburg, who was the pioneer in advocating 15-cent admissions in that city, declared the plan is working admirably. "All the theatres are getting the higher price without any loss of business," said Mr. Magaro. "It is my opinion that, considering the high class attractions that are being exhibited in Harrisburg and the increased costs of operating, the price should have been made even higher."

Exhibitor Sees No Change

James George, of the Victoria, another of the leading Market street theatres, who took a conservative attitude when the question increasing prices was advanced, but who nevertheless joined the others in going to 15 cents, said that his net revenues have not diminished since the increase has been in force.

"It has been about an even break," said Mr. George. "Though a few patrons have shied at the higher price. I cannot say that my earnings have been reduced, as the higher price yields, of course, an additional margin of profit over the total of the combined war tax on tickets and the tax which the producers require the exhibitors to pay on each one thousand feet of film shown. It's too early to say whether 15-cent admissions will be a success in Harrisburg, though I am rather inclined to the view that it would be better business to charge 11 cents—representing a 10-cent rate of admission plus the war tax on tickets—and then two or three times a week put on a special production of a class that would warrant the charging of 25 cents on those days."

Stamps for Pennies

Fearing a shortage of pennies, exhibitors throughout the middle West who have increased their admission price one or two cents to collect the tax, are laying in a supply of stamps.

"Tax and Casualty Lists Will Hit Patronage"

The following statement was issued on November 1 by Charles Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association:

"The war tax arrives today for an indefinite stay, and the tax of fifteen cents per reel has been offered to the exhibitor for 'adoption.'

"Attendance at motion picture theatres has fallen off during the past thirty days, and it will fall off a great deal more as it did in Canada, when we begin to receive news from France of the deaths and wounding of the boys of our patrons. When these messages begin to arrive many familiar faces will be absent from the little neighborhood theatres.

"These conditions must be faced by all the exhibitors of motion pictures. Some motion picture theatres can raise their prices; others cannot. Experience has taught us that the public does not attend motion picture performances on empty stomachs."

Wintroub Says He Will Not Charge Fifteen Cent Tax

Max Wintroub, manager of the Fontenelle Feature Film Company, Omaha, Neb., announced last week that his company would not charge the fifteen cents a reel being demanded by some of the exchanges. "I did not have to pay this price for most of the pictures I own, and as they do not come under the government tax, it would be decidedly unfair to the exhibitor if I added the charge."

Mr. Wintroub said that he would not make the charge in the future. "The charge will be made in a lump sum to me. I will pay it, and then continue to distribute the picture at a fair charge to the exhibitor, as I have in the past."

Westerners Buck at Reel Tax

W. A. Bach, managing the Colorado Jewel Exchange at Denver, advises MOTION PICTURE NEWS of a consolidation of exhibitors in the west to thresh the tax in its numerous aspects. Mr. Bach says:

"Exhibitors of Idaho, under the leadership of Mr. Brown, have announced consolidation for the purpose of resisting the payment of war tax on reels imposed by exchanges on orders from manufacturers. They evidently will make the public pay the admission tax, however.

"The exhibitors of Montana and Colorado have taken the same action. The Rocky Mountain Screen Club, however, announces that the exhibitors are cheerfully and gladly paying all war taxes, including that imposed by the exchanges, through the medium of the newspapers in Denver, while in reality they have announced to the exchanges that they will not pay the fifteen cents. Untruthful advertising? It looks like it—at any rate it is inconsistent.

"Only two exchanges are not charging the fifteen cents in Denver—Mutual and Triangle.

"Practically all the exhibitors in the territory have added the war tax to their admission prices, although not many actual round figure increases have been noted."

Sam Morris Expresses Himself Concerning Tax

Sam Morris, representing Select Pictures in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, and who has spent the past month making a tour of his territory, thinks himself well equipped to express an opinion on the war tax on admission prices, as he has given the matter careful attention while on the road and meeting exhibitors.

Mr. Morris said: "The majority of the exhibitors are standing pat and letting the public pay the additional one, two or three cents. Some few of them have raised their prices and are carrying the tax themselves, but I think they are wrong. What are these fellows who are paying the exhibitor's tax now going to do when the Government imposes further taxes on the industry? And I feel confident that that is just what's going to happen. They can't go on indefinitely standing it themselves. Eventually, they will have to pass it on to the public, and it will be ten times harded for them to do it than it will be for the exhibitor whose patrons have already been educated to the fact that their pennies are contributing to the maintenance of the American army and the American navy."

Exhibitor Co-operation Saves One Man a Show

Exhibitors of Halifax, N. S., had an opportunity to test the value of co-operation a few days ago, and the test demonstrated that in unity there is strength. A severe wind and rain storm had tied up railway traffic in the Maritime Provinces and the theatre managers suffered from delay to their programs. Among those so inconvenienced was Manager Metzler of the Empire, whose program did not arrive. He had but one reel in the house and it looked as if he would miss his show. He appealed to his brother managers, with the result that the Casino contributed a Metro-Drew comedy, Manager Walker of Dartmouth helped out with two reels, and Manager Herschorn of the Imperial similarly obliged. The result was that the Empire had a cracking good general program.

Remarkable Scenes in Hart's "The Bargain"

Is Typical Western Drama Produced by Thomas H. Ince and Will Be Distributed by W. H. Productions Company Very Shortly

WILLIAM S. HART, featured as the "two-gun man" in "The Bargain," one of the pictures which will be distributed by the W. H. Productions Company, is said to take very active part in some of the most remarkable scenes ever photographed in a Western drama. This picture was directed by Thomas H. Ince, which fact bespeaks the last word in scenic construction. However, it is claimed Mr. Ince has surpassed himself in this production, and has created an atmosphere that fairly breathes the life of the old West.

Perhaps the most remarkable piece of work in "The Bargain" is the complete Western town, which is far and above the sets usually made for such pictures. It contains the entire street of the town, with its stores, houses and hotels. There are several hundred people used in the scenes, consequently giving the impression of being really populated and busy, and not merely set up for theatrical or background purposes. The feature of the set is the great gambling and dance hall, where a large part of the action takes place. This, of course, is the center of the town's activity, and it is here that is found most of the real Western atmosphere. It is claimed that no detail is omitted; everything is historically correct and exactly as it was in the days of '49.

Another feature of the picture is the leap on horseback which Hart accomplishes from the top of a high cliff. With the posse at his heels and cut off from every avenue of escape, Stokes, the outlaw, takes without hesitation the one chance that is offered him, and rides his horse off the top of the precipice, to go rolling over and over into the canyon below. In this connection it is said Mr. Ince has surpassed himself as a director, and has given the screen one of the most thrilling scenes in the history of motion pictures.

The W. H. Productions Company announced this week that it has devised a unique press book which will, no doubt, prove of great value to the exhibitor; also one, three and six-sheet posters, each in three styles. There has been designed, also, a special twenty-four sheet which promises to take its place among the spectacular things of its kind.

Freuler Loses Wife by Death

The wife of John R. Freuler, president of Mutual Film Corporation, died in her home at Milwaukee, Wednesday, November 7, after a sudden attack of heart trouble. She was a familiar figure to all who knew her husband, for wherever it was possible they were always found together. It is rumored that as a consequence of his wife's death the Mutual president may move to Chicago so as to be nearer his place of business. Up to the present he has been making the trip every day from his home in Milwaukee to the Mutual offices in Chicago.

"Help Yourself" Jewel Publicity Idea

Jewel Productions, Inc., announces the launching of a "Help Yourself" department, which promises many innovations.

Instead of one style of advertising, Jewel officials announce that they will supply through "Help Yourself" two, three, four or as many styles of advertising as is necessary for any one production. For example, in the case of "The Co-Respondent," starring Elaine Hammerstein, there will be put into effect next week two distinct plans of advertising, differing in type, composition, cuts and copy. For some of the higher class of publications, the "highbrow" type, there will be used a style of advertising that will appeal to possibly the non-movie element. In addition there will go into effect a clever and effective series of advertising chapters which will spread itself all over the country in various mediums, trade, daily, Sunday, weekly, and in magazines. A series of chapters from the first reel to the seventh are employed to tell the story in convincing narrative form.

Marion Leaves for Cuba and Spain Saturday

Francis Marion, of the Kalem Co., leaves for Cuba, Saturday, from where he will sail to Spain and Italy to inaugurate his work for the foreign Cinema commission.

Mr. Marion is enthusiastic about the smooth working out of the commission's plans and is especially pleased with the splendid co-operation of Jules Bronlatour in selection of subjects and the collection of the necessary films.

Four British Star Productions for Sale

A new shipment of four British superstar productions has reached the Cosmofotofilm Company's offices from London, consisting of three six-reelers and one five-reeler, as follows: Miss Ellen Terry in "Her Greatest Permormance," Mr. H. B. Irving in "The Lyons Mail," Sir John Harr in "The Vicar of Wakefield," and Miss Irene Rookie in "Lady Windermere's Fan."

Michigan Exhibitors Hold Detroit Conference

A number of prominent exhibitors from the leading cities in Michigan held an informal conference in Detroit November 6, at which they decided to take active steps immediately to build up the membership of the Michigan Exhibitors' Association. To this end, those present decided upon their own responsibility to engage Ray Branch as state manager, and each one present agreed to bear individually his share of the necessary expense until the next meeting of the Association, when the latter will undoubtedly confirm the appointment.

It is ainnounced that Mr. Branch will at once start a statewide campaign for members, and this will be followed by a state rally at the Hotel Tuller in Detroit on November 27, according to plans.

The consideration is said to be more than $100,000 for the year's service.

Cleveland Exchange Jottings

Sam Morris, who has had charge of the Select pictures in Cleveland ever since the change in policy in regard to the distribution of Selznick pictures, is making a short road tour. He was in Detroit last week, and is this week in Cincinnati.

A. J. Mentz, Cleveland manager of the Jewel Productions, was in Cincinnati last week, arranging for the opening of "Sirens of the Sea."

The National Film Service in Cleveland has been moved from the Frederick Building to the Belmont Building. Manager Stern is always on hand with a full assortment of short reels.

J. M. Cummings has been appointed to take charge of the Cleveland branch of General Film. He will also supervise the Columbus office.

W. W. Hines, general sales manager of the Triangle forces, was in Cleveland recently on his way back to New York after a three weeks' visit to all the branch exchanges. He complimented Irwin Hirsch, manager of the local office, on the manner in which he handled the business in and around Cleveland.

Cohn Gets Congratulations on Animated Weekly

Jack Cohn, manager of Universal's Animated Weekly, is said to have received telegrams and letters, and even oral congratulations, from exhibitors and film men concerning the airplane pictures which are the chief feature in the Animated Weekly No. 96.

Screen Club Ball Held Saturday of This Week

The Screen Club will hold its sixth annual ball in the Hotel Astor gold room on the evening of Saturday, November 17. This will be the fourth year the Screeners have gathered in the Broadway hostelry. President Joseph W. Farnham and his associates are bending every enregy in an effort to make the coming affair even better than those that have gone before.

Special attention will be paid to the music. As heretofore, the hotel orchestra has been engaged, which will play in conjunction with the organ. Supplementing these will be a marimba band, so that in a musical way there will be something doing every minute.

The sale of boxes under the direction of Max Mayer is proceeding satisfactorily. Augustus Phillips will be chairman of the reception committee at the ball. John Harvey will have charge of the clubhouse at the post-reception.

Reports so far received indicate that New York filmdom's select event, the Screen Club Ball, which will be held at the Astor this Saturday evening, is certain to far surpass any of the previous affairs. With Joseph Farnham as standard bearer, the club's forces are working with greater energy than ever and it seems certain that the events will set a record to shoot at for many years.

The Screen Club Ball is the one film affair which brings the elite of the stars and all the prominent executives to the front. Boxes for this year's event have already been secured by all of the prominent companies. Tickets may be obtained at the clubhouse, 117 West 45th Street.

THE TRUTH ABOUT

The Admissions Tax became effective November 1st.

The war tax on films began on the 4th of October, the day after President Wilson signed the bill.

Ever since October 4th we have been paying our toll of over $100,000 a week.

The same toll will continue—over $100,000 a week—as long as the law remains in effect.

The government never expected us to pay that money out of our own pockets, but it does hold us responsible for that amount, and it is not concerned in our method of getting it.

Uncle Sam merely says "Pay me."

He expects us to COLLECT that amount and turn it over to him at the rate of over $100,000 a week, and the undersigned cannot pay this amount and remain in business.

The only possible place we can collect it is from the public, but we can't do this direct because we don't own the theatres. We therefore have to do our collecting through the people with whom we deal directly—the exhibitors.

Nor does the government expect the exhibitors to stand this drain on their own bank accounts. It expects the exhibitors to COLLECT the money from the public—because every tax ultimately comes from the people.

Every school boy knows that if a tax is placed on cigars, this tax becomes a part of the COST of producing and marketing the cigars, and is therefore paid by the men who ultimately CONSUME the cigars.

If a tax is placed on telephone calls, the tax is paid by the USER of the telephone.

Any tax that is levied on the theatre you occupy is added to the rent by your landlord and in the end you pay the tax—not the landlord. And you, in turn, operate your theatre for a profit and in so doing you pass that tax, plus all your other expenses, PLUS YOUR PROFIT on to the public for ultimate payment.

And so on with everything and anything that is taxed or taxable.

Some exhibitors have complained because we adopted the method announced to provide the money that the government has called for. Some of them have cancelled their orders with some of our exchanges.

But the cold hard fact remains that the Government demands the tax, and we intend to see that it gets it.

This is the whole story of the tax in a nutshell. We can't dodge it and you can't. Your clear duty is to collect the tax from your patron. Motion picture entertainment is taxed. It is put outside of the classification of necessities. It is in the classifications of luxuries, the enjoyment of which the people must pay for.

THE WAR TAX

And if any of your patrons kick about it or threaten to quit patronizing your theatre because you do your plain duty, you will know just exactly how we felt when exhibitors did the same thing to us.

Obviously there were two other methods by which we could have passed this tax along to those who Congress intended should ultimately pay it. The first was by raising our prices to the exhibitors; the second was by unfair competition.

The exhibitor should not fool himself. In most contracts between distributors and exhibitors there is a cancellation clause, and no exhibitor hesitates to cancel when his business does not permit him to pay the prices agreed on for pictures. Every distributor who does not honestly and straightforwardly announce as we have announced that we are compelled to collect substantially the same amount as we are required to pay to the government will be forced to cancel his existing contracts and raise his prices, or he will try to make the exhibitor think he is a philanthropist and actually get an additional return sufficient to cover his tax and more by taking on at a higher rate than he has asked before, the business which we lose through cancellation.

It is all absurdly simple.

As the cost of product increases, the sales price must increase or business must go into bankruptcy.

And with business gone, what of the "boys over there?"

Incidentally, and to set any fears or suspicions at rest, there is not a penny of profit in it for us to collect FIFTEEN CENTS PER REEL PER DAY from exhibitors. As a matter of fact, the most expert accountants in New York have demonstrated that the tax actually costs over SIXTEEN CENTS PER REEL PER DAY for every reel that works. But to simplify bookkeeping the tax was fixed at FIFTEEN cents. The only persons who can possibly object to the present arrangements are those who do not fully understand it.

We are a nation at war. Not at play. War is hell. We've got to go through hell and taxes before we can expect to reach peace and pleasure. Those of us who are not shouldering a gun and offering our lives, as the flower of the nation's young men are doing, will do well to face whatever music remains to be faced at home—whether it is taxes or sacrifice or privation of any sort.

suspense element is sustained in a true artistic style, to the end. Upon a torn bill rests the clue to the main theme, and this has been handed here and there, with perfect naturalness, until it rests in the hands of the one who is to turn the key and make way for justice. The unexpected happens but it is never farfetched. Naturalness stands out in this production with the prominence that it should always maintain in every exhibition on the screen.

Corrine Griffith presents the featured rôle and typifies our idea of a Southern beauty. Miss Griffith fully appreciates her position and her actions coincide with what the author would expect from his character of Virginia Rodney. Mary Maurice as Azalea Adair gives a praiseworthy performance. William Dunn does his usual good work in the "villain" rôle. George J. Forth does his work as the reporter with ease and deserves honorable mention. Eulalie Jensen does well in the character woman's rôle. Arthur Donaldson makes a good "black-faced" character.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Roger Kendall (George J. Forth) is sent to Nashville to obtain the services of Azalea Adair (Mary Maurice), a writer. He receives a torn bill in change from the cab driver as he leaves New York, and this he gives to the old darkey, who drives him to the home of Azalea. Later this bill turns up in an unexpected manner, and gives him a clue to the relations which exist between Major Casewell and Azalea. Virginia Rodney, a friend of Azalea, meets Roger, and a close friendship results. Steve Bascomb (William Dunn) is an admirer of Virginia. He frequents the "speak easy" run by a mulatto, Beulah (Eulalie Jensen), a woman of questionable character. Roger pays Azalea to bind the contract for her services to the paper he represents in the North, and Caswell seeing him hand her the money, and later takes it from her. He goes to the "speak easy" with Steve. Caesar (Arthur Donaldson), the colored hack driver and servant of Azalea, finds his mistress, senseless on the floor, goes to the "speak easy" and kills Caswell. Azalea goes to live with Virginia, who later marries Roger.

"Auntie's Triumph" and "Cousins"

(Film d'Art Corporation—Two Comedies—Two Reels Each)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THE first two comedy productions by the Film d'Art Corporation, "Auntie's Triumph" and "Cousins," written and directed by John Perry, reveal clean, wholesome humor with bits of the "slapstick" injected, more in evidence in "Auntie's Triumph" than "Cousins." Of the two comedies, "Auntie's Triumph" is the better and more entertaining. There is contained sufficient plot material to entitle it to a place in the drama and the events are disclosed in logical sequence. "Cousins" discloses in two reels what should be disclosed in one. Many of the scenes run to too great a length and this fact taints the entire run. It becomes boresome for the audience. With some of the scenes cut to mere flashes action would be quickened and the humor which is now lost in a maze of lengthy scenes would stand out more prominently.

Director Perry has given these two comedies good productions. He has revealed some humorous situations and with the exception of the fault noted above, he has given to the screen productions that will serve as excellent "fillers" for a featured program. The author, Mr. Perry, has not jumbled a series of comedy situations together and rested content with the result but he has made the plots of both comedies as important as the comedy they reveal. The fault as noted in "Cousins" and to a lesser degree in "Auntie's Triumph" can be easily eliminated by the cutter. With this done, the Film d'Art Corporation can place their first products on the market and rest assured that the exhibitors and patrons will demand more of the same order.

Jeanne Hall is featured in both comedies and merits the honors given her. Her work is never "overdone."

Time Writes Your Projector's Guarantee

No MOTIOGRAPH Sliding disc has ever worn out or shown any defect since the first one went into service, July 15, 1913.

Hundreds have been in use since that time. Indications show that the machines that have been in service these many days and weeks will last many years longer.

Projection with MAZDA Lamps

The New Type I Compensarc Developed especially for use with Mazda Lamps.

After many months of experiment the General Electric Company now introduces projection equipment which has for its lighting unit the well known Mazda Lamp.

The control equipment consists of the new Type I Compensarc illustrated herewith. This device is very compact (dimensions 20 by 9 by 6 inches) and can be mounted on the wall close to the projection machine, giving the operator instant control.

A three point starting switch limits the rush of current, and a multi-point rheostat and ammeter enable the operator to keep the current adjusted accurately at all times.

The Type I Compensarc is rated at 750 watts, 110 to 120 volts, alternating current, and will operate either the 20 or 30 ampere Mazda lamps that have been developed especially for this work.

Prosperity—Pictures—Progress

WE may have started something. I hope so.

Conditions under which pictures are shown must change. The theatres themselves must be improved. The patrons must be educated into paying a greater admission price. They have been getting too much for their money in the past. A theatre, in order to be a paying investment, must make more profit. The operator to make more salary must be with a successful theatre. He must do his part in bringing about this condition.

The operator must get behind and push. He must see that his boss improves that part of the establishment for which he is responsible. It is up to him to put the picture on the screen and if he does not do it better than Jim Jones up the street why should he expect to have his salary raised—the admission price of the theatre increased—or his boss prosperous, and believe me a prosperous man is the man to work for.

HERE is a letter selected from many received on this general subject:

November 2, 1917.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: I received the Anti-Misframe League labels and card. Many thanks for same.

Now I will take up a few minutes of your time in a little talk about the troubles and carelessness of operators. First of all, many operators, myself for one, have had a lot of things to put up with. When I took my present position, over five years ago, the machine (you could hardly call it a machine) was a wreck as its days were past. Well, I had the greatest time to get a new machine put in, but I finally succeeded. And a great machine it is—quite a difference from the old worn-out one. I have had real pleasure in running any show for the last four years.

Here is another thing many operators have to put up with. If you want a new part for the machine this is the answer you get if business isn't first class—"Can you make it hang out for a few weeks till things pick up." Now if anything happens and the show breaks down, who gets the blame? Why, of course, the operator.

There are many other things I could tell you but I will not take up your time.

I have just had the pleasure of reading your letter on "The Open Booth" question, which I think would be a very good thing.

I can remember about ten years ago, in Toronto, that the backs of some of the operating booths were of glass. The people could see from the street the operator at work and what he was doing at all times, which was a good thing. But where the booth is upstairs this could not be done.

The things you say are true. Operators do smoke; keep fire shutter fastened up, etc. I will tell you a few more things that I have seen: fastening down door so they could have a big loop in order that if it ran off they could throw it on the sprocket again without having a stop. Another bad thing is to let the lens holder get full of dust and oil. This is very dangerous. Some operators would not bother to clean out the booth, often leaving loose paper in booth. And to top all, some operators never clean their machines—all they do is put in a carbon when necessary and oil when the machine binds. I think this kind of an operator should not get a license.

I hope I have not taken up too much of your time.

Yours for success,

HOW many theatres are running to-day and trying to sell to the public pictures projected with a piece of junk? How long does a new machine last? Until it is worn out? Yes, but like a human being, its life is limited, depending upon the treatment received. Four years as an average usually spells—JUNK—at least in a house running from 10 A. M. till 11 P. M., and during that time constant attention and replacements are necessary. The intermittent set to 1-10,000 of an inch cannot stand much wear without being sent to the factory. No screw-driver adjustment in the up-to-date house.

"Wait till things pick up," is a great answer. Better burn the house down, collect the insurance and let the fellow up the street have your business—you are only killing patrons—hurting the industry—and taking up a building site which would be better used for an insane asylum.

IF you are going to run a prosperous business you must keep improving conditions—have your place at all times 100 per cent efficient—give the best pictures with the best projection in town. Pay to get the best operator. Give him conditions which are healthy. Advertise and you are bound to win out.

When I read a letter like the above from an operator—member of a M. P. O. Local—and himself progressive, trying to boost things without proper encouragement, I can not help wondering what will become of the industry. "Operators do smoke; keep fire shutters fastened up, etc." This is illegal enough for the worst but when he says "All they do is put in a carbon when necessary and oil when the machine binds," the limit is reached. Working purely for the Saturday night pay envelope—no ambition—no desire to help a great industry—no self-pride—no thought of the safety of others.

Those who would do this are not men. They do not belong in a scientific business where brains should dominate. They should be disowned by their locals and not allowed to continue in the industry. Let's start cleaning from within. Let the members of the Anti-Misframe League make the start in their localities and in their other organizations. We will back them every inch of the way. Let them drive out those who are breaking the law and let them carry on an active campaign to improve projection conditions, delivering better pictures to the public which will mean an advancement in admissions and more prosperity all along the line.

E. K. GILLETT.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Data of Illumination

Standard Definitions of Photometric Terms

20. LAMP—a generic term for an artificial source of light.

22. REPRESENTATIVE LUMINOUS STANDARD — a standard of luminous intensity adopted as the authoritative custodian of the accepted value of the unit.

23. REFERENCE STANDARD—a standard calibrated in terms of the unit from either a primary or representative standard and used for the calibration of working standards.

24. WORKING STANDARD — a standardized luminous source for daily use in photometry.

25. COMPARISON LAMP—a lamp of constant but not necessarily known candlepower against which a working standard and test lamps are successively compared in a photometer.

26. TEST LAMP (in a photometer)—the lamp to be tested.

27. PERFORMANCE CURVE—a curve representing the behavior of a lamp in any particular (such as candlepower, consumption, etc.) at different periods during its life.

28. CHARACTERISTIC CURVE—a curve expressing a relation between two variable properties of a luminous source, such as candlepower and volts, candlepower and rate of fuel consumption, etc.

29. HORIZONTAL DISTRIBUTION CURVE—a polar curve representing the luminous intensity of a lamp, or lighting unit, in a plane perpendicular to the axis of the unit, and with the unit at the origin.

30. VERTICAL DISTRIBUTION CURVE—a polar curve representing the luminous intensity of a lamp, or lighting unit, in a plane passing through the axis of the unit, and with the unit at the origin. Unless otherwise specified, a vertical distribution curve is assumed to be an average vertical distribution curve, such as may in many cases be obtained by rotating the unit about its axis, and measuring the average intensities at the different elevations. It is recommended that in vertical distribution curves, angles of elevation shall be counted positively from the nadir (lowest point of the circle forming the basis of the chart) as zero, to the zenith as 180°. In the case of incandescent lamps, it is assumed that the vertical distribution curve is taken with the tip of the lamp downward.

It is here assumed that the lamp (or other light source) is mounted in the usual manner, or, as in the case of an incandescent lamp, with its axis of symmetry vertical.

32. MEAN SPHERICAL CANDLEPOWER of a lamp—the average candlepower of a lamp in all directions in space. It is equal to the total luminous flux of the lamp in lumens divided by 4π.

33. MEAN HEMISPHERICAL CANDLEPOWER of a lamp (upper or lower)—the average candlepower of a lamp in the hemisphere considered. It is equal to the total luminous flux in that hemisphere divided by 2π.

34. MEAN ZONAL CANDLEPOWER of a lamp—the average candlepower of a lamp over the given zone. It is equal to the total luminous flux emitted by the lamp in that zone divided by the solid angle of the zone.

35. SPHERICAL REDUCTION FACTOR of a lamp—the ratio of the mean spherical to the mean horizontal candlepower of the lamp. (In the case of a uniform point-source, this factor would be unity, and for a straight cylindrical filament obeying the Lambert cosine law it would be $\pi/4$.)

36. PHOTOMETRIC TESTS in which the results are stated in candlepower should be made at such a distance from the source of light that the latter may be regarded as practically a point. Where tests are made in the measurement of lamps with reflectors, or other accessories, at distances such that the inverse square law does not apply, the results should always be given as "apparent candlepower" at the distance employed, which distance should always be specifically stated.

37. THE SPECIFIC OUTPUT of electric lamps should be stated in terms of lumens per watt, and the specific output of illuminants depending upon combustion (arcs, for instance), should be stated in lumens per British thermal unit per hour. The use of the term "efficiency" in this connection should be discouraged.

When auxiliary devices are necessarily employed in circuit with a lamp, the input should be taken to include both that in the lamp and that in the auxiliary devices. For example, the watts lost in the ballast resistance of an arc lamp are properly chargeable to the lamp.

38. THE SPECIFIC CONSUMPTION of an electric lamp is its watt consumption per lumen. "Watts per candle" is a term used commercially in connection with electric incandescent lamps, and denotes watts per mean horizontal candle.

39. LIFE TESTS—Electric incandescent lamps of a given type may be assumed to operate under comparable conditions only when their lumens per watt consumed are the same. Lift test results, in order to be compared, must be either conducted under, or reduced to, comparable conditions of operation.

40. IN COMPARING different luminous sources, not only should their candlepower be compared, but also their relative form, brightness, distribution of illumination and character of light.

LAMP ACCESSORIES

41. REFLECTOR—an appliance the chief use of which is to redirect the luminous flux of a lamp in a desired direction or directions.

42. SHADE—an appliance the chief use of which is to diminish or to interrupt the flux of a lamp in certain directions where such flux is not desirable. The function of a shade is commonly combined with that of a reflector.

43. GLOBE—an enclosing appliance of clear or diffusing material the chief use of which is either to protect the lamp or to diffuse its light.

A Manager's Views on the Condition of Film

C. B. Clark, proprietor and manager of the Iris theatre, Pacific Grove, Cal., writes:

"I have read everything published concerning the National Anti-Misframe League, and I feel that you are on the right track, and every manager should give you his support. Personally, I was an operator before I became a manager, starting in the days when the Optigraph was considered the perfection of projection machines, and films were run into a sack for convenience. Perhaps I may be a little radical upon the subject, but I consider that every manager of a picture theatre should have a complete knowledge of projection. When he goes 'through the mill' himself he knows what an operator has to contend with, and consequently will see that his projection room is equipped and his machinery kept up as it should be.

"A mis-frame is a badly repaired break in a film and breaks are caused in the majority of cases by projection machines in poor condition. Another cause of films being returned to the exchange in a mutilated condition is a ruling of the exchanges that all films should not be rewound after last showing. This ruling, if observed, necessitates the use of small hub reel-spools on the last show, which put extra strain on the film through the first third of the reel, thus weakening the film and laying the foundation for future breaks. If this were not so, why would the titles of a film give out first? This exchange rule we ignore at this theatre, as we use the large hub take-up reel, and the operator has positive instructions to repair all breaks and return the film to the exchange in perfect running order, which would not be done if we did not rewind after the last showing, so the exchange, in order to save a little work, spoils a lot of film and makes itself a lot of extra work.

"Another cause for mis-frames is the factory. If a break occurs in the dark of a 'fadeaway,' where no division lines are visible, how can any operator tell where to put his splice? Give us some dividing lines on 'fadeaways' and a lot of mis-frames will be eliminated."

COMMENT: It is gratifying to note that in some instances, at least, the managers of motion picture theatres, such as our correspondent, make it a point to keep in touch with the projection end of the business, and we congratulate Mr. Clark on his insistence that all films leave his theatre in perfectly usable condition.

The use of film reels having large hubs is instrumental in greatly prolonging the life of a reel of film, and the film reel recommended as a standard by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at their recent meeting, is one possessing a 5-inch hub.

With regard to the dividing lines between pictures in the case of fade-outs and other dark scenes in a film, the dividing lines could be made white (clear film) instead of dark by special means, employing unstandardized aperture sizes in cine cameras and printing machines; but no matter how dark the scene on a film is printed the dividing line between images is always perceptible, according to our experience, and may be detected by holding the section of film in question up to a strong light.

Next Meeting of I. P. A., Inc.

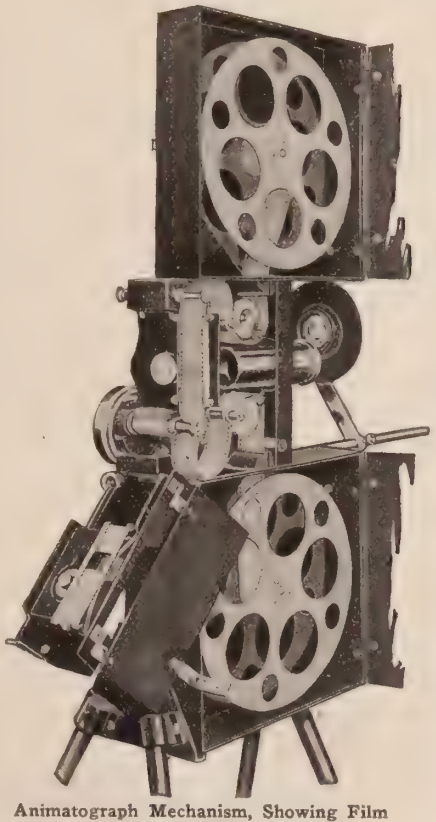
ON Friday evening, November 16, the I. P. A., Inc., will meet at their club rooms, 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, at 12 o'clock, midnight, to hear a lecture by Mr. Frank S. Pircher, E.E., B.Sc., on the subject "Electro-Magnetic Induction."

The meetings of the Association for the fall and winter months are steadily increasing in interest and value to the members, and a number of gentlemen well known in the projection end of the business are scheduled for lectures.

Mr. Pircher's forthcoming lecture is but one of a series which will take the members of the I. P. A. from the power-house to the lamp-house of the motion picture machine.

The meetings of the I. P. A. are only open to such operators as are members of the Association, but all licensed operators in Greater New York are eligible for membership, and those interested in joining should communicate with the Recording Secretary, Morris J. Rotker, at the club's address given above.

The Model 2 Victor Animatograph



Although the Model 2 Victor Animatograph now being placed on the market by the Victor Animatograph Company of Davenport, Iowa, is not a new machine, the improvements that have already been made on this instrument, during the past year, place it in a class by itself. It is the manufacturers' intent to appeal to an entirely separate field, that of light-exhibition only. The Animatograph is intended, and is guaranteed, for traveling exhibitions, private exhibitions, and all educational and religious institution work in both small and large rooms.

The Model 2 Victor Animatograph

A remarkable feature of the Victor Animatograph is that the image that it produces on the screen is standard in quality, yet the instrument complete, ready for service, weighs but forty pounds.

The image, for steadiness, lack of flicker, and general quality, is beyond criticism. The manufacturers' recommendation is that the maximum size of image should be 10x12 feet. This size is sufficient for 99 per cent. of the buyers of this type of instrument.

Animatograph Mechanism, Showing Film Threaded

Standard one thousand foot reels of standard film are used, and a standard lantern slide attachment is a part of each equipment. One excellent feature of the Animatograph is the "flexible focus condensing lens system," which employs a set of very short focus condensing lenses on the motion picture side, and a quick shift of the lamp house automatically changes the focus of the condensing lens system to spread the beam of light to cover the standard slide lens. This condenser system provides for a permanent location of the lamp, thereby eliminating many of the confusing adjustments to center the light, to clear the field.

The Animatograph is equipped only with Mazda incandescent lamps. There are several varieties of concentrated filament lamps, for picture machines, now ready which permit direct attachment to any lamp socket, and the production of a ten-foot motion picture image. All varieties of the new lamps can be used.

The Animatograph is not a hand-made machine; all parts are machine-made and interchangeable.

The intermittent used is the star and cam type of rapid action. The interrupting shutter is a double two-blade device which operates in an enclosed case, directly at the aperture. The two blades revolve in opposite directions, so that the aperture is closed by the shutter entering at the top and bottom at the same time. This feature, together with the quick action of the intermittent, and the increased light produced by the short focus condensers, permit unusual brilliancy with lamps of comparatively low power. The instrument is, of course, equipped with a framer, an excellent and sure working safety shutter, and motor drive and speed control, if desired.

From what we know of the Animatograph, and judging from the manufacturers' protective guarantee, we feel quite sure that the Animatograph will well serve the non-theatrical user of motion picture film.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Get the Other Fellow to Join

GILBERT HEATWOLE, Harrisonburg, Va. (League Member No. 423), writes:

"As a member of the N. A. M. L., I have wondered what is the matter with the Virginia boys. I have seen very few Virginia operators' names on the Roll of Honor. I am going to try to get the fellow at the other theatre here to join. I also wish to state that I won the World Film Co., Washington, D. C., Better Service Prize for September."

COMMENT: This communication is representative of the spirit of the class of operators who have been attracted to the progressive organization known as the National Anti-Misframe League.

We like the correspondent's whole-hearted attitude in trying to "get the fellow at the other theatre to join," and in this way doing his bit toward the success of the progressive policies which the League stands for.

If every other League member will do a little missionary work in his own vicinity, the betterment of the condition of films will be just so much more speedily brought about, a condition the desirability of which is apparent to all operators.

The progress so far made by the League is a guarantee of ultimate and absolute success, but it will express the highest ideals of League membership if every member will try and "get the other fellow to join."

Anti-Misframe Pastre Becomes Banker

WE have just received word from Gary, Indiana, that Mr. John C. Pastre, who originally suggested the National Anti-Misframe League, has advanced himself very materially. Mr. Pastre has forsaken the position of motion picture operator and has become affiliated with the South Side Trust and Savings Bank of Gary.

There is no doubt that a progressive spirit, such as Mr. Pastre has proven himself to be, will find success in any field of endeavor and we wish Mr. Pastre good luck in his newly chosen work.

It is to be hoped, however, that Mr. Pastre will not forget his friends the operators, by all of whom he is highly esteemed, and we hope that he will favor the Projection Department of MOTION PICTURE NEWS with an occasional communication.

Nicholas Power Company Notes

Will C. Smith, acting general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, is very busy these days. As treasurer of the Screen Club he is working hard to sell a record-breaking number of tickets for the forthcoming ball, and says that judging from the rapidity with which boxes and individual tickets are being disposed of, the Gold Room at the Astor Hotel on Saturday, the 17th inst., will be filled to capacity.

Mr. Smith announces that the "Excelite" Cameragraph equipment is creating unusual conditions in the office of the Power Company, owing to the large number of inquiries from exhibitors and operators, and that extra help had been employed to take care of the correspondence. Quite a number of the new incandescent "Excelite" outfits have been sold recently to theatres approximating 80 feet throw, giving results far exceeding expectations of the exhibitors, and the Nicholas Power Company looks for a very large business with the new equipment. The most important installations of 6B cameragraphs reported by the Power Company during the past week are: Public School 158, Brooklyn, N. Y.; American Red Cross, Westchester Chapter; Manhattan Country Club, Freeport, L. I.; Lafayette theatre, 13 Kosciusko place, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Star theatre, New Brighton, Staten Island.

THE qualitative methods of color sensitometry are more readily within the scope of the amateur or occasional investigator than are the quantitative methods, and while not comparable in exactitude to the results secured by plotting the photometrically measured densities of plates exposed and developed by standardized methods, the results of qualitative measurement, if scientifically and accurately carried out, will nevertheless yield useful data concerning the spectral sensitiveness of photographic emulsions.

The simplest method of qualitative color sensitometry is undoubtedly the exposure of the plate or film to be tested behind an integrating sensitometer, such, for instance, as the Chapman-Jones Plate Speed Tester. This device was briefly described in our previous article on sensitometry, but it will be advisable to outline more explicitly the use of this device in investigating the color-sensitiveness of photographic emulsions.

Besides the twenty-five squares of increasing density (used in ordinary sensitometry), the Chapman-Jones testing plate is provided with a series of four colored squares (a red, a yellow, a green and a blue) and a neutral gray strip, all reduced to the same luminosity, and, in addition, there is another set of four squares transmitting monochromatic light of red, red-orange, green and blue color, respectively. A little consideration will now make it apparent that if a perfectly orthochromatic plate (one equally sensitive to all spectral colors) is exposed behind such a sensitometer, the four color patches and the gray strip, which are of equal luminosity, will be represented on the developed test plate by a series of deposits of equal density. The four monochromatic tints of the Chapman-Jones sensitometer are, of course, useful in detecting the maxima and minima of color-sensitive emulsions.

We have next to consider the ingenious system of color sensitometry devised by M. Edouard Belin, a noted French investigator on the photographic processes.[1]

In Belin's method of spectro-sensitometry a spectrum produced with a diffraction grating (normal spectrum), and the usual spectroscopic accessories, is received on the plate to be tested, which latter is situated at the focal-plane of a spectrograph. There is no novelty in making straight exposures to the spectrum on photographic plates, but Belin proposed to have the spectroscopic slit of his spectrograph unequally illuminated from end to end, or, in other words, to decrease by a variable aperture the effective width of the slit when making test-exposures.

This he accomplished by rotating, during exposure, a small sector-disc having openings of varying width before the slit of his spectrograph. A little explanation will be necessary to make this principle clear, reference being had to Fig. 2. It was shown in a recent article how a graduated series of exposures, having a definite relationship to each other, were secured in H. & D. sensitometry by rotating before the sensitive plate a sector-wheel having a series of nine apertures of geometrically increasing angular width. In the method of spectro-sensitometry devised by Belin the sector-wheel is rotated in front of the slit of the spectrograph, and instead of nine apertures in Belin's rotating sector there are seven apertures. The angular extent of these seven apertures increases in powers of two (geometrical progression), as in the case of Hurter and Driffield's sector-wheel, but, as Fig. 2 shows, the apertures are distributed on opposite sides of Belin's disc; one side containing the equivalent of four apertures, while the other side of the disc bears the remaining three. Instead of being in the form of angular steps, these apertures are cut out in the form of smooth curves which join the points of the successive angles as laid out preparatory to cutting the sector-wheel. (See Fig. of H. & D. wheel in article "Sensitometry.") The disc as prepared by Belin, Fig. 2, is reminiscent of the older form of Scheiner wheel, and it is apparent upon consideration that with a sector-wheel having its increasing angular apertures joined in the form of a curve, a photographic plate may be given a series of exposures of gradually decreasing intensity without any dividing lines between the varying exposures, as in the case of the H. & D. sector. Aside from the use of these wheels in sensitometry, they may be used in preparing graduated black wedges for various photographic and scientific purposes.

It is apparent that by using such a sector-disc as is shown in Fig. 2 before the slit of a spectrograph, the exposure can be gradually diminished from top to bottom of the spectrum photographed, and when an exposure to the spectrum has been made, using such apparatus, the developed result will show a wavy outline which represents the maxima and minima of the spectral sensitiveness of the emulsion, and is more or less an approximation to the sensitiveness-curve which would be secured by measuring the densities of a plate of like variety exposed straight to the spectrum and plotting the densities against wave-length on a suitable chart.

This wavy deposit on the test-plate would tell us nothing definite, however, unless the spectrum to which the plate was exposed is exactly oriented against the contours of the developed image. Accordingly a scale-plate is prepared, by photographing a line-spectrum in the spectrograph (with the slit closed to a narrow opening) and then ruling an exactly spaced copy of this line-spectrum upon a clean transparent plate of glass. In addition to laying off the prominent Fraunhofer lines along the abscissa axis of the scale-plate, it is also necessary to lay off a series of seven equally spaced transverse lines, or ordinates, which correspond to the seven successive apertures in the rotating sector-wheel.

The line-spectrum is produced on a photographic plate by placing a Bunsen flame before the slit of the spectrograph and burning the salts of Sodium, Potassium, Lithium, etc., in the flame, and some prominent lines are also secured by burning Magnesium ribbon before the spectroscopic slit. The completed scale-plate (ruled on glass) is placed in contact with the photographic plate to be tested, and when inserted into the spectrograph the scale-plate must be accurately adjusted by observing a line spectrum produced with the spectrograph and bringing certain designated lines on the scale-plate into exact incidence with the corresponding spectral lines at their point of incidence in the focal-plane of the apparatus.

When a test exposure has been made to the spectrum behind the scale-plate, the resulting negative bears an exact copy of the lines on the scale-plate and represents the extent of the spectrum to which the emulsion is sensitive; while by reference to the transverse lines, or ordinates, a fairly accurate quantitative estimate may be formed of the degree of sensitiveness to various colors which the emulsion possesses. This method of spectro-sensitometry evolved by Belin is a most interesting one to practise, and is also very serviceable in practical research work.

The next method of spectro-sensitometry which we shall mention is similar in basic principle to the method of Belin, and was proposed by Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees and Mr. S. H. Wratten.[2]

The spectrograph used by Messrs. Mees and Wratten was the very favorably known Spectroscopic Camera, designed by Alex. A. K. Tallent and manufactured by A. W. Penrose & Co., Ltd., 109 Farringdon Road, London, England. (Messrs. Penrose issue gratis an interesting booklet describing and illustrating this instrument.)

Briefly, the Spectroscopic Camera consists of a light-tight box at the back of which the plate to be tested is received in a special plate-holder. The scale-plate is mounted, just before the sensitive plate, at the focal-plane of the instrument. At the front of the camera is an adjustable spectroscopic slit, and at the proper distance behind the slit is a brass receptacle in which are mounted: the usual collimator-lens; a Thorp replica of a Rowland diffraction grating, mounted on the sloping side of a right-angled prism; and behind this an objective lens which projects the grating spectrum onto the photographic plate at the back of the camera.

Now we have previously seen that by gradually decreasing the illumination from top to bottom of the spectrograph slit, we can secure negative records of the spectral sensitiveness of the plates exposed which have the form of curves showing various heights at different parts of the spectrum. Belin produced a gradual increase in illumination from top to bottom of his spectrographic slit by the use of the sector-wheel already described, while the same end was achieved by Dr. Mees (loc. cit.) by placing before the slit of the Tallent spectrograph a small wedge of "neutral-tint" black glass of such slope that the light transmitted from the thin end to the thick end of the wedge varied as 1: 10,000. In order to avoid refraction effects, due to the prismatic shape of this black glass wedge, it was cemented with Balsam to an exactly similar wedge made of clear optical glass of identical index.

Spectrograms (as they are called) taken through the black glass wedge show the same wavy outline as those taken with Belin's sector-wheel apparatus, and the "neutral-tint" wedge has become very popular on account of its ease in manipulation. There is, however, a serious drawback to the use of the black glass wedge in accurate spectrographic work of any nature; none of the so-called "neutral-tint" black glass is really a neutral black. The nearest approach to black glass which one can secure is of a blue-violet color when closely examined. It will be appreciated that no glass or similar medium could show color without absorbing its complementary, hence the results through these wedges are incorrect in the green, yellow and red. The wedge, although very convenient to use, is therefore inferior in accuracy to a sector-wheel which transmits the exposing light without any selective absorption. It is difficult to cut a sector-wheel with accuracy, but it is by no means impossible to have an accurate sector-disc prepared by a competent instrument maker.

The advantages of Belin's system of spectro-sensitometry have been taken into consideration by Mr. R. James Wallace, who has designed a rotating logarithmic aperture, or sector, which is revolved in front of the slit of the Wallace Diffraction Spectrograph (described last week) when making tests of the color-sensitiveness of photographic emulsions.

The Wallace logarithmic rotating sector is not a copy of Belin's sector-wheel, however, although it operates upon the same principle. In Fig. 3 is shown the form of the Wallace sector-disc; the illustration being a contact print from an actual disc. It is apparent from Fig. 3 that the disc is laid out in a manner similar to Hurter and Driffield's wheel, with the exception that in order to facilitate adjustment of the sector-disc before the slit of the spectrograph the successive apertures do not commence at the center of the disc, but are placed near its edge. The correct angular values can still be given the various segments comprising the complete aperture, which only needs to be as wide as the slit of the spectrograph. Instead of nine successive apertures, as in the H. & D. sector-wheel, there are only eight apertures in the Wallace disc, but the angular value of these apertures increases in powers of two, just as in the case of the Hurter wheel. When the apertures have been laid out, their angular points are joined in the form of a smooth curve and this segment is cut out entire, leaving an aperture of the shape shown in Fig. 3. It makes a somewhat better balanced wheel if the center or 180° segment is divided into two, half being cut from one semi-diameter of the disc and the other half from the opposite semi-diameter. The form of disc shown will be found serviceable in practice, however. A scale-plate must of course be prepared in the spectro-graph and adjusted to the instrument for use with this logarithmic sector-wheel. In this instance there will be eight horizontal

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

How Many Copies of "Over There" Can Feist Sell?

ON Saturday morning, November 4, E. F. Bitner, general manager for Leo Feist, walked up to William Jerome's publishing office and delivered a check for $25,000 in payment for "Over There." And before noon Mr. Bitner had seventeen different publicity angles working on the song that few ever dream about.

Just now every one appears to be wondering how Mr. Feist and his sagacious manager are going to realize a profit from a song that has already sold half a million copies. To Feist and Bitner it looks like a simple matter to sell an additional million and a half copies, and possibly two million, because they have an efficient professional department headed by Phil Kornhiser, have the distribution of sheet music down to a science, and conduct publicity campaigns, in addition to their expensive advertising methods, which are far above anything that has ever been seen in the popular sheet music business. And the peculiar feature about it is that Feist has no monopoly of this sort of business, except that he and Bitner realize the full value of publicity and leave no stone unturned to see that every song they bring out gets its full share.

L. Wolfe Gilbert is a firm believer in the Feist method, but he has never had a free hand to experiment. In a very short time, however, he and Anatol Friedland will enter the publishing end, and it is ten to one that Gilbert's modern ideas about song publishing will bring him to the front in record time. And to make sure that he will not have to worry about the business end very much he has engaged Harry Goodwin, formerly advertising manager for Joseph W. Stern, to look after the business end.

Mr. Sherwood, professional manager for the McKinley Music Company, is another energetic man who thinks that the Feist method of investing money in advertising and publicity is a sane one, and instead of dreaming his time away he is constantly devising ways and means as to how he can get his firm's publications the greatest amount of publicity. He has invented a few wrinkles of his own that are bringing wonderful results, but he does not want to see them told in print. The big sales of "Way Down in Macon, Georgie, I'll Be Makin' Georgia Mine," and "America" have satisfied his firm that his new ideas are all right.

The old idea of putting out a song and letting it ride of its own accord has become obsolete with most of the big publishers. There is nothing new in the system of getting behind a song and pushing it on every side, for this stuff has made the big corporations in other lines just what they are. And the man who does not believe in the get-up-and-get-after plan usually falls into the discard, be he a merchant, a publisher or a cobbler. Be satisfied with what you have belongs to the past century. A moving picture exhibitor in a western town had believed in old methods for a long time and was contented with the profits he made from antique films. Then one day he became ambitious. He heard that a big feature was coming out, one that was causing a lot of talk, so he collected all his own funds, borrowed from every one he knew, and although some of his friends called him crazy he gambled with the feature and won out. Today he will take nothing but the best and pays top-notch prices.

When you are a winner the crowd will follow you, and the secret of success is to grab the makings of another winner while you have one in your hands. And the best way to become a winner is to get the goods and then let the public know that you have them. When the public comes to buy your goods act as if you really enjoyed doing business. E. M. WICKES.

Edw. A. Zorn—The "Rothapfel" of Toledo

EDW. A. ZORN, general manager of the Temple and the Alhambra theatres in Toledo, deserves the compliment of being called "The Toledo Rothapfel." He has achieved a remarkable standard in exhibiting pictures and in developing wonderful ideas as to how to get the people into his theatres.

A well-known exhibitor recently remarked that "There are plenty of human beings that would like to see a good picture, but most exhibitors don't know how to get them into their theatres."

Edw. A. Zorn knows how. He has given the people of Toledo two "temples of art"; he has given them double and three times the value of their money; he gives ten shows in one—pictures, music, science, art, education, etc.

He just received an invitation from this moving picture Belasco of Toledo to attend one of his concerts, "Morning Musicale" (as he calls it). He will not write any comments on the selection of the program selected for this occasion, but as an example of highest efficiency in managing a motion picture theatre, he suggests that exhibitors read the following program, and take an example from Edw. A. Zorn of Toledo.

General Comments

JAMES CASSEY, who wrote "Sing Me a Song of the Sunny South" some years ago, has opened an office at 145 West Forty-fifth street, and has installed Miss Gertrude Baum to look after the business. Miss Baum has been with Joseph W. Stern for several years and knows every phase of the business. Mr. Casey has just brought out a novelty song called "Come Along Ma Honey," which carries a double melody, the original and the melody of "Down Upon the Suwanee." The song has been recorded on the Q. R. R. rolls and several other instruments. It is an excellent number for quiet situations in photoplays.

In a week or ten days Mr. Casey will leave for a trip through the West, where his numbers, including "After the War Is Over" and "My Hawaii Is Calling Me," are enjoying big sales.

Fred Vandersloot Has a Novelty

MR. VANDERSLOOT has a novelty in "Snowflake-Christmas Chimes," which was issued in October. This is also a double number, two song in one. "Christmas Chimes Reverie," published in 1915, has sold more than half a million copies. From now until Christmas Fred expects to sell at least another two hundred thousand copies. Vandersloot's big winner is "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight," which has just been recorded for the Victor by Fred Reimers.

White Music Company Doing Well in Boston

MR. JAMES S. WHITE, head of the White Music Company of Boston, sends in word that his "W-I-L-S-O-N" number is selling far beyond his expectations, and what pleases him immensely is the fact that in most of the moving picture houses he visits he hears it played and hummed by the audience.

Joseph W. Stern & Company will be an open house in the future for all song writers. The other day Jack Mahoney was seen coming from the office, smiling, and Jack seldom even grins coming from a publisher unless he is after getting an advance royalty on one of his songs.

Fred Forster has a wonderful number in "Missouri Waltz," but he does not know that it has bothered L. Gladys Fuller, a young woman living in the West, to such an extent that she has written a song about the way it follows her wherever she goes. Forster has just brought out another novelty number in "Any Old Horse Knows His Own Way Home." Fred has set out to be as big as any publisher in the business, and in the future one hit at a time will not satisfy him. These are the instructions he sent to Maurice Ritter, his New York professional manager.

"Good-Bye Broadway, Hello France," Still Winning Contests

THIS song is still going strong out West, and at a contest in Detroit a short time ago was put on at the last moment and took first prize against a raft of other good numbers. Since then it has won several other contests.

Leo Feist will have another $5,000 advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post issue of November 15.

C. Arthur Pfeiffer of Quincy, Ill., sends in word that his "We're Going Over" has taken a wonderful jump and he is having his hands full supplying performers and the trade. Pfeiffer, by the way, is one of the small publishers who keep everlastingly at it.

Musical Review of Latest Publications

2—"In a Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe. A very attractive melody of pathetic character.. (Vanderlost Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

3—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's Here," by Theodore Morse. Every musician knows the famous old song hit, "We Won't Come Home Till Morning." "Hail, Hail" is better. (Leo Feist Edition.)

7—"Chasing the Chickens," a great Jazz number. (Published by Forster Music Co., Chicago, Ill.).

8—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. An attractive and new Intermezzo, melodious and most appropriate for love scenes. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

lines, or ordinates, required on the scale-plate, corresponding to the eight segments represented by the sector aperture. The spectrum lines, for orientation, are produced on the scale-plate in the same manner as has been previously outlined.

Fig. 4 shows a Wallace Diffraction Spectrograph with the rotating logarithmic sector-wheel driven by a small motor, and the plate-holder in place for making exposures. By reference to the diagram, Fig. 1 (last week's iustallment), it will be noted that the spectrum is produced vertically (with respect to the axis of the instrument) in the Wallace spectrograph, instead of horizontally, as with most spectroscopic cameras and spectrographs.

The appearance of a spectrogram taken with the aid of the rotating logarithmic sector wheel is shown by Fig. 5, which represents the extent and degree of the spectral sensitiveness of a panchromatic emulsion. When photographing these spectrograms the slit of the spectrograph is opened wide, to shorten the exposure and prevent the formation of a line-spectrum, which is not required in this phase of the work. Another important item in this class of spectro-sensitometry is the length of the exposure given. The exposures should be just sufficient to yield a developable image, for with prolonged exposures a red-sensitiveness may be recorded which the plate being tested does not really possess.

By mounting photographic color-filters before the spectrograph, and exposing through them on suitably sensitized plates, the spectrum transmissions and absorptions, or "cuts" of the filters may be recorded with the same degree of approximation to their spectro-photometric absorption curves.

Kehrlein Adds New House to Kinema Circuit

THE Kehrlein Kinema circuit announces the opening in the near future of its third theatre on the Pacific coast, the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles, now under construction at the fountain head of Los Angeles' new shopping centre at Seventh street and Grand avenue, with a seating capacity of 2,500.

If the unusually brilliant successes of the Kinema theatres at Oakland and Fresno may be taken as fitting criteria of the enterprise of the Kehrlein interests their entrance into the theatrical field of the sunny southwestern metropolis will create quite a stir there.

New Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., will guide the destinies of the Los Angeles Kinema and will as heretofore emphasize thoroughly his ideals as to courteous service and the harmonious blending of incidental music with the individual spirit of each photodrama produced.

The exterior of the Kinema in point of architectural beauty, has few equals in its majestic aspect anywhere, the structure being in design pure Italian renaissance. Its huge colonnades lend an impressive strength to its outlines, tempered by the ethereal splendor of the graceful curves in its myriad of Della Robbia frescoing.

Over the marquee, itself a tribute to the craftsmanship which fashioned it, are three Venetian windows, imposing in themselves, bat fading into repose between the mighty colannades. Above these are three more latticed windows of smaller proportions, representing the outlook from the executive offices. The entire building will remind one who has travelled in Italy of the Doge's palace at Venice, and this impression will be enhanced by the weird cloud of glowing red steam flowing silently at nighttime from the delicately carved stone vessels at opposite ends of the facade.

The patrons will pass through a tiled lobby into a luxuriously appointed foyer, modeled after that of the Comedie Francaise at Paris. In the centre, directly confronting one's entrance, is the grand escalier, reminiscent of the Grand Opera House, Paris, leading to the mezzanine floor, promenade and drawing room. The promenade, at the head of the staircase, is faced with Venetian mirrors, which reflect the drawing room across, a room conspicuous for the well selected paintings and etchings hung on its walls, for its divans, and its woodwork of a delicate greenish tint.

At opposite ends of the drawing room are the rest rooms, on the right, milady's, a beautiful melange of silver, black and rose, where the feministic element may find combs and brushes, hairpins and manicure sets, all arrayed on French dressing tables with the accompanying mirrors, and on the left her escort's. Public telephones are an added innovation to the complement of both milady's dressing room and the lounging room of monsieur. The latter adheres to a more severe type, being done in oak, a style more befitting the requisites of the male contingent.

A strong feature of the Kinema is its comparatively flat balcony, with its seating capacity of 1,000. This flat balcony is, like the rest of the building, of reinforced concrete construction. It is 75 feet wide and 102 feet from front to rear. The slope is of easy grade because of the entire balcony being carried on four huge reinforced concrete cantilevers running lengthwise of the building. The cantilevers are supported by two massive concrete columns built in the side walls and by an immense concrete girder that runs between these two verticals horizontally. Two of them rest directly on the columns. In the entire interior of the Kinema there is not a single obstruction owing to the cantilever construction system.

The color scheme of the entire interior is of taupe, rose and purple, the latter exemplified in a thick carpeting of royal purple and the velvet curtain of the same hue. The lighting system reveals an artistry almost incomparable in its effect of producing a rich, warm glow, sometimes rising to the splendor of the sun at high noon.

Kansas City to Get New Theatre

KANSAS CITY, MO., is to have one of the handsomest motion picture houses in the Middle West, according to the plans completed by A. E. Elliott, who holds a 99-year lease on the property at 205-207 East Twelfth street, in the business section of the city. Clifton B. Sloan, architect, has completed the plans for a photoplay house which will cost in excess of $50,000.

Mr. Elliott announces that the present building would be razed when sub-leases expire next May and that in the interval footings would be sunk so that the construction of the building could be carried on in record time. Mr. Sloan, the architect, has designed the footings and steel frame with a view to the erection later of a ten-story building on the property.

The theatre building will be 38½ x 76 feet. The first floor will be planned to seat 420 persons and the balcony 280, giving a seating capacity of 700.

The tail feathers of the peacock, which Mr. Sloan has made the crowning feature of the exterior design, will form a thirty-foot semi-circle.

The proposed theatre is to be just west of the Regent theatre.

"Berkshire Gateway" Boasts Fine House

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass., boasts of a theatre that would do credit to one of the biggest cities of the country. Located in "the Gateway of the Berkshires" and in a section where the theatre can appeal to high class patronage, the Mahaiwe is attractive not only in its Indian name, but in the manner in which it is conducted by its efficient manager, Earl B. Raifstanger.

With a seating capacity of 1,000 it is the most completely equipped house in the Berkshire country and is owned by L. F. Raifstanger, father of the young manager. The house is located in the business section, at No. 14 Castle street, and occupies 100 by 150 feet. The building, which is built of brick and stone, was erected in 1908.

The interior of the house is attractive with stucco decorations. Two Power 6-A machines supply the projection 95 feet to a heavy canvas treated screen. The lobby is 28 by 50 and National Cash Register Machines are used in the ticket booth. There is a three piece orchestra and especial attention is paid to the music.

Seven reels are shown at each show, of which there are four daily. Admission in the afternoon is 5 and 10 cents and 10 and 15 in the evening. Metro, Vitagraph, World, Pathe and Special features are used. The theatre advertises through the newspapers, an excellent house organ and on billboards.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARKANSAS

Plans for the new Government theatre to be built at Camp Pike were received recently, and Major John R. Fordyce, construction quartermaster, immediately ordered building material. The building will be 120 by 196 feet, with a seating capacity of 3,000 and a stage 26 by 35 feet. It will be located on 14L street, about 600 feet north of the railroad. Edward L. Tilton, of New York, is the architect.

J. H. Barncord opened his new Opera House, at Winslow, Saturday a week ago with the best motion pictures obtainable. A complete heating system has been installed, also every new device for his patrons' comfort.

Work was begun a few days ago on the Government theatre at Camp Pike, near Little Rock, Ark. The building will have a seating capacity of 3,000, and was designed by Edward L. Tilton, of New York City. The building will be completed by December 1.

CALIFORNIA

Geo. D. Carter, of Oakland, has leased the Evans Hall at Happy Camp, and will remodel it for a motion picture house, giving shows every Saturday night until further notice.

The Broadway Amusement Company has purchased the Illusion theatre, and will open that house shortly with top notch motion picture programs. The Broadway Amusement Company now controls three motion picture houses in San Diego, the Broadway, at Eighth and Broadway; the Superba, at Third and C streets; the Illusion, and the Strand theatre, at Coronado. This latter theatre and the Illusion are the latest acquisitions of the company.

Extensive work has been done on the interior and exterior of the Illusion theatre, new seats being placed inside, the auditorium rearranged, the entire house renovated and new ventilation installed. G. A. Bush, president of the company, states that the attractions at the new house will all be first class, first release photo drama and comedies, including each change a Triangle feature play.

The Bell theatre, at Laguna Bell, which has been closed for some time, will reopen very soon under the management of J. E. McPheeters.

The Auditorium theatre, at San Pedro, was opened a week ago, under the management of Elmer Workman and Carey Chandler, to capacity business.

Many workmen are still busy on the new theatre building in Exeter which, when finished, will be one of the finest small theatres in the county. Omar Jackson has the contract for making the change, and has sublet the brickwork to W. O. Rowley.

When finished this theatre will have a twenty-one-foot ceiling, which insures a good pure air regardless of the crowd. A space will be left for a balcony to be added as soon as business warrants building one. Manager Cook is doing his best to accommodate the theatregoing public, and his place of business should be liberally patronized.

Redwood City is to have a large amusement place. It is to be located in Germania Hall on Broadway, and is to be conducted by two enterprising local men, who have a lease from the Kuck estate. Carpenters are already at work renovating the interior of the building and putting it in shape for a grand opening in about two weeks.

The promoters of the enterprise intend having a first-class place in every respect, where the people of Redwood City and visitors can gather and enjoy themselves. Its main purpose will be to provide amusement and entertainment for the soldiers from Camp Fremont at a cost to them as low as possible. It will give enlisted men a suitable place to go when they come here to visit.

ILLINOIS

A modern up-to-date theatre, with a ground floor seating capacity of 1,000 seats will be built on the old City Hotel site on East Ryder street in Litchfield. W. B. Kneedler, of Collinsville, has purchased the property from Mrs. Elizabeth Lauber. The property runs 96 feet on Ryder street and 132 feet deep. Mr. Kneedler will build a fireproof building, the front to be two stories and will contain flats. The back part will be only one story. The theatre will be equipped to handle the largest road shows as well as to take care of moving pictures. It will be built of brick and concrete and will cost about $25,000.

IOWA

D. Earl Combs opened his new theatre, at Chariton, last week, and it is now assessed as one of the best equipped and most finely finished in the State.

Mrs. Victoria Dewey is making extensive improvements on the south side theatre building Chariton, formerly known as the Temple. A fine theatre front has been put in the building, and the inside is being remodeled and modernized. As soon as it is completed the Grand and Temple theatres will be consolidated, and will be known as the Lincoln theatre. She and Mesdames Becker and Bowen will hold joint ownership in the new Lincoln theatre. Ralph Becker has been manager of the Grand and recently of the Temple, but as he will soon enter the military service the management will be turned over to the new concern.

The Unity Investment Company, of Des Moines, Iowa, is contracting for the construction of a new theatre to cost $25,000.

W. F. Kucharo & Co. have let the contract for a new theatre at Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Iowa.

KENTUCKY

Marcus Loew, one of the foremost motion picture magnates of the United States, arrived in Louisville recently to complete arrangements for the establishment in Louisville or at Camp Zachary Taylor of a new motion picture theatre that will, it is said, surpass anything of the kind in this part of the country. Steps in this direction were begun when Mr. Loew was here some time ago, and it is expected that negotiations will be completed soon.

MAINE

A. S. Black is erecting the New Haines theatre at Waterville.

MASSACHUSETTS

The new motion picture theatre being erected at 41 Millbury avenue, Worcester, for B. I. Coonan, is rapidly nearing completion. The structure will be 186 by 191 feet, and will be of three stories. More and Yutan are the contractors.

Scanlon Bros. are considering the erection of a theatre on their large front on Monument square and Pleasant street, Leominster.

MICHIGAN

Cadillac is to have a new $50,000 vaudeville and motion picture theatre. A company that owns and operates a string of theatres in the Middle West purchased the offices of William Brothers Lumber Company and adjoining property, and operations were commenced last week.

NEW BRUNSWICK

Fred G. Spencer has just opened his splendid new theatre in Amherst, a local production, "Brown of Harvard," with the proceeds devoted to patriotic purposes being selected as the opening vehicle and playing to capacity business. The Empress, which will seat 1,000 people, is one of the best equipped theatres in the Maritime Provinces offering many novel features, and being thoroughly up to date in every respect. For the present it will play pictures, but will be available for road shows visiting that busy little Nova Scotia town.

NEW JERSEY

The Stanley vaudeville and motion picture house, at Wrightstown, is nearly completed, and will have a seating capacity of 1,800. The theatre will be opened this Wednesday afternoon.

NEW MEXICO

Work on the construction of the Park theatre, on Railroad street, Gallup, is progressing rapidly, and bids fair for completion by the first of the new year.

NEW YORK

James Kernan is erecting the new Liberty theatre at Park avenue and Liberty street, Syracuse.

The Scottish Rite Masons are planning to erect a moving picture at Yaphank.

The New Breglio theatre has been opened in Utica.

One of the biggest real estate sales that has taken place in Glens Falls in years was consummated a few days ago when F. F. Pruyn sold the Knickerbocker Block, better known as the old "opera house" block in Warren street to Fred E. Colburn and James R. Lockwood, of Burlington, Vt.

The new owners plan on remodeling the rear part of the block into a modern motion picture theatre. Mr. Colburn stated that he and Mr. Lockwood planned on expending about $25,000 for improvements to the building. While their plans have not been completed they expected to remodel the rear part of the building, so that the theatre will have a ground floor with the balcony and a seating capacity of about 1,400.

It was announced that the work of rebuilding the Lyric theatre, Watertown, which was badly burned at the time of the Charlebois Block fire about two weeks ago will be started within a few days. It has not been decided yet whether any changes in the plan of the theatre will be made. It will be continued under the management of Papayanakos Brothers.

A. C. Hilkert, the owner of the new Regent theatre, Geneva, which is being constructed from the old Johnson Opera House Building at Fall and Mynderse streets, stated that if the weather was favorable for the quick drying of masonry, he would be able to open the theatre on Thanksgiving Day as was originally planned. The construction work has reached a point now where the size and appointments of the new theatre are apparent. The work has also reached a state where a delay of a few days in the interior mason work will probably disrupt the opening plans.

OHIO

The Majestic Picture theatre, at Middletown, which was formerly the Eagle, having undergone an extensive titivation was opened to the public a few days ago, and Manager L. O. Dysert expressed himself as immensely pleased at the result.

The Union theatre, Cleveland, opened October 29. It is a beautiful little theatre, with accommodations for 500 people, and is under the management of George Treka.

The new house is equipped with a Simplex machine and a Danish Diamond screen, both of them supplied by the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Company of Cleveland.

C. H. Miles has opened the new Grand theatre, Cleveland, after an enforced shutdown, necessitated by extensive improvements and alterations. The result of these changes being that the Grand is practically a new house, everything in it being new. The shell alone stands to remind the public of olden times. The equipment is of the latest, and includes a Simplex projection machine, which was furnished by the Oliver Motion Picture Supply Company; a $25,000 organ, installed by Hillgreen, Lane & Co., from Alliance, Ohio; "Flexume" signs and a new marquis which was erected by Rutkowski & Co., of Cleveland.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Orpheum Moving Picture theatre on East Third street, Bethlehem, is undergoing improvements. A new front is being constructed, the seating capacity is being increased, and the interior is in the hands of decorators.

The Lincoln theatre, at 529 Lincoln avenue, Bellevue, has been opened to the public.

The Barnes is the name of a new moving picture theatre being erected at Ellwood City.

The Queen Lane Theatre Company has plans for the erection of a new $15,000 moving picture theatre to be known as the Queen, at Philadelphia.

J. H. De Johns has just opened his New Castle theatre, at McKees Rocks.

Horne & Wolfe are erecting a new Brushton theatre, at Brushton.

The new Jackson theatre has just been opened at York.

J. S. Higgins will shortly open his new Majestic theatre at Shamokin.

Preliminary plans are being made by Harry Stahl for starting work on the erection of a new vaudeville theatre on Idaho street, Farrell, to cost $15,000.

The contract to build the motion picture theatre at Queen Lane and Schuyler street, Philadelphia, for the Queen Lane Theatre Company, has been awarded to Alexander Chambley. The structure is to be one story and balcony.

Improvements costing several thousand dollars are to be made upon the Rex theatre, Farrell. David Garfunkel is owner of the building.

TENNESSEE

Through the conference in Memphis Wednesday of Marcus Loew, head of the Loew circuit of vaudeville theatres, and E. A. Schiller, Southern general manager, and local architects and builders, Memphis will in all probability get a larger theatre than was at first intended. Plans which had been tentatively accepted were altered by Mr. Loew, with the view of erecting his theatre here in anticipation of meeting the demand for years to come.

The new theatre, as now proposed, will seat 3,000 persons, and will be nearly a block in length. The total amount involved in the deal is given as approximately $800,000.

Negotiations for the site are practically closed, and when the altered plans are again considered, it is expected that the contracts for the construction of the new playhouse will be awarded.

Both Mr. Loew and Mr. Schiller left at night for New Orleans. Mr. Schiller will return within a few days to further plans for the proposed theatre.

VIRGINIA

W. J. Rahily has purchased the building at 16 North Sycamore street, Petersburg, and will remodel it into a moving picture theatre.

The Stewart Amusement Company has plans for the erection of a new $5,000 moving picture at Newport News.

J. C. Shore, S. W. Zimmer, J. L. Vaughan, and others are interested in the erection of a theatre near Camp Lee, Petersburg.

WEST VIRGINIA

J. C. Holt has had plans prepared for a new $7,000 motion picture theatre to be erected at Richwood.

Gentlemen;

I notice in your "close-up" of last week's box score showing the number of Power's in the Pacific Coast Studios that you have the studio of the Bernstein Film Productions classed among "other makes".

Whoever "kept score" evidently committed an "error"when it came to us as we have always used a Powers. In fact I installed the first Powers in the Universal Coast Studio.

Kindly make this correction as we dont want to be classed among the "Other Makes". There is only one machine when you want real projection.

Very truly yours,

SIX JEWELS FOR YOUR COLLECTION

"THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME," created by Lois Weber from Marion Orth's story "The Whim" is the most affecting picture ever made of Woman's struggle against illicit pleasure and clothes. Features Mildred Harris and Kenneth Harlan in settings so marvelously enriched by sympathetic detail as to reveal at first sight the master-touch of the Belasco of the Screen. At the Broadway Theatre—a triumphant success. Just released.

"The Man Without A Country"

Endorsed by the Committee on National Defense as the greatest patriotism-maker ever offered the American public. The modern version of the deathless masterpiece of Edward Everett Hale.

"Pay Me"

Dorothy Phillips in a 7-reel drama of the West that grips like a Grizzly. Punch, power and pressure at their highest notch.

"The Co-Respondent"

Elaine Hammerstein and Wilfred Lucas in a $50,000 publicity driven drama of modern newspaper life made by Ralph Ince from the stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman.

"Come Through"

Herbert Rawlinson in George Bronson Howard's mightiest melodrama. The Critics said:—"The best suspense drama New York has had for years."

"Sirens of the Sea"

Louise Lovely, Carmel Myers and countless Venus-formed maidens in a ravishing dream of female loveliness. Glorious diving nymphs enticing a young man of to-day into the magic grottos of the sea where they sport unrestrained by society's conventions. The Picture Magnificent—6 Reels.

SIR GILBERT PARKER
Picturized and personally directed
by J. STUART BLACKTON

An Unbroken Record of Successes

J. Stuart Blackton's every picture has been a profitable one for exhibitors.

With greater stars than he has ever used before—Conway Tearle, Violet Heming, and Wilfred Lucas, with the work of one of the world's greatest authors—Sir Gilbert Parker—on which to base his story, and with his own genius ripened to its fullest prime, it is only reasonable to assume that "The Judgment House" will be another link in his unbroken chain of successes.

This picture deserves all the publicity you can give it—and a longer than average run.

ROSCOE "FATTY" ARBUCKLE

in "FATTY in CONEY ISLAND"

What the Exhibitors Think of "Fatty"

The surest proof of a star's value is the exhibitors' commendation. The box office is always right.

Here is the box-office viewpoint

To save the roof, I opened all the doors and gave the streams full vent. People one or two blocks away heard the enthusiasm and came to the Crystal, taking their place in line to wait for seats. —CRYSTAL THEATRE, Walton McNeel, Mgr., Burlington, Wis.

Had to close my doors for the first shows.—ORPHEUM THEATRE, T. C. Johnson, Prop., Reedsburg, Wis.

Intend to rebook it later in the season.—ROYAL THEATRE, Cruse & King, Props., Calumet, Mich.

If "Fatty's" earlier pictures inspired this approbation, you are certainly safe in plunging heavy on "Fatty in Coney," which is, without a doubt, the greatest Arbuckle picture ever released.

Are you sure your "run" is long enough?

Dear Mr. Sherry:

We ran the second episode of Who is "Number One?" yesterday and I want you to know how well pleased I am with the Serial. We had great crowds all day and from the enthusiasm they showed I know they are coming back.

Paramount is making a mighty good start in the serial line and my only regret is that it was impossible for me to get three days instead of one.

An Advertisement by W. W. Hodkinson

THE OLDEST CONCERN IN THE BUSINESS

The hundreds of friends who have written and telegraphed congratulations on the organization of the "new" W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, suggest these thoughts to me.

This company is not new. It is ten years old. It is the oldest concern with a continuous history of ONE CONSISTENT POLICY and one fairly consistent head that the trade has seen or seems likely to see.

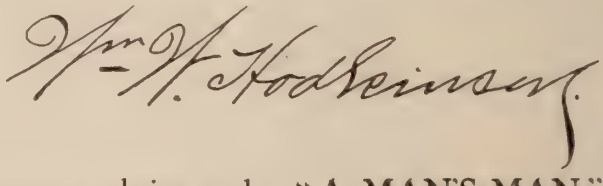
Only in corporate form are we new. Our ideals and our policies are as old as my experience in the business.

I have talked with exhibitors for ten years, and I number by thousands those who believe in me and in my understanding and sympathy with their problems.

For the others, I set down here the exhibitor experience which followed the four big steps listed last week. The records will bear out every statement I make.

In 1907, in Ogden, Utah, my exhibitor rivals followed me with programs running a full week, —and made more money.

In San Francisco in 1911, the tri-weekly change, with non-conflict, uniform age, scheduled films, bettered the service of the big houses and saved the lives of the little ones.



The "Progressive" exchange system of 1913 built the Pacific Coast into the greatest motion picture territory in the world for exhibitors as well as producers.

During my presidency of Paramount, the feature picture was definitely established as the solid basis of the business, and my policy of exhibitor protection and a dependable program put literal thousands of exhibitors into Dun and Bradstreet with ratings into the millions.

Not one of my plans has been a rehash of the old—nor are my plans of today like, in detail, anything that I have ever offered before. But each has been grounded on the same eternal principles of fairness, cooperation and inter-dependence. Each grew with the business; each was adapted to and looked beyond the crisis of the moment.

Today, again, my plan faces and looks beyond the present crisis. It does more than that. In the past my progress has been made in opposition to the elements which ruled the business and to the elements which surrounded me.

Today, in full control of my organization, free to select the greatest pictures and distribute them in a way worth while, I have also eliminated all the elements which could possibly obstruct me. Today you are dealing alone with Bookings for the first two Paralta Plays are now being made: "A MAN'S MAN," with Mr. J. Warren Kerrigan, and "MADAM WHO?", with Miss Bessie Barriscale. Write the home office.

The decorative sub-title has long been a familiar photo-play expedient, but there have been constant improvements of which the kind used in "The Manx-Man" is an important form. "The Auction Block" At Your Regular Rental EXHIBITORS at this moment need all of the powerful productions that producing organizations can give them to offset war taxes and purely temporary conditions.

Goldwyn therefore announces that Rex Beach's remarkable and costly production, "The Auction Block," will be released to all Goldwyn contract exhibitors December 2nd, at the regular rental prices paid by them for the Goldwyn productions.

We have paid the Rex Beach corporation a tremendous sum for the right to release "The Auction Block" under these conditions as a substitute for Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg." Miss Normand's first picture contains military material that officials deem it unwise to reveal at this time. To avoid embarrassing our government in any way "Joan of Plattsburg" will be held until the proper changes can be made in the story.

Never before has a Rex Beach production been available to exhibitors except at advanced prices and Goldwyn makes the statement that never again will exhibitors have the opportunity to book a Rex Beach picture under such conditions as these.

On the opposite page exhibitors may see for themselves the immense profit-making opportunities afforded them by the next four Goldwyn releases.

No Other Company Ever Did This For You

THINK of the power, the liberality and the bigness of a producing company that offers in straight succession to exhibitors such an array of remarkable productions as these:

November 18: MADGE KENNEDY in "NEARLY MARRIED" by Edgar Selwyn. All exhibitors liked this young and appealing star in "Baby Mine." Your public will like her still more in "Nearly Married" because it is a greater picture.

December 2: REX BEACH'S greatest story, "THE AUCTION BLOCK." You remember the profits you made on "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well" and "The Barrier"? You will do a still bigger business with "The Auction Block." It is the biggest of all Rex Beach productions.

December 16: MAE MARSH in "THE CINDERELLA MAN," from Oliver Morosco's stage success by Edward Childs Carpenter. More beautiful and appealing than "Polly of the Circus." George Loane Tucker directed this, the greatest Mae Marsh production ever made.

December 30: MARY GARDEN in "THAIS," by ANATOLE FRANCE. First appearance on the screen of one of the world's greatest personalities in the most widely known of all modern stories. "Thais" gave Mary Garden her greatest international fame.

Any theatre on earth could make a success and play to capacity audiences with these four productions, each of which has cost a fortune. At no performances will you be able to accommodate the crowds at the box-office. Think of getting productions like these at regular contract rentals. Only Goldwyn does things like these for its exhibitors.

November 7, 1917.

A copy of this letter will be sent to every known moving picture exhibito in the United States. It is written in an effort to mobilize, during the week i which Thanksgiving Day occurs, all of the tremendous force of the combined effort of moving picture theatres in this country in support of a nation-wide movement to supply our soldiers at the front with tobacco.

This national movement was organized and is maintained by OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND, 25 West 44th Street, New York City, to which hundreds of newspapers, magazines and trade journals throughout the country have lent their powerfu support. Scores of tons of tobacco have already been shipped to the boys at the Front. Hundreds of tons will be needed. The tobacco is supplied at cost by the greatest tobacco companies in the country acting in cooperation. Labor, transportation, office facilities - everything is donated. Not one cent contributed is spent for anything but tobacco at cost of manufacture. Every dollar contributed purchases two dollars' worth of tobacco at retail price. THERE IS NO WASTE.

THE RIALTO of New York City has investigated the entire project with the utmost care and respectfully invites your sincere cooperation. THE RIALTO will contribute 5% of its gross receipts to OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND during the week beginning Sunday, November 25th, 1917, and urges you to do the same.

Write TODAY to OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND, notifying them that you will do this. Our fighting men SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE will know and will not forget. DO YOUR BIT.

MR. AND Mrs. Sidney Drew.
SOMEWHERE IN New York.
DEAR FOLKS.
I'VE NEVER met you.
AND ON my paths.
ABOUT NEW York.
I'VE NEVER seen you.
BUT SOMEHOW.
I HAVE a feeling.
THAT WE'RE friends.
AND THAT some day.
WE'LL JUST sit down.
AND START right in.
WITHOUT ANY preliminaries.
OR ANYTHING.
AND JUST be friends.
AND WE probably won't.
BUT ALWAYS.
THERE'LL BE that feeling.
AND I'LL know about it.
AND SO will you.
BECAUSE IT must be.
THAT WHEN folks
GIVE SO much pleasure.
OF A clean.
AND HEALTHY.
AND WHOLESOME sort
AS YOU give.
THAT IN return.
THERE MUST come back.
A CONSCIOUSNESS.
OF THE friends you make.
AND FOR months.
I'VE WANTED to tell you.
THAT WHENEVER it happens.
I SEE your pictures.
IN A picture house.
I COME away.
WITH A desire.
TO SIT right down.
AND WRITE you.
AND TELL you.
JUST HOW much.
A LOT of folks.
AND THEIR wives.
WOULD LIKE you to know.
THAT IN that part.
OF THEIR hearts.
THAT THEY keep for the folks
WHO BRING them joy.
THERE'S MRS. Drew
AND MR. Drew.
AND I'VE wanted to tell you.
THAT THOSE of us.
WHO HAVE children
ARE NEVER ashamed.
TO LET the kids.
LOOK INTO that part.
OF OUR hearts.
AND SEE you there.
AND THOSE are the things.
THAT I'VE wanted to say.
AND THIS morning.
WHEN SOME poor man
WITHOUT A soul.
ASKS YOU.
HOW MUCH it cost.
TO GET in here.
THE WAY you have.
JUST TELL him.
THAT ALL it cost.
WAS A cleanly mind.
AND ITS use.
IN THE things you do.

I THANK you.

"Me and My Dog"

Sets a Record for Applause at the 'Rialto Theatre'

B'way New York

Seeing the "Rialto"
With S. L. Rothapfel

(Reprint Motion Picture News, Nov. 24th)

"Me and My Dog," a scenic picture made by Robert C. Bruce for Educational, probably sets a record for applause at the Rialto this week. Five times during the showing of the picture there came great bursts of applause. It is really one of the most remarkable scenics that we have ever seen and it was put on with that care to music and lighting that makes the Rialto showings such successes. A man and his friend, the dog, see scenic wonders in Montana, Washington and Alaska. The subtitles are clever and there is a human touch all the way through that is appealing. Dr. Reisenfeld selected unusually attractive music for this scenic, playing selections from "The Queen of Sheba." And he also arranged a clever effect that took the house by storm, for at the end of the scenic he introduced a picture showing an Indian dance and then a river scene. The lighting effects during the scenic had become striking, the dome now becoming dark blue, with the proscenium red and the blue of the dome gradually fading into a pinkish center.

New York Globe

Says

Robert C. Bruce's scenic feature, "Me and My Dog," enjoys the rare distinction of calling forth repeated bursts of applause, a tribute to the magnificence of the mountain scenery it disclosed.

M. P. News

Says

Five times during the showing of the picture there came great bursts of applause.

Praised by every critic in all N. Y. newspapers.

ALL the newspapers in New York accorded "Me and My Dog" the compliment of being the greatest scenic picture ever shown. We also showed at the Strand Theatre, Broadway, New York, a Ditmars Living Book of Nature animal picture, "Enemies of the Garden." This is the 45th Ditmars picture shown at the "Strand" during the past year. Isn't this another record?

Mr. Exhibitor:—Your Safest guide for booking good pictures is by following the 'Rialto' and 'Strand' New York, Programs. This is your guarantee for big box office receipts.

THE PUBLIC MU

We have been criticized, in a friendly way, by several exhibitors and in an unfriendly way by others, because of the 15c per reel per day film tax.

The unfriendly critics say that we ought to pay this tax ourselves. They charge us with the lack of patriotism. They declare that we will ruin 50% of the exhibitors in this country if we pass the tax along to them. They assert that they cannot pass it along to the public because the public won't pay it.

The friendly critics tell us that we are quite right in passing the tax along to the public through the exhibitor, but that we made a serious blunder in not explaining the situation more carefully to the exhibitors. To this last charge we plead guilty.

Our only reason for not having told the story to the exhibitors sooner was that the tax took the whole Industry by surprise, for the Senate Finance Committee unanimously declared against the film tax, and from the information at hand we believed that the bill would emerge from the conference committee of the Senate and House devoid of such a tax. Thus we were left as confused and unable to act as all other branches of the Industry.

Moreover the tax went into effect on October 4th and was accruing against us while we were conferring with each other. To have attempted to confer with committees of exhibitors would have meant endless discussion and much delay, resulting in the accumulation of a burden that we could ill afford to assume.

We took too much for granted. We assumed the exhibitor would understand that it was a financial impossibility for us to pay $100,000 per week out of our own pockets, just as we understood from the beginning that it would be an impossibility for the exhibitor himself to pay the various taxes imposed on him.

Our whole idea has been to pass the tax along to the public, just as every other tax in the world is passed.

As for the charge that we have done an unpatriotic thing, we are satisfied to let the government say whether we have done our part or not.

But as for the claim that we will ruin fifty per cent of the exhibitors by asking them to pay about one dollar a day in film tax and pass even that small amount on to the public, it is absurd on its face. A far greater danger to the exhibitor lies in refusing to act as the channel for passing the tax along, thus forcing many of us to discontinue business. In such an event, with his source of film supply shut off, how long could any exhibitor stay in business? Not fifty per cent would have to quit, but one hundred per cent.

Furthermore, the public will not refuse to pay the tax.

It has not refused to pay the war tax on passenger fares, on Pullman accommodations, on telephone calls, on theatre admissions, on tobacco, on beverages, on bonds, on cameras; and it is even now paying the tax on chewing gum, cigars, cigarettes, deeds, express, radio messages, games, graphophones, insurance premiums, jewelry, playing cards, automobiles, patent medicines, letters and scores of other luxuries and necessities.

We do not say that we WON'T pay the tax. We say that we CAN'T.

We have not been arbitrary in the matter, regardless of what any exhibitor may think. We used the utmost care to determine whether our action was fair. We knew it was legal, but we considered fairness far more important than the mere legal right to pass the tax along to the public. We discussed the situation from every possible angle. We called in the best available experts to check our figures and prove their correctness.

ST PAY THE TAX

In spite of this we find that we have undercharged rather than overcharged.

Some of us even after we have collected every penny of the 15c per reel per day will still have to pay at least 33% of the tax out of our own funds. Some of the undersigned distributors have found that the charge to exhibitors should be 22c per reel per day instead of 15c.

The 15c charge is based on a figure which did not take into consideration the additional cost to do business in collecting the tax; additional billing clerks, additional bookkeeping because of additional entries in customers' accounts and additional employees in the auditing department of each home office because of the necessary increase in the auditing.

Furthermore, some day the tax will be taken off and at that time we will have released a great many subjects on which the tax must be paid, but which tax we will be unable to pass along to the public through the exhibitor or any other channel. Nor does the 15c charge take into consideration the fact that films of all ages are constantly being replenished. The undersigned companies must pay the tax on all the subjects which are being reprinted to take the place of worn out copies in various Exchanges, even though the subjects were originally released prior to October 4th.

We firmly believe that all distributors MUST pass the tax along. We believe that any distributor that claims to be paying the tax out of his own pocket is only seeking to get a little extra business at a critical time by posing as the friend of the exhibitor. We believe that such tactics are a menace to the distributor that does it and to the exhibitors, and thus to the whole industry. When the day of reckoning comes we can see nothing but disaster for those who play politics in such a crisis.

We urgently advise every exhibitor to start a campaign of education, impressing it upon his patrons that a higher admission price is bound to come, not only because of war taxes (and more taxes will come) but on account of the abnormal increases in all costs of producing and distributing pictures. Everything else in the line of luxuries or necessities is leaping up in price; but the moving picture business continues to serve the people at the same old figure, or, at most, a small advance.

A committee claiming to represent the exhibitors of the United States called upon us recently and threatened various sorts of action against us if we persisted in trying to pass the film tax along to the public through the exhibitors. It threatened to split the whole Industry open at a moment when there is the greatest need of power.

Does that committee represent YOU or do you feel that we have taken our action in the past in good faith and only because necessity compelled us to do so?

The government must and will have money. We can't pay it. You can't pay it. All we ask you to do is to open the way to pass it to the public, where all taxes must eventually go.

An Open Letter

To Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Daniel C. Roper

UNDER the heading "Show Managers Make a Profit," the following appeared in Sunday's New York World.

Just how some theatre proprietors have taken advantage of the new profit from their patrons is explained in a statement issued yesterday by W. H. Edwards, Collector of Internal Revenue for the New York district.

"It is done ingeniously," he asserts ' and the theatre-goer pays the raised price and often remains under the impression that the advance is entirely due to the war tax imposed. Thus a ticket for which the former rate was 50 cents is sold by the theatre for 60 cents, including the war tax. As a matter of fact the tax on a 50-cent ticket is 5 cents and the complete charge therefore should be 55 cents. The actual charge in these cases is 54 cents plus 6 cents as a war tax. Although the price, 54 cents, is printed on the ticket, yet due to the novelty of the new tax and the old sums involved, the customer is seldom aware that he has paid more than usual for the ticket itself."

It has been stated to the collector that this is done to enable the box-office to make change more readily by handling even sums. A great many moving picture houses have complained that business has fallen off considerably on account of the tax imposed. "There should be pasted in the window of every theatre and moving picture house," the collector says, 'that part which is paid for the tax and which for admission."

Stories to the same effect, based on Collector Edwards' statement, appeared in the other New York papers. Since the Associated Press two weeks ago carried similar war-profiteering tales on its wires from Chicago there is every likelihood of it giving country-wide publicity to Collector Edwards' declaration.

At the moment of writing we have not learned whether others of your deputies have taken to issuing "statements."

IT matters little. The spirit of protest plays but a small part in this letter.

A slight part, it is true. For in the collection of the admission tax the picture managers of the United State are working for Uncle Sam—just as surely as any of your deputies are, and at great expense and no pay. And when a lack of knowledge of true conditions prompts a further blow at their interests they may be pardoned a slight expression of complaint.

But rather is this open communication a request—an appeal. More strongly is it an effort to give you a clear understanding of the situation and then to show you a slight act by which you can give invaluable aid to an overburdened industry.

First to the knowledge. Such statements as that above would make it appear that the only reason back of a raise in admission price is a dishonest desire to collect profits under the guise of a tax—falst pretense.

Parenthetically we might say that there is an elemental reason why this could not be so. No swindler would attempt to secure money under false pretenses when it was necessary to explain to his victim that half of the money were being secured dishonestly.

Here are the facts:

* * * *

THE leading manufacturers and exhibitors of the country have been urgently advocating a raise in admission prices by the majority of theatres for over a year. The files of this trade paper will show a consistent fight to show the necessity of higher admission prices.

The theatres of the country are paying an average of 33 per cent—a conservative figure—more for their pictures than a year ago.

Music and other "better entertainment" features made necessary if an exhibitor is to survive have increased his operating expenses tremendously.

Posters and other advertising matter which a few years ago was given free to exhibitors must now be purchased at considerable cost. Carbons and other materials needed have sky-rocketed in price.

A seat tax has been paid to the Government since the beginning of the war in Europe. A tax on every reel of film shown is now asked because of the Government's excise levy on negative and positive film.

Every tax that affected other walks of business had its effect on the picture man. Along with all other citizens he saw every article used in his daily life advance in price.

Is it any wonder that higher admission prices were being urged? Is it any wonder that—

A serious percentage of the picture theatres of the nation looked forward to this winter facing a certain loss—at least half hoped for no better than an "even break."

Speaking Editorially:

Who Will Be in Washington?

TO the National Association, the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. we propound the question: Who will be in Washington in December?

If the purpose of the admission tax—the increase of revenue—is to be achieved, if the well being of the industry is to be safeguarded, there must be modifications and amendments in the present legislation.

A united front will secure them. But there must be unity—a singe representation. As individuals, exhibitors can do Trojan work with their local representatives, but at Washington there must be solidity of representation and action.

It is not too early to begin the formation of a committee that will be empowered and able to speak for all at Washington. It is not too early to begin work on a definite program of action, to decide on the main point and begin the drive toward it.

By way of parenthesis we might borrow the Paramount exhibitor slogan and advise the picture industry to "think big" at this moment. As a business of showmen we show little showmanship in our political undertakings.

The first lesson of Washington showmanship is to engage a "big name" that will at least gain the ear of the newspapers and public opinion for your cause.

Can the picture industry afford the services of a Charles Evans Hughes, a Samuel Untermyer, or other prominent legal light as the mouthpiece of its committee at Washington in December?

This is "thinking big," it is showmanship, politics, good business. And don't forget that there are few more important questions confronting the industry at the moment than—

Who will be in Washington in December?

The Short Arm of Service

IN a coming issue MOTION PICTURE NEWS will present some interesting fact-stories of the troubles of small-town picture managers as presented in their letters to us. Interesting they all are, a touch of humor here and there; under it all a near-pathetic, helpless attitude.

There is one outstanding point, however, which will bear separate mention here. A mining town exhibitor voices the common complaint in a nutshell:

"Why do exchange managers so often not even show us the decency of answering our letters? We know we are small and our rentals small—but if they are so anxious to get our business and our checks why can't they go a step further and treat us as humans."

It is granted that such a condition cannot be universal, or even prevail in the majority of exchanges. But the complaint is frequent enough to be of interest—and more than passing interest—to exchange managers and to the executives who sit in New York sincerely and earnestly striving for service.

You'll get a "down-in-the-mouth" feeling when you read what our small-town readers have to say about that self-same Service.

They say it's a great word, but it's Greek to the man a hundred miles from the exchange.

Do You Own a Small Theatre?

An Open Letter

These are facts. They can be verified. So also can th statement:

War taxes or no war taxes—a general raise in admi sion prices was as certain this winter as the falling of t leaves.

* * * *

YOU now have the knowledge. There remains th favor that we ask.

Every picture theatre manager in the Unite States charging more than a five-cent admission is at th moment working for you. With the dawn of Novemb 1st more than ten thousand men were added to the rost of your department—delegated by Congress to collect fro each patron a tax.

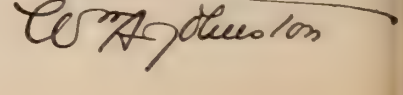
Congress gave you these ten thousand unpaid worker Congress gave to the ten thousand heavy bookkeeping e pense in the performance of their work. Congress gave t the ten thousand the certain knowledge that their patro age would be adversely affected because of that work.

The spirit with which America's picture theatres wer to their task is sufficient proof of their faithfulness to th nation in its crisis, sufficient assurance of their loyalty t Uncle Sam as your subordinates.

Irresponsible criticism from official sources is endange ing that harmony of action, further harassing ten thousan loyal workers already grievously burdened.

* * * *

FIRST, therefore, we ask of you the word to you Department that will bring a cessation of "talk with out knowledge."



Easily enough granted, isn't it?

Second, we ask a favor that will newly enliven the spiri of the ten thousand, that will make easier their task of tax collecting from the most difficult of sources—the genera public.

News space has been freely given for adverse stories It would be as generously granted for a statement fro you to this effect:

"The Government is appreciative of the spirit displaye by the motion picture theatres in their task of collecting tax on each admission ticket and of the assistance pictur patrons render in this way to win the war. It must b realized that the theatres of the country are under heav burdens—causing many of them to increase their prices— and under the circumstances the co-operation given th Government is all the more valued."

It isn't much. But it means a great deal to Uncle Sam's coffers, even more to a badly shaken industry. Will yo do this for ten thousand subordinates?

The Reader Has His Say

From Harry Nace—Pioneer of Phoenix

EDITOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I am herewith enclosing report cards on pictures shown under our management in the past week and trust they will meet with your approval. Kindly accept my best wishes for your earnest efforts to further exhibitors' interests. Let me assure you that I for one stand ready to supply you with any information you may request.

I have been thinking very seriously as to the future of the star productions. You will do me a great favor if you will kindly write me your opinion of the following: About a year or more ago you will no doubt recall the big exhibitors of the country were all talking of the enormous salaries the producers were paying the different stars and that the exhibitors would have to pay it in the end in rentals. If I am not mistaken it was about the time Mutual had signed with Charlie Chaplin and the salary of Mary Pickford had been announced, as well as other big stars.

Now we find some of the same exhibitors step out and offer more than the producers could afford to offer, and you will also find that these same exhibitors who are offering this great amount of money are offering money made from the producers' productions, in which the same stars they are now after appeared in.

Please do not misconstrue my letter, only I believe I can see coming in the future of the industry the big exhibitor freezing out the small one, for if these big stars are controlled by the big exhibitors it is only natural that where they see a small exhibitor doing big on their stars they will say: "We can cancel his contract and move in there and take it ourselves." They can build a bigger house because they have the money and the little fellow who was good enough to make the star popular forfeits everything.

In regards to high rentals and taxes I wish to say that as an exhibitor, and the oldest one in Phoenix, I am at all times ready to pay the producer more money, provided he in turn gives me better pictures, for in this way the future of the motion picture will be maintained, as well as the fact that better pictures will bring bigger attendance and get more money into my box office.

I could write a whole lot more on this line but I presume you have too many letters of the sort. I will ask you to use this as you see fit, trusting it will in no way offend any one. Wishing you continued success,

Very sincerely,
HARRY L. NACE.

Barncord and Nace, Lamara and Empress theatres, Phoenix, Arizona.

[Mr. Nace makes a most interesting point, but we really can't agree with him in the view he foresees of the big exhibitor crowding out the smaller one. Stars are an important matter, but there are so many other factors that go to make up the success of a theatre man in any particular territory that we do not believe the mere control of the stars could prompt or guarantee any factor controlling the business. Mr. Nace can analyze his own situation in Phoenix and agree with us.

The point made regarding exhibitors complaining of high salaries and then paying them themselves is well answered by Mr. Nace in his later paragraph—"I am at all times ready to pay the producer more money, provided he in turn gives me better pictures." The exhibitors referred to said: "We want to guarantee ourselves the stars needed for our theatres and sufficient top notch productions. There are a certain few stars—less than the fingers of one hand—who are worth any price, for they never fail—in any type of theatre, under any conditions.

To return your good wishes for MOTION PICTURE NEWS—let us hear from you again, Mr. Nace. The type of letter that shows sincere thought and knowledge is ever welcome.—ED. NOTE.]

"Better Stories—Brighter Themes the Need"

EDITOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: You can count on me to keep you in touch with this end of the earth for your Exhibitors' Box Office Reports. I really do feel that the producers should know how we exhibitors feel about their productions. I know if some of the producers knew how I felt about some pictures I have had lately they wouldn't make any more at all.

I think the trouble with the producer is that he is not careful enough in selecting his stories. He should pick out stories that the public would be likely to enjoy reading, then he would be bound to get out good pictures. I have noticed one producer in particular lately who is trying to make pictures as cheap as he can, using Western stuff entirely. In fact, this producer has put out so much lately that he has killed his brand of pictures in my house.

Yours sincerely,
C. D. COOLEY.

"Where Is the Organization Now?" Asks Sam Bullock

EDITOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Johnston's editorial "Where Was the Organization?" in the current issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is pertinent and to the point. Every exhibitor should wake up to the importance of that question, though Varner of Carolina reached most of us with the necessary details some months ago, when he went "over the top" at Washington in the interests of the exhibitors, while the "organization's" peerless leaders favored the "Ontario" plan.

Well, we've got it—or a similar plan. And while the millionaire patriots are seeking to dodge payment of their three-quarters of a cent a foot tax and seeking to put it on the already flattened out exhibitor, said exhibitor is advised as the only solution: "Raise your prices—I've raised mine," by President Lee Ochs, who opposed Varner at Washington.

There are 108 theatres out of 151 in Cleveland that cannot raise their present price of 10 cents. Theatres of Mr. Ochs' class here are getting Mr. Ochs' price. Others are getting 15 cents, some regularly, some on specials. I only know of three or four nickel shows in Cleveland, and I know every location in the city.

Between the forty-odd first, second and third run shows here it is possible to get top prices down to fifteen cents. Then after productions have run the gamut of these shows and become available for the 108 others it is impossible to get more than 10 cents, except on a special occasionally. The patrons are "wise" to the fact that big organs, augmented orchestras, elaborate appointments, etc., call for higher admissions, but they are also wise enough to say to the small fellow: "Yes, but that picture was run at the Knickerbocker six months ago and over and I don't expect to pay over 10 cents to see it now." And they won't.

Newspaper advertising has made them overcritical and upon the few "specials" where 15 cents is charged the exhibitor benefits not a cent when his extra expense is figured in. I have canvassed the "108-ten-centers" and I know. In view of the his stories. He should pick out stories that foregoing and Mr. Ochs' advice your question is after all not as pertinent as "Where is the organization now?"

Yours truly,
SAM BULLOCK.

Taxes and Draft Combine to Throttle Small Theaters

Army Volunteering and Draft Make Heavy Inroads in Patronage of Small Community Houses—Taxes and Mounting Expenses Add to Problems and Create Serious Crisis

Typical Small Town Theatres Which Will Suffer from Tax and Draft Levies

REPORTS reaching MOTION PICTURE NEWS from many quarters indicate that a serious crisis confronts the small theatres of the country in suburban and rural communities catering to limited patronage. The draft and volunteering for service in many sections have made heavy inroads on the theatre patronage, not only through taking away the younger men, but in its effect on the theatre-going of the women.

Added to these problems there now comes the war tax on admissions. The smaller theatres complain that with their patronage already hanging by slender threads any attempt to raise admissions or even to collect the few pennies of the tax will be disastrous in its aggregate effect on attendance. Then topping the problem there are the steadily mounting operating expenses and the reel tax.

It is from the smaller community houses alone that the reports gathered by MOTION PICTURE NEWS as to the effects of the war tax bear any semblance of unanimity. From the larger theatres the opinions vary. Some sections declare that business has slumped, others that a slight temporary slump has given way to a return to normal conditions, while with many it is declared the tax has had no effect and has even aided conditions by forcing admission raises which had long been necessary.

But the smaller theatres face a problem of serious import to the industry. Exchange managers have long known of many of the very weakest of these rural houses that had been forced to give up the ghost even by the comparatively small seat tax. Others have barely struggled along on the thinnest of ice—and now there are sounds of cracking.

Herewith MOTION PICTURE NEWS presents a report from its Los Angeles correspondent on conditions as found by the exchanges there, together with two frank expressions from small theatre owners.

Suburban Coast Houses May Close Up Some Nights

LOS ANGELES (Special). —If theatre business of the Los Angeles suburban houses and theatres of the smaller cities of Southern California does not improve within the next week, it is the plan of a number of managers to close the theatres three or four nights each week. Attendance for the past two or three weeks has been smaller than at any time in the history of picture showing in California, managers attributing this slump partially to the war tax on tickets which keeps people from the theatres, but more to the general financial depression due to Liberty Loan bond sales, and many contributions to charities created as the result of the war.

Business of the Los Angeles downtown theatres is reported to be from forty to sixty per cent below the average for this season of the year. One house which has a daily expense of approximately three hundred dollars, has total receipts which for the past ten days averaged less than two hundred. Another theatre manager reported his business at just half the receipts of last year, and his expenses fully forty per cent higher for the same period. A manager of a leading theatre in a town of sixteen thousand with a daily expense of sixty dollars, reported an average of twenty-one for the past nine days, and another house in a fifteen thousand town where film rent amounted to forty-five dollars per day, has been having gross receipts totalling about thirty dollars.

Managers of the smaller theatres believe closing three or four nights each week will be highly beneficial to their business for the other three or four days, and while it will increase their overhead expenses per running day, the biggest item of expense, that of film rent, will be eliminated for the greater portion of the week, and it is believed the receipts for the nights that the houses are opened will be greatly increased.

Theatre managers find practically everyone is familiar with the war tax, and where this has been added in addition to the admission price, no one has turned away from the box-office of it. Instead managers believe many of the people stay away from the theatres because the tax has been added. Optimistic managers feel that the depression is only temporary, and that within a few weeks conditions will be normal, but this opinion is not shared by anything like the majority of exhibitors. The situation is a very serious one to every exhibitor of the territory with a few exceptions where war conditions have caused unusual activities.

"What Am I to Do?" Asks a Small Towner

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, New York.

Dear Sir: What would you do if you were in my place?

We have invested here in Newport, $11,000 in a building and equipment for motion picture house, have been running since Dec. 9, 1913, and have made a little money all the time, but no big amount, until the past ten weeks and am losing steadily now.

First Aid to "Watch Your Step"

"WATCH YOUR STEP" declared William A. Johnston last week in urging the most careful procedure on the part of picture theaters which have raised their admission prices coincident with the war tax and those planning to take the step during the coming months.

"The war profiteering charge is being heard," he asserted. "As the war grows so will the intensity of the feeling. You must take your patrons into your confidence. Tell them your problems—educate. Let them see that no matter what price action you have already taken a higher admission would be justified and may soon be necessary."

That the theme was timely is shown by the numerous expressions of approval which have reached this office. With the approbation comes also the suggestion that Motion Picture News lay out an educational campaign for the use of exhibitors.

We are glad to comply. On this page is the first of a series of educational talks, for use in programs, on separately printed cards, or in newspaper advertisements. The first is an introductory, semi-teaser chat. Successive instalments will be more specific, taking up each of your problems in turn, and leading up to an admission increase.

Where possible get the co-operation of the other theaters of your community in the use of these talks. Let each instalment bear the signature of the association. This will aid greatly in their success.

This is the first talk of the series. Each week additional talks will appear, together with slide suggestions and program readers. The slogan to be played up is "We Are Doing Our Bit." The teaser line to liven and maintain the interest is the suggestive "Secrets of the Movies."

Footnote: Add to this paragraph your particular problem. For instance, if you have raised your prices: "They seemed to think that our new price scale gave us some soft easy graft." Or, "They grumbled at irksome features of the tax with a look that said 'You're to blame somehow—you're putting something over on us!'"

Doing Our Bit!

Uncle Sam Said to Us:

"I need money to win this war. I know that the patrons of the better class of picture theatres—those charging more than five cents—would be glad to give me a few cents each time they attend. Will you collect it for me?"

So We Went to Work for Uncle Sam:

We took on additional bookkeeping and ticket expense—tax-collecting is no cinch. We advertised to explain Uncle Sam's desires to you. We sweated over the tangle in our admission prices, we groaned at the ticket-window confusion.

Then We Got a Terrible Shock

People began to call us "lucky dogs" because we escaped war taxes they had to pay. (See footnote here.)

They Didn't Know That Uncle Sam:

Was getting "his" from us in many other ways. That the job of collecting a tax from you was only given us after he had finished devising taxes that find their way into our bank book. That the task of giving top-quality entertainment at a moderate price is becoming so difficult that HALF THE THEATRES OF THE COUNTRY ARE LOSING MONEY.

It Was All Our Fault:

We haven't told you enough about our business. You only hear the press agent rot. So we sat down and wrote a series of talks like this one. We call them "Secrets of the Movies." Each week you will get a new one. Don't miss any of them—we are going to uncover a lot of snappy stuff. We're mad—no, we're not. We're just going to show you with a smile that

We Are Doing Our Bit!

As We Go to Press—

¶On the petition of the local organization of motion picture exhibitors the fifteen-cent a reel tax found its way into the Cleveland courts on November 16th.

¶Judge Estep, of Common Pleas Court, heard the petition of the theatre managers against the action of the principal local exchanges in seeking to collect a tax of fifteen cents per reel per day.

¶At the conclusion the Judge granted to the exhibitors a temporary injunction restraining all offending exchanges from collecting the footage tax pending a full hearing on the case.

Have always ran good pictures and nothing but good, clean shows have appeared in the Gay, but here is where the trouble started. The town has only 2,003 people according to the census, and during the Summer more than 250 volunteered for army service and then the draft carried a lot more, that cut the attendance like everything, not only the boys but they brought girls, and it's a fact that the more that came, the more wanted to come.

The exchanges are steadily getting the rent higher and not only the rent but they added the return express charges to our bills a while back, then posters had to be bought outright, and now not only the tax the Government intended for us to pay, but the one intended for the manufacturers has been handed to us, together they make such a hot bunch of expense that the cost of running is outrunning the cash coming in.

Now another thing is the location of Newport, it's in the mountains, and farming is the principal occupation, but we can not count on anything at all from farmers in the way of direct receipts. Living expenses have increased so much that the wage earners here have to give up shows to buy grub, and as a result we are losing steadily and I see no way to help it.

Now I might add that I am not feeling blue over it at all. I don't need the show and can afford to shut it up entirely, as well as my two partners, we each have incomes and have never taken any money out of the show but invest in real estate any profits we make.

I think that the real harm is in the big salaries that are being paid. No man or woman living is worth what some of them get and I personally think that we are coming to the time when the manufacturers are going to kill the goose that lays the golden egg, by paying too large salaries and forcing the exhibitors to pay so much that many will be put out of business.

Here where you can tell today just how many people will come to your show three weeks from now and who they will be, this continual raising of everything we use hurts, they may make it in the cities and judging from the way they were patronized in Philadelphia all summer they can but not here.

I imagine Newport is just one of many. I want the NEWS though if I stay in picture business or not, truly,

JAY ALLEN GLENN.

Small Town Manager Throws Books Open

Johnson, Ariz.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen: I am glad to know there is a chance to repeal the tax on admission to the picture show. As I see the proposition as it is now, it means that the small picture shows will have to close the shows.

Take my business. I am located in a small mining camp. My total receipts per week is as follows for the month of October:

Week ending	Oct.	6	.....	$108.65
"	"	13	.....	121.05
"	"	20	.....	110.55
"	"	27	.....	117.65
Total receipts for month			.....	$457.90
Total expenses for month			.....	$395.60
Net profit for October			....	$ 62.30

We have film service expense of $270.60; operation expenses, $125; total expense, $395.60.

You will notice from the above statement we only had $162.30 after paying the expense of the show. November will be less, as the war tax will be about $45. This would only give me about $20 for the month. I think the American Exhibitors' Association and the theatre owners should get busy, and be ready to go before Congress, at their first session, and get some relief for the little picture shows.

Believe me, I am ready to the cause in any way that I can. Trusting that you will meet with lots of success in your effort to repeal the Admission Tax.

Yours very truly,
W. HARRY MILLER

Christie Makes Trip to East

C. H. Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, left Los Angeles the latter part of last week on an extended trip throughout the East. Mr. Christie on his way, is visiting many of the exchanges en route to New York in the interest of Christie comedies.

Langley Joins Dominion Exclusives as Representative

E. R. Fauser, managing director of the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., distributors of Fox productions in western Canada, has announced that E. A. Langley, formerly British Columbia manager of the Canadian Universal Film Co., has joined the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., as special representative. Mr. Langley is now covering the Province of Alberta.

Mr. Fauser also states that a change has been made in both the Winnipeg and Calgary offices of this concern. W. S. Jones, who was formerly owner of the Columbia theatre in Winnipeg, has assumed the management of the Winnipeg office, replacing W. Etris, who has been transferred to the Calgary office and replaces J. C. Belmont.

R. A. Scott, general representative of the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., is at the present time making his headquarters in Winnipeg.

Ivan Mozukin Aids New Government in Russia

Through Pathe Exchange, Inc., it was announced on Saturday of last week that Ivan Mozukin, according to reports received in America, has for the time being given up his stage career to work for the new government in Russia.

Mozukin is considered one of the foremost Russian actors, and is starred in many of the Russian Art Films controlled in the United States by Pathe. Two of the films are "The Painted Doll" and "The Queen of Spades."

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Zukor?

—Next Week—William A. Brady

By William A. Johnston

EDITORIAL NOTE.—The mere fact that Mr. Zukor is now in Los Angeles for an extended sojourn could not be permitted to interrupt this series of interviews. MOTION PICTURE NEWS, with its usual spirit of progressiveness sent in seventeen telephone calls to points on the West coast between Los Angeles and San Francisco, finally locating Mr. Zukor at the Hollywood Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This long distance interview follows at the rate of a dollar a word (adv. note—to be made up for in Paramount advertising).

"GOOD afternoon, Mr. Zukor?"

"Good morning, who is it?"

"This is MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Zukor, we want an interview."

Silence over the 'phone; then Mr. Zukor's voice in an undertone: ("It's a trade paper. Get a publicity man.") Mr. Zukor, resuming: "I'll send you a statement."

"That won't do, Mr. Zukor. We're going to press, and can't wait."

Mr. Zukor, politely: "Would you like to speak to Mr. Schulberg?"

"No, Mr. Zukor" (firmly), "we must have a word from you. We're going to press."

"You trade papers always are," snapped Mr. Zukor. "What's the matter, now?"

"We are asked, Mr. Zukor, to put a question to you. When will the stars' salaries be reduced?"

Silence. Mr. Zukor's voice again audible in a side whisper. ("Get Mrs. Pickford out of the room.")

Resuming. "What did you say?"

"Salaries—stars' salaries! we'd like to know whether——"

"The weather?" said Mr. Zukor, quickly. "The weather's fine. Sunshine every day. Making fine pictures—all of them best, but some are better than others."

"No, no, Mr. Zukor. Not the weather. Salaries, stars' salaries. When will they come back?"

"I'll be back in five weeks," promised Mr. Zukor.

"Salaries, Mr. Zukor, stars' salaries."

"I can't hear you at all," said Mr. Zukor.

"Well, Mr. Zukor, haven't you some message to give to the exhibitors?"

"Yes," said Mr. Zukor, firmly. "Tell them to think big!"

"Dig deep?"

"No no, no—not dig deep. Think big. Say, what's the matter? Can't you hear me? I can hear you plainly enough—now."

"Well, Mr. Zukor, we would like then to ask a final question which will take a long answer. How much of the industry do you now own?"

Click! Silence. Then the pleasant, well modulated tones of Ben Schulberg over the wire.

"Say, Bill honestly, you'll have to cut out the rough stuff. The Boss is getting sore. Now, look Bill. Have you got a pencil handy? Just take this down."

"Adolph Zukor, president, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon being interviewed by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, stated that big developments are being inaugurated within its great West Coast Studios, the details of which will shortly be announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. High quality production upon an unprecedented scale is under way. In his estimation the latest Mary Pickford picture, 'Stella Maris,' is the greatest of all Pickford pictures. The million-dollar Paramount-Artcraft advertising campaign is crowding the American public into Paramount-Artcraft theatres——"

"Is that enough, Bill?"

"Yes, that's enough,"

"All right, Bill, I'll say good-by to Mr. Zukor for you."

"All right, good-by!"

These spontaneous expressions were gathered from people who have known and watched Mr. Zukor since he entered the picture industry. Included are a banker, a competitor and a lawyer (not Mr. Zukor's).

"He's a keen and quick analyst."

"His desk is always clean. He thinks and has others execute."

United Exhibitors Oppose the Tax on Reels

New Association Prepares to Fight the Issue, and Takes Exception to Mastbaum's Telegram to Samuel Goldfish

THE United Exhibitors' Association, the newly formed organization of exhibitors in eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, at a meeting last week voiced unanimously its protest against the reel tax of 15 cents per day, which is already being levied on many exhibitors by various exchanges and manufacturers. The decision of those who attended the meeting was to refuse to pay the footage tax, which they termed void under the law, and to immediately advise their counsel regarding alleged unfair action taken by the exchanges.

The new association, which during its brief existence has expanded to include sixty theatres, also took exception to a telegram which Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, is said to have sent to Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, a copy of which was published. The telegram, according to the United Exhibitors' Association, stated that Mastbaum had conferred with a large number of exhibitors and that they were ready and willing to pay the additional charge of fifteen cents per day on reels.

Members of the United Exhibitors' Association, at last week's meeting, declared they could not recall any conferences with Mastbaum, and refuted the statement that they are ready and willing to pay the tax. On the other hand, just the opposite is true, declare the exhibitors represented by the new organization.

In this connection, the United Exhibitors' Association asked it entered into the records that future announcements through Mr. Mastbaum be not construed as voicing the sentiments of the members of the organization.

Charles Segall is acting chairman of the association, and Jay Emanuel is recording secretary.

Ochs Appeals to Exhibitors in Tax Question

Declares That Concerted Action Will Undoubtedly Bring About Equalization of Two Sections of Law Considered Grossly Unjust

WHILE Lee Ochs was speeding on his way to California last week a lengthy call was issued from his office to the exhibitors of the nation for action in the war tax crisis on the reassembling of Congress in December.

Prefacing the nine-page letter with the hopeful remark that the large number of iniquities and injustices included in the law may be stricken out when called to the attention of Congress at the coming session, and closing with the statement that he is firm in the belief that the exhibitors of the United States are big enough, broad enough and brainy enough to forget personalities and unite in the interest of the common good, Mr. Ochs makes a strong appeal for instant and decisive action on the part of the exhibitors.

Concerning the equalizing of the admission tax and the footage tax, the two sections of the law referred to in the letter, the Ochs epistle declares it the duty of exhibitors to mobilize public opinion and to bring it to the attention of Congressmen and Senators. It is cited that there are six methods of bringing this result about, as follows:

No. 1. There must be a meeting of all exhibitors in each Congressional and Senatorial district of the country, and perfect harmony must reign. Let every man abide by the decision of the majority, and work hard for the carrying out of such action.

No. 2. Arrangements should then be made for a delegation to visit the Congressman and Senator and lay before them the arguments in favor of amending the law. The delegation should consist of every exhibitor in the district, and various members should be designated as spokesmen. A regular plan of procedure must be adopted.

No. 3. A vigorous campaign should be instituted in every theatre to educate the public to the necessity of having the law amended. This can best be done by means of slides flashed upon the screen, bearing the subject-matter.

No. 4. A petition addressed to the Congressman and Senator in the district in which the theatre is located should be drawn up and placed in a prominent position, and the audiences urged in every way to sign it. The more signatures, the better.

No. 5. After the Congressman and Senator leave home to attend the opening session of Congress, letters and telegrams expressing public sentiment should be sent them.

No. 6. There should be an extensive publicity campaign in local newspapers. If possible, exhibitors should band together and take full pages.

Fuel Administration Asks Help of Industry

Garfield Writes Significant Letter to Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, Urging Co-operation—Coal Question Acute

HAVING been called upon in a lengthy array of instances to lend their support in aiding America in the war, the exhibitors of the country are now being appealed to to conserve fuel. Of all the first-aids-to-the-country set forth, the fuel question is one of the most important, and requires the closest attention of the country. There seems little doubt that the exhibitors will step forward in their usual admirable way and put their shoulder to the wheel that will stop the fuel leak.

United States Fuel Administrator, H. A. Garfield, has written Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, concerning the conservation idea, and the latter has caused copies of it to be sent to every exhibitor in the Philadelphia territory so that they may thoroughly understand and appreciate the situation.

For the benefit of exhibitors who ma not have received communications from, o concerning, the fuel administration, Motio Picture News re-prints parts of the lette as follows:

"It is perhaps unnecessary to sugges that the coal situation is a serious one bu I will state the case in general figures.

"The war needs this year for all its ne activities at least 100,000,000 tons of coa more than in previous years. This tota is made up of the increased fuel consump tion of the railroads, the munition factorie and the steel factories, the navy, the army the cantonments and the requirements o our allies. The utmost possible increase o production for the year is 50,000,000 tons Here we have a gap of 50,000,000 ton which must be filled in some way. Eithe the war will be lost through lack of th basic element of fighting—coal—or do mestic consumers will go without or th industry not essential to the war will hav to be limited in a way to release the coal.

"The government is determined that th war shall have its necessary coal. It i also determined that the people of thi country shall not go cold. Hence you ca see that every business like your own i intensely interested in promptly puttin into effect measures which will save th amount of coal needed. We are all inter ested that this coal should be saved rathe than obtained by the limitation of industry but the quantity is so great that only b the intense patriotic efforts of all fue users can we make such saving as to pre vent the necessity for limiting what ar called "nonessential" industry.

"My suggestion is that you encourag some organized movement to study at al times the cutting down in the moving pict ure houses of heat, light and power; all o which consume coal. Electricity and gas however used, mean the consumption o coal."

Schools Get Lists of Approved Motion Pictures

The principals of the 300 public school of Chicago are to be provided with th monthly list of approved films issued by th better films committee of the Illinois Con gress of Mothers. The Chicago Board o Education is cooperating with the com mittee in every way possible and the ex changes are making it easy for the women of the various subsidiary committees wh look at the films each week to see both new and old releases which might be suitable a children's entertainment.

Mrs. Frederick Michael, chairman of th better films committee, is preparing severa programs which are of interest to exhibi tors wishing to put on children's afternoon or something special for the kiddies.

American Exhibitors' Association Moves to Indianapolis

Decides That Best Results for Exhibitors Can Be Secured with Centrally Located Headquarters, and Also Considers Reduced Operating Expense—Now Has Membership of 2,786 in United States and Elsewhere

THAT the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association, which had its inception in Chicago as a result of the mid-summer split of exhibitors from several states and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is in a decidedly healthy condition, able to use both arms and both legs and its mental faculties to the fullest extent was indicated at a meeting of the directors of the organization on Tuesday of last week at headquarters in the Times Building, when various subjects of interest and importance came up for discussion and decision.

Among the more important results of the meeting was the agreement of the directors to sustain the recommendation of Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager, that the offices of the organization be removed to the Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis. In addition, the present condition of the organization was made public.

Offices Centrally Located

General Manager Pettijohn gave as his reasons for the recommendation to move the headquarters to Indiana the following:

First—That numerous requests have been made from State organizations in the South, Middle West, Northwestern and Western States that the headquarters be more centrally located.

Second—That the expenses of maintaining offices in Indianapolis would be less than maintaining them in New York, and inasmuch as every other branch of the industry was at present lined up against the legitimate exhibitor there was no necessity for maintaining an office in New York for the purpose of co-operating with other branches of the industry until such time as the other branches of the industry should see fit to co-operate.

Mr. Pettijohn asked the directors to be relieved of the duties of secretary of the organization in order that he might devote all of his time to the duties of general manager and contemplated legislative work and recommended that the directors select Frank J. Rembusch of Shelbyville, Ind., to fill the position of secretary. The recommendation was approved and a wire was sent Mr. Rembusch asking if he would accept the place, which he did by wire on the following day.

Oppose Footage Tax

At last week's meeting of the directors of the American Exhibitors' Association it was also agreed that it should be the policy of the organization to resist payment of the so-called 15 cents-a-reel tax resulting from the war. A legal opinion was rendered to the effect that in case any manufacturer or exchange cancels a contract for films now in existence because the exhibitor refuses to pay the footage tax of 15 cents per reel, that the exhibitor has a right of action both for damages and for breach of contract against the person, persons or corporation canceling the service. The directors recommended that each exhibitor refuse to pay the tax, even though the exchanges cancel. It was shown that should a test then be necessary the exhibitors would be firmly entrenched against the exchanges and in better condition to achieve victory.

It was also agreed, following discussion of the footage tax, that headquarters for the State of New York should be established at 327 Main street, Buffalo, in charge of I. M. Mosher. The request of the Michigan branch of the organization that the National Convention be held in Detroit July 2, 3, 5 and 6, during Detroit's "Movie Week," was also granted, and a great time was promised every exhibitor who attends on July 4.

Membership Throughout States

One of the most substantial proofs that the American Exhibitors' Association means business and that its hat is in the ring to the finish was the announcement of the present condition of the association, showing a membership of the organization in forty-six States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Mexico and Canada. The total membership on November 14, this year, was announced at the meeting as 2,786, a very concrete growth since July. It was cited that State organizations have been completed in twenty-one States and two Canadian Provinces.

The membership is listed as follows: Alabama, 6; Alaska, 3; Arizona, 5; Arkansas, 9; California, 59; Connecticut, 9; Delaware, 6; District of Columbia, 12; Florida, 8; Georgia, 17; Idaho, 9; Illinois, 218; Indiana, 216; Iowa, 45; Kansas, 41; Kentucky, 34; Louisiana, 19; Maine, 21; Maryland, 47; Massachusetts, 59; Mexico, 1; Michigan, 217; Minnesota, 78; Mississippi, 16; Missouri, 61; Montana, 14; Nebraska, 14; New Hampshire, 12; New Jersey, 23; New Mexico, 3; New York, 328; North Carolina, 61; North Dakota, 17; Ohio, 168; Oklahoma, 97; Oregon, 8; Pennsylvania, 264; Rhode Island, 6; South Carolina, 49; South Dakota, 8; Tennessee, 9; Texas, 41; Utah, 4; Vermont, 6; Virginia, 72; Washington, 2; West Virginia, 46; Wyoming, 5; Wisconsin, 68; Canada, 247.

Neat Balance on Hand

The total funds received by the association since its birth at the Chicago convention on June 20, according to the records of the organization, amount to $4,618. There is a balance of cash on hand of $401.39, the total moneys expended being $4,216.61. The debts and liabilities of the association on November 14, this year, were given as none.

Upon recommendation of the general manager, approved by the directors, it was agreed to use all funds on hand and all funds coming into the hands of the organization in the future for constructive work on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors, that no salaries shall be paid to any officers of the association until after the Detroit convention, the week of July 2, 1918.

Each and every officer of the association agreed to the above conditions and voted for the approval of the recommendation.

In conclusion a resolution as follows was adopted by the directors: "That the directors of the American Exhibitors' Association do hereby heartily endorse the aims and purposes of the Fosdick Commission plan of co-operation in connection with the community and welfare work on behalf of soldiers and enlisted men and that the members of this association co-operate in this connection whenever called upon as far as is consistently possible, and be it further resolved that any authorized movement in connection with war welfare work in the various States be, and same is hereby endorsed, and that the members of this association be requested to co-operate whenever called upon as far as is consistently possible.

Fire in Detroit Exchange Imperils Lives

In a fire that on last Friday night swept through the third floor of a film exchange building in Detroit, occupied by nearly all the exchanges in the city, several girl employees experienced narrow escapes from death and valuable films owned by the exchanges were destroyed.

The fire started in the warerooms of the General Film Company and the offices and storerooms of General Film and Vitagraph were soon in flames. The financial loss is estimated at $500,000.

Thomas H. Ince Plans Producing Plant on Coast

It was announced in Los Angeles on Saturday of last week that Thomas H. Ince now has plans nearing completion for the building of a $500,000 producing plant, the site selected being on the east side of Washington Boulevard just outside the Los Angeles corporation line, in Culver City.

The property is almost triangular in shape, with a frontage of 300 feet on Washington Boulevard, where the administration building will be erected. On a part of the eleven acres it is planned to build also two mammoth glass studios, two open air stages and other necessary buildings, all of fireproof construction. The Spanish style of architecture will be followed.

It was also announced in Los Angeles Saturday that D. W. Griffith is to build a plant at Culver City, and William Fox and others are said to be negotiating for real estate there. Triangle and Essanay are already located at Culver City.

In and Out of Town

George Kleine, Perfection Pictures, returned to Chicago last week after several days spent in New York on business.

Harry K. Lucas, general manager of Lucas Theatre Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., stopped off in New York last week on his return to Atlanta after an extended business trip through the Middle West. He will be in town for several days. Mrs. Lucas accompanies him.

L. J. Pollard, general manager Ebony Film Corporation, Chicago, is in New York arranging for the marketing of Pollard Productions. Thomas Graham of the same company is also in New York assisting Mr. Pollard in the matter of exploitation of his product.

S. H. De Roy, Automatic Ticket-Selling and Cash Register Company, returned to New York from Pittsburgh, Monday, after several days spent on business in the interest of the company.

Robert C. Bruce, scenic director for Educational Films Corporation, arrived in New York last week after an extended trip to Minneapolis.

Among the members of the American Exhibitors' Association who attended the meeting of that organization, at the Association's offices, Times Building, New York, are: William Fait, Jr., Utica; W. H. Linton, Little Falls and Utica; J. E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; R. D. Craven, Charlotte, N. C.; J. M. Mosher, Buffalo; Peter Jeup, Detroit; Moe Levy, representing Jake Wells, Richmond, Va.; H. Oppenheim, Detroit.

Joseph F. Lee was in Boston last week in the interest of Charles Rankin's independent feature, "A Modern Lorelei." Mr. Lee is exploitation and sales manager.

H. A. Spanuth, Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago, is in New York in the interest of his company. Mr. Spanuth expects to remain in the city for several days.

Distributors Show Way to Settle Tax Squabble

Ask Exhibitors to Co-operate in Passing Footage Charge on to the Public—Declare Fifteen-Cent Levy Is Too Small

THE truth about the footage tax.

That sentence, thus far, has not been used as a title to a book or booklet setting forth the genuine facts and phases of the reel tax which descended suddenly and without warning upon the industry October 4, causing countless thousands of exhibitors, exchangemen and others to become mixed up in what appears to be the most thorough squabble that it has ever been the misfortune of the motion picture business to experience. But, with the recovering of senses following the first fury of the storm, and with the clearing away of the attendant fog, showing several companies, including Artcraft, Fox, Goldwyn, International, Metro, Paramount, Pathe, Select, Universal, Greater Vitagraph and World Film, standing solid and united in their belief that the footage tax should not fall upon the distributors, the truth of the whole situation, although a little hazy as yet, is beginning to dawn upon the industry.

First of all, it seems consistent that the suddenness with which the footage tax enveloped the exchanges and exhibitors is responsible for the varying opinions and misunderstandings so prevalent at the present time. Confusion reigned; distributors were called upon for money by the Government and this was collected from the exhibitors while the latter tore their hair and yelled about the injustice of it all. For the nonce everything was upset, and the exhibitor was as nearly right in his complaints as any one concerned in the whole thing. The whole trouble seemed to be that distributors and exhibitors did not have time to get together and thrash the thing out, and decide how the footage tax should flow into the coffers of the Government. Now that this is possible there is little doubt a satisfactory settlement will be reached in the matter, and the industry will once more pursue the even, or uneven, tenor of its way, following the readjustments being set forth by the distributors.

In a series of logical advertisements, the first of which appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, the producers and distributors named above are sifting the tax question thoroughly, as well as consistently, making explanations where explanations are called for and citing facts to eventually bring to the attention of exhibitors the truth about the footage tax.

The gist of the series is easily condensed into a few words, two of which are "quit squabbling." The producers very wisely insist that only concerted action will bring the desired results, and proceed to back up their belief by uncovering an avenue of escape; a harbor of refuge, for both distributors and exhibitors.

"The public must pay the tax."

That is the answer, in a nutshell, according to the distributors. In the words of the latter: "We took too much for granted. We assumed the exhibitor would understand that it was a financial impossibility for us to pay $100,000 per week out of our own pockets, just as we understood that it would be impossible for the exhibitor to pay the various taxes imposed upon him. Our whole idea has been to pass the tax along to the public, just as every other tax in the world is passed. The claim that we will ruin fifty per cent of the exhibitors by asking them to pay about one dollar per day in film tax, and pass even that small amount on to the public, is absurd on its face. A far greater danger to the exhibitor lies in refusing to act as the channel for passing the tax along, thus forcing many of us to quit business."

Continuing, in answer to the inquiry as to whether or not the public would stand for the extra small amount, the distributors declare the public will not refuse, as it has never yet refused to pay the tax on any taxable thing. Further in their light-shedding series the distributors disclosed what will no doubt be genuine, if startling, news to exhibitors. By calling in the best available experts to check their figures and prove their correctness it was found that exhibitors are being, according to statistics, undercharged rather than overcharged insofar as the footage tax is concerned. The distributors assert that some of them, even after collecting every penny of the fifteen cents per reel tax, still have to pay at least 33⅓ per cent of the tax out of their own pockets. Some of the distributors in the list, including Artcraft, Fox, Goldwyn, Pathe, Metro, International, Paramount, Select, Universal, Vitagraph and World declare that they have found that the charge to exhibitors should be twenty-two cents per reel per day instead of fifteen cents.

Concluding, after giving further reasons for believing the tax should be passed on to exhibitors, the distributors said: "We urgently advise every exhibitor to start a campaign of education. The Government must and will have money. We can't pay it. You can't pay it. All we ask you to do is to open the way to pass it to the public, where all taxes must eventually go."

Hague Succeeds Wilson on Ohio Censor Board

Maurice S. Hague, of Columbus, Ohio, has been appointed a member of the Ohio Board of Censors to succeed W. R. Wilson. He began his duties last week.

Goldstein and Blecher Form Photoplay Agency

Irving E. Goldstein, former scenario editor of the Select Film Company and the LaMont Film Company, has formed a partnership with W. Erich Blecher and the two have launched a photoplay agency in the Fitzgerald Building, New York, to be known as The Superior Photoplay Company.

Mr. Goldstein last week declared the purpose of the concern will be to help free-lance writers, revising plays should it be necessary in order to put them over.

Nicholas Power Chooses Smith General Manager

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Nicholas Power Company, Will C. Smith was appointed general manager.

The appointment is one of great interest to the motion picture industry, as Mr. Smith is well known and highly esteemed by exhibitors, operators, accessory dealers and connected with the business in all parts of the country. He is claimed to be one of the best projection experts in this country.

Mr. Smith is treasurer of the New York Screen Club, treasurer of the National Society of Projection Engineers, and is a member of the Machinery Club of New York and of the Green Room Club.

Film Row Bids Farewell to Carmichael

LOS ANGELES film row was closed Saturday for two hours that the managers and employes could bid farewell to Field Carmichael, who has served for a year as manager of the Los Angeles William Fox Exchange, who on that day left for Detroit, where he is to assume the management of the Fox branch. The change comes as a distinct promotion to Carmichael, inasmuch as the Detroit field is approximately twice as large as the Los Angeles. The farewell given Carmichael is perhaps the most unique in the history of the film industry. When he walked down film row Saturday morning he found in each window large signs referring to himself. These were later used on automobiles in the parade that traversed the principal streets of Los Angeles, headed by a jazz band, when Carmichael was taken to the Santa Fe station at 1 o'clock. One sign read, "Bisbee Has Nothing On Us—Carmichael Must Go!" (referring to driving the I. W. Ws. out of Bisbee). Another was, "Watch Michigan Go Wet, Carmichael Is Coming." And then, "Detroit Is to Have Two Flivvers—Ford and Carmichael." Toward the end of the parade was one which read, "Poor Carmichael; No One-Piece Bathing Suits in Detroit," and "'At Last Carmichael Goes to Work.' His Old Boss, Harry Leonhardt."

At the station were more than one hundred affiliated with film exchange assembled. There was a walk around, an exhibition dance by Leonhardt and Carmichael, and a Billy Sunday chorus led by the jazz band. Members of the Fox Exchange presented Carmichael with a handsome chain and knife, and he was given sustenance to aid him across the dessert. One bottle was auctioned off, the funds to go to the Red Cross, which sold at $10.50, and following this a general donation to the Red Cross was made which totaled about $40.

The committee on arrangements for the parade included Harry Leonhardt, of Goldwyn, as chairman; H. H. Hicks, Select; Guy Gunderson, Fox; Dave Burshon, Universal California, and each exchange manager took an active part, as did many of the theatre men of Los Angeles.

Peerless May Invade Field

PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER E. H. EMMICK, of the Peerless Film Service, with offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles, is shortly to invade the Seattle field. He plans on opening an exchange there in the near future and will handle the re-issues of the early William S. Hart two-reel productions released on the Mutual and also some of the later five-reel subjects in which Hart appeared. Mr. Emmick has purchased rights for these films on the Southern California territory as well as in the four states that are handled out of Seattle. These films will be handled at San Francisco by the Western Feature Film Company, 180 Golden Gate Avenue, which is managed by Abe Markowitz.

New Mission Boosts Price

THE New Mission theatre in San Francisco, Kahn & Greenfield, owners, has been enlarged and with a seating capacity of 2,800 it will rival the California in size. It is the big picture house in the populous Mission District and, built only a year and a half ago, one of the finest in the entire city. R. F. Abraham is the manager.

At the reopening on November 15 Mayor James Rolph, Jr., delivered an address and there were elaborate ceremonies, with the Mission Merchants' Association and the Fillmore Improvement Association, two powerful organizations, in attendance.

Heretofore a five and ten cent house, the New Mission is advancing its prices to ten and fifteen cents and will show Artcraft, Paramount and De Luxe films.

Spokane's Own Producer Starts Work on Studio

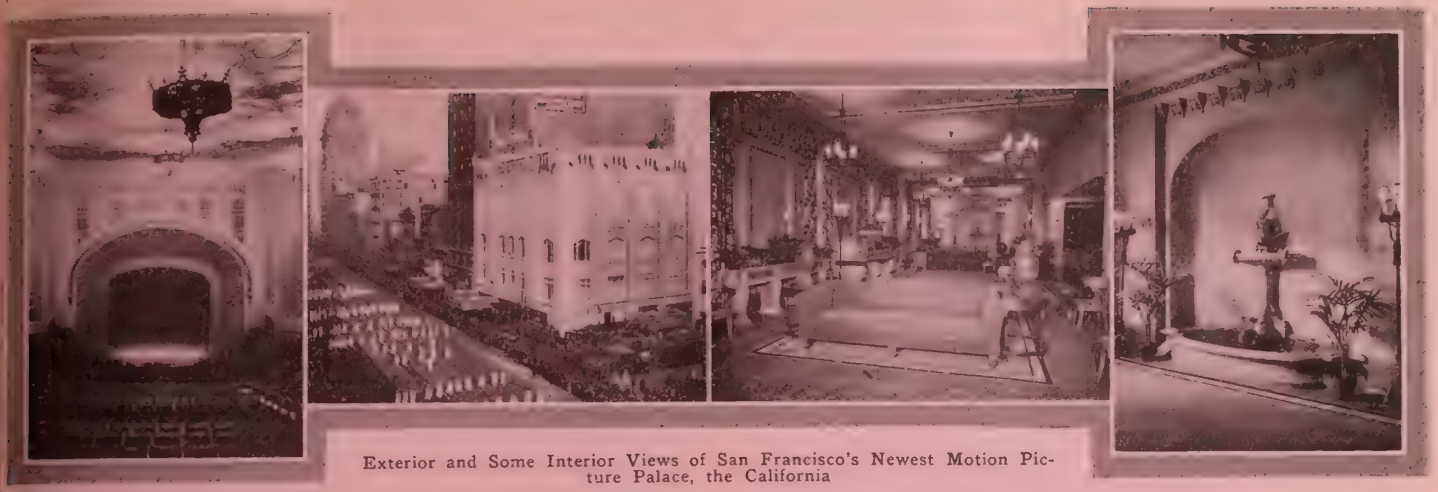
THROUGH the acquisition of fifteen acres of Minnehaha Park negotiations have been closed through the Spokane City Park Board giving the Washington Motion Picture Corporation a long-time lease allowing them to use the park and three large buildings which it contains for motion picture work. The corporation has secured the services of the well-known architects, Whitehouse & Price, who are just completing plans and specifications for the erection of a high-class studio to cost in the neighborhood of $150,000.

Mr. Price has just returned from southern California, where he completed a tour of inspection of some of the largest studios of that section. He brings back many very good ideas and the latest methods of construction, which will be used in the building of the Spokane studio. The construction work is being done under the personal supervision of Mr. C. J. Ward, general manager of the corporation, who claims the studio will be second to none. It will be thoroughly equipped to meet all requirements for the starring of the eminent actor Tyrone Power. He is at present playing in New York in the Manhattan Opera House in "Chu Chin Chow," and will return to Spokane at the close of his engagement to take up his work here.

Prosperity the Keynote in Denver, Says Lustig

METRO'S western special representative, Harry Lustig, is now in Denver. Mr. Lustig has charge of the entire Intermountain as well as coast offices for Metro and has but recently returned from a tour of the various offices under his supervision. He states that the motion picture business at the present time is enjoying unusual prosperity and that the outlook for exhibitors as well as the representative manufacturers is exceptionally bright.

He states that theatres, large and small everywhere, are playing to big receipts and the biggest crowds in their history. Labor troubles, which have caused worry in some sections, are being adjusted so quickly that they are having no appreciable adverse effect upon the business.



Exhibitors in the Intermountain territory are awaiting Metro's next big production, "Draft 258," which is scheduled for early release. Much publicity has been given "Draft 258" in this territory from the Denver office and heavy bookings are anticipated.

Slipper's New Catalog Out

THE firm of J. Slipper & Co., Los Angeles accessory house, has just issued an attractive catalog covering accessories and theatre supplies. This is valuable to any manager, in that it contains a great quantity of information pertaining to machines, accessories and projection. The catalog is conveniently arranged and bespeaks the progress of this enterprising company.

Bloom Laboratories a New One

JOHN McLEAD BLOOM, formerly affiliated with the D. W. Griffith laboratories at the Fine Art Studio in Hollywood, has organized a company and is opening a new plant to be known as the Bloom Film Laboratories at 7,520 Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, which will be ready for use within the next week or two. Mr. Bloom expects to specialize on making special effects and the higher class of laboratory work, in which he has had a very wide experience.

Exterior and Some Interior Views of San Francisco's Newest Motion Picture Palace, the California

San Diego News and Jottings

LOCAL motion picture houses have met the new war tax on admissions in various ways. The Broadway Amusement Company, which has owned the Broadway and Superba for a long time and which had recently taken over and opened the Illusion, for some months closed, runs a feature line in its advertising reading, "No Extra Pennies Needed." The prices of 20 and 30 at the Broadway and Superba and of 10 and 20 at the Illusion include the war tax.

The Pickwick is charging 15, 20 and 30 cents and collects the war tax in addition to these prices. The Plaza, charging 20 and 30 cents, says to its patrons, "You will be glad to pay the tax." The Hillcrest has raised its admission from 10 to 11 cents, which meets the war tax.

The vaudeville houses have made no raise in their schedules of admissions, but the Hippodrome announces that "We pay the war tax," while the Savoy (Pantages) asks its patrons to pay the war tax in addition to its regular prices.

MANAGER HILTS, of the Alhambra, has installed a Powers 6-B Cameragraph and is receiving the commendations of his audiences on the improved projection of his pictures.

THE projecting machine of the Ocean Beach motion picture theatre was stolen recently while the house was temporarily closed. It was later recovered in a hotel room and a former employe was placed under arrest, charged with burglary.

Lesser Organizing Film Fellows

THE Film Fellows is the name of a new club being organized in San Francisco by Sol L. Lesser of the All-Star Features, M. L. Markowitz of the California Echange, Ben Simpson of Triangle and M. J. Cohen of the George Kleine system.

Sol L. Lesser will start for New York from San Francisco on November 16 to attend a meeting of the state right distributors.

James Beatty of San Jose is building a new theatre at Fresno, to open the latter part of November. The film men of San Francisco have planned to charter a special train and attend the opening, starting for home immediately after the performance. This is intended as a tribute to Mr. Beatty, who is held in high esteem by the exchange managers.

THE Robert-Morton division of the American Photo Player Company has instituted a lecture course on the history and art of organ building. This marks one more step in the march of progress taken by the officers of the company in a social and educational manner.

I. H. LYONS, the American Photo Player Company's representative traveling from St. Paul headquarters, reports excellent business throughout the State of Iowa. He has sent in some nice business from that territory.

Unique Testimonial at California's Opening

THE new California theatre at San Francisco, already described in the Motion Picture News is meeting with great prosperity. Notwithstanding its seating capacity of nearly 3,000, this theatre finds difficulty in accommodating the throngs and the management may find it expedient to raise the prices.

A very pretty and well-deserved compliment was paid to Manager Roth by the leading film men of San Francisco in presenting the following testimonial:

"Aware that the new and magnificent California theatre, whose doors are today thrown open for the first time to the moving picture loving public, represents an appeal to all that is highest and best in our art and craft, lending to the finest work of the producer a fit setting for its display and to the votary of the art a sublime temple for his devotions, on a scale of majesty, of beauty and of grandeur hitherto unapproached, and realizing that this new edifice and the enterprise for which it stands now come as the culmination of long, patient and painstaking labor on the part of its manager, Eugene H. Roth, and as a testimony of his undaunted energy, his unbounded faith in the moving picture industry, his vision, his loyalty and his zeal, and as a further manifestation of those fine ideals for which he has always stood in his daily dealings and business relationships;

"The undersigned representatives of the motion picture industry of San Francisco desire on this occasion to extend to Eugene R. Roth their sincere congratulations upon this auspicious event, to express to him their gratification and their deep appreciation of the service he has rendered the craft, to give assurance of the high esteem and warm personal regard in which he is held by all his friends, endeared to him by his kindliness, graciousness and many fine personal qualities, to assert their confidence in the unqualified success of the new venture, under its present guidance and to voice the hope that this new structure, destined to dignify and elevate the motion picture art, will long endure, a monument worthy of the city by the Golden Gate, a delight to this and many future generations.

"Dated at San Francisco, California, November 1, 1917."

This was signed by M. J. Cohen, W. J. Citron, Marion Kohn, Harry Schmidt, Joseph Huff, Louis Hyman, Edward Kemp, E. H. Emmick, E. B. Johnson, E. M. Asher, W. O. Edmunds, Herman Wobber, J. H. Allen, Ben F. Simpson, E. M. Simmons, E. O. Child, Kahn & Greenfield, Sol L. Lesser, Ralph B. Quive, M. L. Markowitz, Abe Markowitz, Louis Reichert, Ben Cohen, X. K. Stout, E. C. Jensen, Newt Levy and E. A. Church.

At the opening of the theatre, Market street was so congested by the thousands that tried in vain to obtain admission a squad of ten policemen, headed by Captain Anderson, was required to keep order. The doors opened at 7:30 o'clock, but it was nearly 9 o'clock before the ticket-holders were all in their seats, so difficult was it to get through the crowds. Captain Anderson said that not less than four thousand persons were turned away from the continually reforming box office lines.

Activities of the Week in San Francisco and Salt Lake

GROWING business in Montana and the need of establishing a closer relationship between the exchange and the exhibitor has caused Louis Marcus, district manager for the Notable Feature Film Company, distributors in the mountain states for Paramount and Artcraft picture products, to establish a new branch office at Butte. The company already has a large and flourishing branch at Denver.

Samuel I. Levin, former booking clerk at the central office, but who for three months has been assistant to T. Y. Henry, Denver branch manager, has been named as manager of the Butte branch.

The territory covered by the Notable Company in Montana is very large, including the entire state with sections of adjoining states included, and in order to keep in close touch with exhibitors and to supply all their needs with as little delay as possible it was found necessary to open an office at Butte.

Mr. Levin has a close personal knowledge of conditions in Montana and of the trade in general, and his appointment is considered as a happy selection.

DUCK dinners were in vogue during this week in the homes of all the members of the Notable Feature Film Company's Salt Lake staff as a result of the splendid marksmanship of Eric V. Saderup, accounting department.

Mr. Saderup and three friends drove on Saturday night to Strawberry Reservoir, in what was formerly the Uinta Indian reservation, and in two hours the three men, who took their guns, bagged 135 fine fat ducks.

THE output of first-class mail issued in October by the publicity department of the Notable Feature Film Company, Gordon H. Place, manager, was double the volume issued in September.

Mr. Place urged exhibitors to issue letters to their mailing lists in advance of the inauguration of the three-cent rate, with the result that the publicity department was almost swamped. But the last of the letters was safely deposited in the mail with a good margin of time, thus saving the exhibitors a cent for every letter mailed.

Results of these letters are so satisfactory, according to exhibitors' reports, that many of them are arranging for regular monthly or bi-monthly service of this character.

A WEEK to a subject will be the policy of Paramount-Empress theatre, at Salt Lake, playing Paramount and Artcraft releases. Beginning November 11, the new policy will be effective, with Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" as the first offering.

James Brown, of the Paramount-Empress staff, has arranged a splendid lobby display to announce this policy. A Mary Pickford portrait in colors, 22x28 inches, is surrounded by an attractively lettered mat. A striking feature of the mat is a November calendar sheet with the week's dates, November 11 to 18, done in a brilliant red, "Red Letter Days to See Mary Pickford." It attracts much favorable comment.

MANAGER GEORGE E. CARPENTER, of the Paramount-Empress theatre, was ready before November 1 for collection of war tax on all admissions to that theatre. A second wicket was cut in the box-office glass front, with an attendant in charge. Five colors of war tax tickets were provided, red, white and blue, for the three admission prices; green for school children and pink for passes. As the ticket chopper issued admission tickets the tax collector issued the tax ticket of the corresponding color and made separate collection. The tax money is thus kept separate from the house money, preventing confusion in accounts. At the doors the tickets are dropped in separate boxes.

It is feared that a shortage of pennies will work a hardship on theatres and patrons alike. Pennies have had but little vogue in the Western states, and it is only a few years ago that fractional coinage of less than 25 cents was considered "not legal tender." The growth of the penny's popularity in the last few years has been far in advance of the supply issued (just the same as with all other coins), with the result that the pennies are kept on the jump and there are not enough to go around.

"THE Woman God Forgot," the Artcraft spectacle in which Farrar is the brilliant luminary, and Cecil B. DeMille directed, caused a jam at every performance for four days at the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake, with the result that many were unable to see the beautiful film. Manager George E. Carpenter says that the production is worth a second run in Salt Lake and that when it is repeated it will likely have a bigger vogue than on its first showing.

H. M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, acting on the belief that the rugged scenery in Utah's great southland, where several natural bridges have been formed by the workings of the elements throughout the ages, is planning to send Anita King and a company of photoplayers to Salt Lake City, Utah, soon. Word to that effect was received this week at Salt Lake picture exchanges handling the Balboa products.

Two Frisco Men Go Traveling

D. S. MARKOWITZ, manager of the Western Feature Film Company, has gone to South America with reissues of the William Hart two-reel pictures.

J. C. Cohen, of the Consolidated Amusement Company, Honolulu, will sail for the island capital on November 15. He intends to make another San Francisco and New York trip next summer.

CRANE WILBUR, who starred in "The Finger of Justice," is playing a four-weeks' stage engagement in the Bishop theatre, Oakland.

F. B. Riley has assumed charge of the George Kleine shipping department in San Francisco.

J. A. KRAKER, Vitagraph salesman, who was drafted, has been transferred from American Lake to Camp Kearney. He is in Company A, 159th Infantry. Jack still boosts for films and he requests his friends to send him copies of the Motion Picture News for distribution among the boys at Camp Kearney.

Roy Burt, shipping clerk for Universal, and Fred Blote, poster man for General, have gone over to Pathe.

Visitors in San Francisco's Film Row during the past week were W. B. Martin, of the Star theatre, Modesto; Arthur Brick, Perfection salesman, from Los Angeles, and Sydney E. Abel, of Chicago.

Thomas O'Day is directing a picture and vaudeville house, with seating capacity of 1,800, at Camp Fremont.

F. V. EBERHART, manager of the World Exchange, in San Francisco, has gone into the printing business in Kansas City. The interests of the exchange will be looked after until the end of the year by E. C. Jensen, the World's Western division manager.

Mohr & Martinez, owners of two other theatres, have bought the Ocean View, at Daly City, from V. Preston.

C. L. LANGLEY, formerly of Turner & Dahnken, is building a new theatre at Taft, Cal., to open February 1.

WILLIAM H. JOBELMANN, the popular publicity man of Turner & Dahnken, has resigned to become general manager of the Paul Smith Motion Pictures Company, producers of "The Finger of Justice." The T. & D. publicity will be handled in San Francisco by Manager William Casey, of the Tivoli, and in Oakland by Manager E. V. Clover, of the Oakland T. & D. theatre.

In Los Angeles Studios

GILBERT P. HAMILTON, who recently finished his first Triangle play, is next to make "The Three Godsons of Janette Gontreau," which is now being written for the screen by Harvey Gates, a new member of the Triangle scenario staff. It is an adaptation from the magazine story of the same title.

WALTER EDWARDS this week directed scenes on the big Venetian set built at the Culver City studios for scenes in "The Passion Flower," which offers Alma Reubens supported by Wheeler Oakman. This story will probably be released under the title, "I Love You." The scenes made here required a large number of extra people as they represented carnival nights in the famous city of water highways. The palace built immediately back of the large suspension bridge will be the centre of action for many scenes of the play, for it is here that a brilliant ball is held. The ballroom set was erected on the new comedy stage, just completed, and was so large that it required all of the floor space, 80x400 feet.

NAVAJO Indian settlement has been completed in the foothills near the Triangle Studio for "Man Above the Law," which Director Raymond Wells is now filming. Jack Richardson has the featured part, supported by Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick.

J. P. McGOWAN has again been wayward in the matter of conserving railroad rolling stock and this week put to the bad another perfectly good car. This was shunted off a suspension bridge, which three cameras registered the action for the twelfth episode of "The Lost Express." The scene was filmed in the Arroyo Seco before 5,000 people who had gathered to witness the making of the thrill. On another day McGowan worked on the famous "jacknife" bridge at the San Pedro shipyards, where players were dashed to the waters of the harbor many feet below and then found it necessary to work for several hours in wet clothing.

The Signal Company is now working on the thirteenth installment of "The Lost Express," titled "The Escape."

ONE hundred children, including such well-known film players as Billy Jacobs, Lillian Wade, Doris Baker and George Hupp, this week worked under the direction of Colin Campbell at the Selig plant in scenes for "Little Orphan Annie." The screen version is adapted from the Riley poem of the same name.

In Los Angeles Exchanges

W. J. MULLANEY, Pathe salesman, is home from a trip through Arizona and reports conditions greatly improved there as the result of settlement of strikes at Bisbee, Jerome, Glove and Miami. Conditions in the cotton belt look very promising in the face of a very excellent crop.

PEERLESS Film Service has made first run bookings for the William S. Hart two-reel re-issues, fifteen in all, which are to be shown first at the American theatre, in Los Angeles. Following this they go to the Strand, at Pasadena; Strand, at San Bernardino; Clune's, Santa Ana; La Petite, Ocean Park; Neptune, at Venice, and play a week at Gore's Main Street theatres. Many other bookings have been made for later dates.

JOHN RUGER, who has been cashier of the General Film, Los Angeles, has been engaged for this position at the Mutual Los Angeles branch.

The business of the Mutual Film Exchange is reported to be approximately 60 per cent. better than a few months ago, the increased business being attributed to the improvement of Mutual films.

Denver News and Doings

H. C. Arthur, Goldwyn's representative in Montana, reports great interest in "The Manx-Man" and "The Auction Block." He has been so busy that he has been unable to report to Denver headquarters personally since his transfer two months ago from the Seattle office. He is expected in Denver within the next ten days.

MURRAY HAWKINS, the popular salesman for Select Pictures, doesn't know that the baseball season has closed. He is still pegging away up in the Black Hills section, where he is batting .900. Manager Rennie is wearing a big, broad smile over the big bundle of contracts Hawkins sent in by parcel post. He says Murray has lined up the entire bunch of western Nebraska towns and in the Black Hills.

CARL STERN, who has been on the road for Paramount serials, has resigned on account of the serious illness of his wife in Seattle.

T. Y. Henry, Denver manager for the Notable Feature Film Corporation, has returned from an auto trip covering six towns in southern Colorado, including Trinidad and Walsenburg. He made contracts in all of them as far south as Tucumcari, N. M.

THE Strand theatre, holders of Metro's first run franchise in Denver, report a phenomenal four days' business on Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "The Adopted Son."

Thomas Kirby, proprietor of the Grand, at Sheridan, Wyo., reports that "The Slacker" played to capacity business during the recent snowstorm, when all traffic was delayed and railroad business was almost at a standstill.

M. M. Kravetz has been added to the Denver sales force of Metro. He has been identified with the film business several years and formerly was the owner of the Capitol Film Exchange.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG has just returned to Denver after an extensive trip through the Universal territory, including the exchanges in Butte and Salt Lake City. Mr. Armstrong met Mr. W. A. Bach, service organizer for the Universal Company in Salt Lake City, for a conference with George Mayne, local manager there, relative to putting over the big crop of new pictures on hand and also to move up Mr. Moran, their former bookkeeper, to the post of assistant to Mr. Mayne. This latter action was made necessary by the big increase in Mr. Mayne's managerial duties, as the new Jewel productions for that territory are now in full swing.

Mr. Burke, special representative for the Universal out of the Denver office, has also completed a long trip into the hinterland hereabouts and reports that exhibitors are doing a good business in spite of the war tax, which they are quite properly turning over to the public. Mr. Armstrong, Universal's district manager, says he is well satisfied with Burke's armful of contracts secured on this last trip.

JEWEL productions, ably represented by Mr. Drum, who who has just completed his initial trip throughout this territory, are going to have a big showing, according to Drum, who claims he has lined up 95 per cent. of the territory he covered. Curtis Street has already shown quite a few of the Jewels to appreciative and critical Denver audiences.

Louis Goldstein, manager of the Supreme, in Denver, will leave about the 15th for Chicago and New York.

MORRIS COHN, part owner of the Circle, at Indianapolis, has returned from a conference with other directors and the manager of the Circle. The war tax is now being taken care of by the Circle, which has raised its prices from 15 to 25 for its 1,500 seats downstairs and from 20 to 25 for mezzanine seats.. Balcony seats at 10 cents remain unchanged.

E. P. BRIGGS is a new World representative, recently transferred to the Denver office from Salt Lake City.

N. A. Thompson, auditor of the World Film Corporation, is in Denver for a few days. He is en route West.

Here and There in Spokane

MANAGER RALPH RUFFNER, of the Liberty theatre, says in relation to the raise in admission, that it is going like "a million dollars." At the Clemmer theatre the usual good attendance is announced by Dr. Clemmer under the new schedule of prices.

MANAGER C. STILLWELL reports a raise in price of five cents in all but his nickle houses with no falling off in patronage.

Pathe reports the opening of a new moving picture theatre in Mansfield, Wash.

Manager Potter, of the Universal, finds a flourishing business in his line in this section.

G. A. METZGER, general manager of the Film Supply Co., stopped over in Spokane on his way back from Portland to New York and spent the day calling on exhibitors there.

West Coast Exhibitors

THE Argus theatre, at Santa Barbara, which has been closed for some time, has been opened under the management of A. A. Lloyd, an experienced theatre man, who has contracted for exclusive Mutual service in the home city of American films and will use two changes weekly.

THE first run of the Mutual release, "The Planter," has been booked for Grauman's Strand theatre, at San Francisco, where it will be shown for the two weeks beginning November 11 and 18. Negotiations are now pending for the Los Angeles release and it is a certainty the film will be shown at one of the largest theatres.

AN increase in admission price is reported at San Diego, where all of the former five-cent houses have increased to ten cents with the exception of the Casino. The Grand, which was formerly five and ten cents, is now charging ten and fifteen cents. In all instances except the theatres controlled by G. A. Bush, Superba, Broadway and Illusion, the San Diego theatres are charging the public for the war tax in addition to the regular admission price. The theatres conducted by Bush are all charging ten, twenty and thirty cents.

The Silver Strand theatre, at Coronado, and the Rialto, at Long Beach, have both been closed.

W. W. WILSON, owner of the Plaza theatre, at San Diego, which has been conducted by H. H. White, has assumed the active management of the house. He has remodeled the theatre, redecorated throughout, added an attractive marque, and an electric announcing sign with four-foot letters, together with two new Powers 6B projecting machines. He reopened the theatre with the Mary Miles Minter subject, "Charity Castle," to good business, and followed this with the showing of the Jewel production, "The Man Without a Country."

AN exceptional display was made in a seventy-foot window of Barker Brothers store on Broadway, Los Angeles, last week of Mutual stars in connection with a display of Barker Brothers K-B camera, a device for the amateur to make and project motion pictures. The display was arranged by Manager Merrick, of the Los Angeles Mutual Film Exchange, and C. F. Smith, Barker Brothers' advertiser.

THE War Department has not given a decision with respect to who is to have the amusement concession at Camp Kearney, San Diego. There are three bidders for this: Virginia Judd, of San Antonio, Texas, and F. N. Howe and G. A. Bush, of San Diego.

Business Returning to Normal in Portland

TWO weeks of increased admission prices, coupled with the first flashes of winter weather, resulted in a noticeable falling off of the receipts of Portland's first-run houses, but the situation is rapidly assuming normal conditions.

Exhibitors were first inclined to charge the decrease in attendance to the 5-cent increase in prices, as considerable criticism resulted from the November 1 raise, but when the 5-cent houses, a few of which still adhere to the old price figure, also complained, weather conditions were charged equally with the dropping off in revenue.

John A. Jennings of the Sunset theatre is the only first-run downtown owner who failed to jump the full 5 cents. He finally adjusted his figures so that matinees remain at 15 cents and the evening, Sunday and holiday crowds pay 20 cents.

The Union Avenue theatre, owned by W. A. Graeper, vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, was the first suburban theatre to increase prices from 10 to 15 cents, and Mr. Graeper is flattered at the result.

"I can see no difference in the attendance following the change," comments the elated owner. "I am giving my people better music, with a new Kimball organ recently installed, and have a program lineup for the season that will be a record-breaker."

Mr. Graeper has added a program house organ to his service and gives his patrons a printed glimpse of the features booked for a full month in advance.

E. J. MYRICK, manager of the Liberty and Columbia theatres of Portland, and formerly president of the Oregon Film Association, is recovering from a hospital experience that reduced his weight nearly 20 pounds and robbed him of such unnecessary things as tonsils and adenoids.

Mr. Myrick went to a surgeon's office for a few minutes' stay, went from there to the hospital for a scheduled appearance of one day and before he had finished with the specialists they had discovered so many things requiring the knife that he was away from his Liberty theatre office for more than a week.

THE Strand theatre of Portland, the motion picture-vaudeville house, has inaugurated a new program policy as well as new admission prices. From a 10-cent straight fee the prices were advanced on November 7 to 15 cents for evenings, Sundays and holidays.

The new program policy will give its patrons two changes of show weekly, with five or six acts of vaudeville from Fisher and Hippodrome time, and pictures from Fox, Bluebird and Butterfly. Manager Armstrong is satisfied that this lineup will make the Strand one of the most popular theatres in Oregon.

CHARLES W. MEIGHAN, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, has returned from an exhibition experience of more than a month in Tacoma, Wash., and is temporarily handling film features for Jack Lannon of the Greater Features Company of Seattle.

Mr. Meighan is negotiating for several houses in the Northwest and expects to be firmly established within three or four weeks.

"UNDER the Stars and Stripes" established a new attendance record for private exhibitions last week when W. W. Kofeldt of the Pathe Exchange corralled more than 250 people into the Hippodrome theatre.

D. SLAYBACK, formerly of the Crystal theatre, Portland, has taken over the Mutual theatre at 1062 Union avenue, Portland, and after making a number of changes is in the market for a full feature program.

H. W. HARDING & SON, newcomers to film exhibition, are also new theatre operators of Portland. They have bought the old American, at Russell and Shaver streets, and have opened it as Ye Liberty.

E. R. SAUNDERS of Ilwaco, Oregon, is putting up a new 300-seat fireproof film house to replace his wooden house, the Bell.

Lawson Gets Scenic Artists to Learn Camouflage

Lee Lawson, according to a telegram from Los Angeles, has organized companies of sixty scenic artists from the West Coast studios to become a part of the Twenty-fourth Engineers, to prepare camouflage on the battle front. The company left for the East Monday, it is understood.

Lawson, who was formerly technical director of Universal and other studios, is known as the man who built Rome in a day.

Anti-Censorship Discussed at Baltimore Meeting

A meeting on the anti-censorship question was held at the New Theatre, Baltimore, last week, at which plans were discussed as to the best methods of abolishing motion picture censorship for Maryland. Two members of the House of Delegates, who will represent their contingent at Annapolis at the coming Maryland legislature in January, were present at the meeting and announced that they were against censorship. The Maryland exhibitors were represented by J. Louis Rome, Walter Pacy, Frank A. Hornig, Louis A. DeHoff, Eugene B. McGurdy and E. C. Sandall.

Preceding the meeting there was a dinner held at Nixon's Hotel.

Review Committee Catalogues Garden of Pictures

The National Committee for Better Films, a committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, of 70 Fifth avenue, New York, has had printed and issued a very neat catalogue of motion pictures produced in America between April 1 and October 1, this year, and which is called "A Garden of American Motion Pictures." Following the title of the catalogue the National Committee has designated that the films are for father, mother and the young people.

Companies represented in the catalogue by numerous pictures are General Film, Mutual, Universal, Fox, Greater Vitagraph, K.E.S.E., Metro, Paramount, Pathe, Triangle, Artcraft, Art Dramas, Bluebird, Christie, Goldwyn, World, Selznick, Ivan, Jewel and others.

Cromlow Film Laboratories Get Their Full Share

The Cromlow Film Laboratories, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street and a complete plant at Orange, N. J., are getting their full share of business within the industry, with prospects brighter as time advances.

Under the management of Allan A. Lownes, Cromlow Laboratories have done in the past, and are doing now, laboratory work for some of the foremost concerns in the East, among them Inter-Ocean, Paramount, Manx-Man, McClures and others. Aside from the printing end of the business, Cromlow Laboratories have been specializing in a distinctive type of titles, illustrated.

Marion Leaves on First Leg of European Trip

Is First of Commissioners for Foreign Service to Depart for Scene of Activities—Sails for Italy from Havana

FRANK J. MARION, president of the Kalem Company, and government film commissioner to Spain and Italy, is the first of the commissioners appointed for foreign service to depart for the scene of activities. He left November 16 for Washington, where he had a final conference with government officials and visited his daughter at the National Cathedral School. From Washington Mr. Marion proceeded to Havana, Cuba, and from there he sails immediately for Spain.

Mr. Marion goes on his mission as representative of the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is Chairman, the other members being the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy. Like the other commissioners who have undertaken this patriotic work, Mr. Marion receives no salary.

"Although there may be an impression in the trade that the government has placed undue restrictions upon the commissioners, I want to say that Mr. Creel has been most liberal," said Mr. Marion on leaving. "He has shown a keen appreciation of the exacting duties before me and has done everything possible to expedite my work abroad. He even went so far as to appoint me fiscal agent for the government in the matter of expenditures which will be necessary in the work of the commission. He secured for me a special diplomatic passport and I am indebted to him for his personal supervision of the transportation of my baggage, films and equipment, which have gone forward as diplomatic material.

"Furthermore," continued Mr. Marion, "Mr. Creel was kind enough to assure me on behalf of the other members of the Committee on Public Information that all of their representatives and attaches in Spain and Italy will co-operate with me in every possible manner. For the time being, I expect to make my headquarters at Barcelona, Spain. While general plans have been made for the distribution and exhibition of our films, this is a matter which I must work out after I have personally investigated conditions. With the liberal financial arrangements which the government has made and the co-operation from all quarters which has been assured me, I shall have every opportunity in my mission to apply the principles which have been so successful in America."

During the past month Mr. Marion has worked at high speed in co-operation with J. E. Brulatour, the American commissioner, and his staff headed by A. A. Kaufman, selecting educational films for the populace of Spain and Italy and entertainment subjects for the Italian soldiers.

The films which Mr. Marion is taking into Spain and Italy cover a wide educational field—intimate views of industries and institutions essentially American, schools, colleges, military activities, the pastimes of our people, films portraying the democratic spirit of our executives, and withal a remarkable assortment of pictures which proclaim to the world the independence of the individual in America and his wonderful opportunities for advancement. In short, each film fairly breathes America's message that prosperity and the joy of living are found only in democracy.

O'Sullivan Urges Hoover Method in Music Tax

Thinks Many Withdrawals from Composers' Society Will Put That Organization in Class with Food and Coal Barons

CONCERNING the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in their connection with the motion picture industry insofar as the music tax is affected, Joseph O'Sullivan, director of music service for the Mutual Film Corporation, said last week:

"As far as the motion picture exhibitor is concerned, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is now hors du combat. The elimination of taxable music from their theatres has proved an effective means of convincing these bumptious music-mongers that the public can 'Hooverize' on their product without any serious detriment to its tonal digestion. The many withdrawals from membership in that society will soon put it in a class with the food barons, coal barons, and other obsolete institutions of this great, free and enlightened United States.

"In common with all other animals, the motion picture 'hound' welcomes a relief from the persistent 'stuffing' process practised by all venders of cheap—if deleterious—concoctions, whether in the form of saccharine and soporific tonal melange, or the more palpable confections that account for the high cost of little Johnny's upkeep.

"A steady diet of good, wholesome music, even if somewhat aged in the vat of time, will soon obliterate from the amusement public all remembrance of the 'musical jags' superinduced by the cheap fizz-water of the erstwhile ubiquitous jazz.

"A little condiment—a dash of tobasco—is a splendid relish, but a constant and persistent indulgence in hors d'oeuvre and pastry, not to mention camembert, is fatal to the gastronomic appartus of the most callous and inveterate gourmond."

Al Lena Still Assists Chautard in Young Films

Jack Voshell, formerly assistant to Director Joseph Kaufman, has not displaced Al J. Lena as assistant director to Emile Chautard in the production of Clara Kimball Young features, as was suggested in a statement issued from Miss Young's publicity department recently. Voshell has been added by Harry I. Garson to the staff, but Lena, who has assisted M. Chautard for the past three years, retains that position.

J. Clemons, it is announced, also remains with the French director as technical expert.

Minnesota Exhibitors See Way Through Winter

Prices Raised to Meet Extra War Tax, and Thus Far No Decrease in Attendance Has Been Noticed—Looking After Morals

MINNESOTA exhibitors can see their way through the winter. They have increased prices to meet the extra war taxes and give a little income to meet the increased costs of operation and closing orders issued by the state public safety commission tend to help further.

By ordering every dance hall in the state to close at 10 p. m. the commission has virtually approved the motion picture theatre as the chief form of amusement. This order includes cafes where dancing is permitted. Pool halls must also close at 10 p. m. and the saloons were long ago ordered to close at that hour.

With the closing wave on and half a dozen organizations watching closely for temptations to the young, it is up to the theatres now to look carefully to their places and prevent complaints, just or unjust. Theatres may keep open until 11 p. m. or midnight if they choose, though most of them close about 10:30 p. m. If the theatres are watched by their owners, they will have a prosperous winter in the opinion of most exhibitors.

Minneapolis and St. Paul theatres have raised prices 5 cents all around. Most of the theatres in the state have followed the example. The theatres pay their own tax and save the bother of making change in pennies. The old school theatres had to lay in stocks of pennies to meet the condition and the Orpheum theatre paid $1.05 for each 100 pennies turned in the first week of the new tax. They bought about 25,000 pennies. The even increase imposed by the exhibitors eliminated the difficulty.

The managers of all the Twin City theatres met and agreed to meet the tax with an increase rather than by attempting to sell stamps and tickets or go into any elaborate scheme. For once no one complained of a combine.

The results have been good. There was no falling off in attendance, exhibitors said, the patrons taking the increase as their share of the war expense. The New Garrick theatre now charges 25 cents admission, the New Lyric and the Strand, 20 cents, and the New Astor, New Unique and New Garden, 15 cents each. These are the principal downtown theatres. The others were 10-cent houses and they are now all charging 15 cents.

Jacksonville Starts Drive for Picture Companies

Jacksonville, Fla., has decided to start a campaign to convince motion picture producers that they should locate in the Florida metropolis. For this purpose a special department has been created in the Chamber of Commerce.

The Florida Metropolis, of November 15, carried the following paragraph: For the purpose of going after the motion picture producer and induce him to locate in Jacksonville, the Chamber of Commerce has established a precedent by inaugurating a motion picture service department, with George B. Massey in charge, and through the co-operation of the merchants and business men, will start an active advertising campaign to tell those picture makers who are strangers to Jacksonville, the many advantages offered here, and invite those producers who are annual visitors here, to return.

The Motion Picture Department is the result of a meeting of the Motion Picture Committee of the commerce body held several days ago, at which it was decided to request the board of governors to inaugurate such a department with a competent man in charge, and promising the organization their active support and co-operation.

Tax Thins Audiences in Baltimore Theatres

Exhibitors Declare That Big Deficit in Receipts of Houses Is Noted—Some Consider Going Back to the Former Prices

SINCE the government has inaugurated the collection of the war tax from patrons of motion picture theatres, taken in conjunction with the increased admission prices charged by exhibitors due to higher cost of operation, there has been a noticeable falling off in the attendance at Baltimore picture theatres.

This does not mean that the exhibitors are getting the same money with fewer patrons, but that the falling off in attendance has caused a big deficit in the receipts, notwithstanding the increased admission prices. Some of the exhibitors are seriously considering going back to former prices and being satisfied with much smaller profits. This is in view of the fact that a good many houses are being run at a loss now.

In speaking of the situation, Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theatre, Baltimore, said: "The theatres in the center of the city have very little complaint regarding the increased cost of admission, but there does seem to be an injustice in the methods of collecting the war tax.

"I mean by this that I, as an example, charge 10 cents admission matinees and 15 cents, minimum, at night. On the matinee performance the children's admission is 5 cents. This would necessitate the parent who brought the child to pay me 17 cents for himself and child to get into the show. A man next door to me is running a 5-cent theatre, charges no war tax whatever and in this way it seems that a hardship is imposed upon the man running the better class house. I believe that there should be a tax of 1 cent on a 10-cent admission and when there is one 5-cent admission charged, whether it is half-price or not, there should be no tax upon it unless the tax is imposed upon all 5-cent admissions.

"I know that the exhibitors of Baltimore feel this way about the proposition. Up to the present, however, there has been no concerted action to draw the attention of the Government to the injustice it works."

Cleveland Exhibitors Discuss Footage Tax

Vitagraph Local Manager Speaks in Behalf of All Exchanges Put That Organization in Class with Food and Coal Barons

A LARGE number of exhibitors turned out on Tuesday of last week in Cleveland, O., at the regular League meeting, to which all the local exchange managers had been invited to partake in the discussion of the footage tax, which has been a bone of contention between exchangemen and exhibitors since it went into effect.

Instead, however, of the various exchanges being represented individually, J. R. Johnson, manager of Cleveland branch of Vitagraph, spoke for all the exchanges who are charging the tax.

"I am in no position to tell you on what basis this tax was figured," said Mr. Johnson. "In fact, my only source of information is the same as yours. All I know is that I have instructions to charge the footage tax, and in case an exhibitor refuses to pay I have instructions to cancel his service."

Dave Schumann, of the Dennison Square theatre, was of the opinion arbitration would help matters, but it was apparent this did not express the sentiments of the League, as Sam Bullock declared "The law distinctly says that the manufacturer shall bear that burden. And there is no place where it says anything about passing it on to the exhibitor. I am willing to put it to the test. I shall refuse to pay the tax and will go to law to prove that I don't have to."

Another manager who does not approve of placing the tax on the exhibitor is Leon D. Netter, of Masterpiece Films. He went on record at the meeting, as saying that it was not fair.

The discussion finally drifted back to the exhibitors, who unanimously passed a motion that: Inasmuch as the government has not imposed the footage tax on the exhibitor, The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio, Local No. 1, does strenuously object to stand any portion of his tax. A copy of this motion is to be sent to every exchange in town and every exhibitor in the Cleveland district will receive a communication stating the stand taken by the League and requesting that he adhere to it. In case an exchange should cancel service on an exhibitor, that exhibitor is told to report the act to the League's executive committee, of which Emery Downs is chairman, and the matter will receive immediate attention.

Famous Players-Lasky Get Unique Special Privilege

Funeral ceremonies of Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii, who died in Honolulu November 11, are to be filmed exclusively for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by arrangement with the territorial Government of the Hawaiian Islands, secured by George Melford, who is now at the Islands with Sessue Hayakawa directing "Hidden Pearls" for Paramount.

This is the last time a funeral will be held with the ancient Hawaiian rites and ceremonies, and the perpetuation of the event in celluloid will no doubt be invaluable from a historical standpoint and also form an interesting and impressive picture. Following the death of the Queen, who had been in ill health for many months, preparations were made for the body to lie in state with a territorial guard of honor, pending the funeral arrangements.

Lydia Kamehaha Liliuokalani, the first and only Queen of Hawaii, was born in Honolulu, September 2, 1838, and ascended the throne January 20, 1891, following the death of her brother, Kalakaua I. She had been regent for some time before his death. In 1862 she had married John O. Dominis, an American by birth, who subsequently became Governor of Oahu and who died in Honolulu half a year after his wife became Queen.

Hillar and Wilk Sell Territory for "Raffles"

Hillar and Wilk, who are handling the exploitation of "Raffles the Amateur Cracksman" with John Barrymore in the featured role, report the sale of a large block of southern territory for this independent production. The Special Features Company, Knoxville, Tenn., is the buyer. W. E. Drummond and Nat Royster negotiated the purchase for Special Features. Georgia, Flordia, Alabama and Tennessee are the territories bought.

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman" is an adaptation from E. W. Hornung's play of the same name, produced on the stage about ten years ago. Mr. Hillar announces that within the next week, a trade showing will be given at one of the Broadway theatres, the time and place to be announced later. Mr. Hillar stated also, that he is negotiating for the sale of the entire foreign rights to this production and expects to close the deal this week.

Many Papers Advertise Pathe Cantonment Films

The Atlanta Georgian, Chicago Examiner, Chicago American, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, New York American, New York Journal and Boston American, have been advertising extensively the special National Army Cantonment editions of the Hearst-Pathe News. The idea of showing to every section of the country scenes of the Army camps where their particular men are located has apparently made a big hit. Theatre managers report that the advertising in these papers has helped to create a general interest in these special issues.

Former Universal City Men Wear U. S. Uniform

Nearly Ten Per Cent. of Those on West Coast Now in Cantonments or in Europe, Probably on Firing Line—Some Still on Coast

RESPONDING to Uncle Sam's call for men to serve as parts of his war-machine, nearly 10 per cent. of the men of Universal City are now either in cantonment, en route to strife-ridden Europe or actually on the firing-line. Nearly two-thirds of the men who have gone from the Cinema city did not wait for the selective draft, but hastened to enlist when it was decided that their beloved Uncle was going to take an active hand in the gigantic quarrel.

Douglas Bronston of the scenario department, engaged in writing the first episodes of the serial, "The Mystery Ship," forsook his Remington typewriter and is now packing a Remington rifle somewhere at an officer's training camp. Allen Watt, formerly an assistant director, who went to Europe at the outset of the conflict to film war pictures, now is a captain of the "regulars," commanding a machine gun division. Victor Rottman, who played a principal role with Donna Drew in "The Ghost Girl," also is an officer of America's fighting force.

Many of Universal's men are with the Seventeenth Coast Artillery stationed at Fort McArthur, Los Angeles, guarding submarine bases and the shipping in the harbor. The nucleus of this company originally was formed among the boys of the film capital two years ago. Former Assistant Director Casey Cuthbert is now first sergeant of the company, and Ernest Shield, well known juvenile comedian, and Stanley Fitz, who played in several of the early episodes of Universal's "Red Ace" serial, are sergeants. Several others are soon to be named.

Every department of the immense Universal studios is represented in the following Honor Roll of enlisted men: Charles Allen, nurse, Universal hospital; Maurice Blache, laboratory; Douglas Bronston, writer; Ted Brooks, actor; Charles Catron, property man; Casey Cuthbert, assistant director; J. R. Davis, electrician; Frank Elliott, bookkeeper; Stanley Fitz, actor; Capt. Sterrett Ford, employment department; Charles J. Gillam, stage carpenter; John Goodrich, scenic artist; Harry Gunstrum, property man; Carl W. Heindle, operator; Burt Howell, stage carpenter; Jack Hutchinson, actor; H. Lee Hugunin, stenographer; Howard Knoth, actor; Herman Krause, property department; E. McDawd, cameraman; Eric Meisel, property department; Carl Miller, actor; E. J. Montgomery, property man; Joe Neary, actor; Joe Parker, storeroom; W. L. Prager, actor; W. Pasquette, actor; H. B. Pritchard, bookkeeper; S. Quincy, assistant cameraman; Cecil Reed, laboratory; Victor Rottman, actor; Ernest Shield, actor; W. Tomlinson, actor; Clyde Vineyard, property man; Dan Welsh, chauffeur; Allen Watt, assistant director and Charles Woolstenhulme, property department.

Schenck and Steger Join—Active Co-operation

Joseph M. Schenck and Julius Steger Announce Closer Alliance —Schenck's Offices in Longacre Building Headquarters

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK and Julius Steger have joined forces and will in the future be actively engaged in co-operative work along producing lines. For several months back Mr. Schenck and Mr. Steger have been associated in a business way but not until last week did they come out flatly with the announcement that they were to act together. The partnership arrangement will not, it is stated, interfere with either Mr. Schenck's work in promoting the interests of the Norma Talmadge Company nor will Mr. Steger's work in connection with productions in which Evelyn Nesbit, Charlotte Walker and Anna Case, be affected.

Mr. Schenck and Mr. Steger now occupy the same suite of office in the Longacre Building, Mr. Steger having moved from the suite formerly occupied by him in the same building. Mr. Steger announces that the relations which have existed in the past between him and Mr. Schenck have been of a quasi-partnership nature and that the progress which both have made in the producing lines necessitated this closer alliance which was effected last week.

Early in the new year, Mr. Steger announces that he will commence work on the production in which Anna Case, the opera star, will be featured. Announcement was made some months ago to the effect that Miss Case had signed to appear in pictures for the first time under Mr. Steger's management and direction. Due to the fact that Miss Case has been engaged in concert work, she has not been at liberty to start work in pictures. In January, her concert work will have been completed for the season and immediately thereafter she will commence work on her first production

He announces that Evelyn Nesbit's second picture, "Disillusioned" has been completed with the exceptions of the titles and editing. The feature is now in the hands of the cutter, Mr. Steger announces, and will be ready for release about the middle of December. The production in which Charlotte Walker appears as the featured player, is also completed and in the hands of the cutter and editor, he announces, and will be released the latter part of December or the first part of January.

Universal Shows "Mystery Ship" at Broadway

Universal has announced a special exhibition of the first six episodes of "The Mystery Ship" at the Broadway theatre, Thursday morning of this week (Nov. 22), at 10 o'clock. Invitations have been mailed to exhibitors in Greater New York and the surrounding territory, announcing the event to individual showmen.

First National Exhibitors Get Behind "Some Smoke" Campaign

THE leading theatres of the First National Exhibitors' circuit have agreed to give 5 per cent of their receipts Thanksgiving week to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

Following is a letter from J. D. Williams, general manager of First National Exhibitors' circuit, to which the theatres of his circuit are responding enthusiastically:

"Gentlemen:—I cannot too strongly endorse, both from a business and a patriotic standpoint, the proposition made to you in the enclosed letters from 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' and the Rialto theatre of New York.

"The plan calls for each theatre to give 5 per cent of its gross receipts for Thanksgiving week to this fund. I am very sure that this amount will come back to you over and over again through the increased attendance.

"I hope you will write at once to 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund,' telling them to count on you.

"Very truly yours,

"J. D. WILLIAMS."

Motion Picture Division of the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund

Entire Fund Total to Date	$96,526.01
Motion Picture Division, Total to Date	392.46

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.

2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

Love Reelected on Censorship Board in Nashville

Hamilton Love of Nashville, a member of the Advisory Committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, has just been reelected chairman of the Board of Censorship of that city at the first meeting held by it since he was reappointed a member of the Board by Mayor William Gupton. The Mayor also reappointed the other members of the Board whose terms of appointment had terminated. It is interesting to note that their reappointments took place regardless of the fact that practically all of them were opposed to Mayor Gupton's campaign for election. This means that the regulation of motion pictures in Nashville will be carried on in the future as in the past. The bulletins of the National Board of Review are used as a basis for the regulation of motion pictures in Nashville.

Augusta Jessica Freuler Buried

Gorgeous floral offerings, hundreds of messages of condolence from all over the country and the presence of prominent film men marked the funeral of Mrs. Augusta Jessica Freuler, wife of President J. R. Freuler, Mutual Film corporation, in Milwaukee, November 10. A special party from Chicago was composed of Terry Ramsaye, John F. Cuneo, Dennis J. Sullivan, Hobart Hutchinson, Paul R. Kuhn, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Sheffield and Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Nehlss.

Edison Service Flag Carries Nine Stars

The service flag of the Edison Studios, it was made known this week, has added the ninth star. E. H. Griffith, former director, is engaged in social hygiene work for the National Defense Council; C. S. Williams, Jr., former scenario editor, is a Captain in the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg, and other Edison employees are in the service of Uncle Sam in various branches.

Directors' Association Initiates Members This Week

At the regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association to be held on Tuesday evening, November 20, the following directors will be initiated: James Kirkwood, Leonce Perrett, Hobart Henley and George Irving.

In the absence of Director Dwan, Director J. Gordon Edwardes will occupy the chair.

Director Travers Vale is expected to read another of his interesting papers.

Producers Reserve Boxes for Annual Ball

The Manhattan Local No. 1, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, announced last week from the office of State Secretary Thomas Howard, that Vitagraph, Powers and Universal are among those who have already reserved boxes for the seventh annual ball of the League at Terrace Garden, December 7.

Pathe Creates New Position for F. C. Quimby

Latter Now Holds Post of Sales Manager and Takes Full Charge of Selling Organization—Knows Business All Way Through

F. C. Quimby, Recently Appointed Sales Manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

A PATHE announcement this week contains news of the creation of a new position, that of sales manager, and the appointment of one of the best known salesmen in the country, F. C. Quimby, to the post.

Mr. Quimby is said to know the Pathe organization from the ground up, there being few if any of the present sales force who have been with the company longer than he. He was special representative in charge of the Pacific Coast offices when he left Pathe recently to take a position with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

He now returns to take active charge of the entire Pathe selling organization, acknowledged to be one of the best in the industry, and it is understood that this Pathe sales efficiency is in no small measure due to Mr. Quimby's work in the West, his ideas, which he put in practical and successful operation, having been adopted throughout the country.

Mr. Quimby has had four years in the newspaper business and for four years he managed his own theatre. He has had six years' experience as exchange man and division manager. He knows advertising and the practical exploitation of the picture. His idea is to train the entire Pathe sales force till every man in it can put a picture over for exhibitors.

There are four cardinal principles of business to which Mr. Quimby expects to devote his time, attention and energy:

1. The running of each and every department in each and every exchange on a clean practical business basis.
2. Following to the letter Pathe's policy of courtesy in the conduct of an office.
3. Cooperation of a really practical kind, between home office, exchange, exhibitor and newspaper.
4. An efficient and sincere investigation of any possible complaints and troubles that might arise either within the sales organization itself or between the sales force and its customers.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, issued the following statement to the organization: "F. C. Quimby, formerly one of our branch managers and more recently northwestern division manager, has been appointed sales manager. Mr. Quimby will assume active control of the sales department in the very near future."

General Film Rejects Footage Tax on Reels

Advises All Branch Managers to Charge Exhibitors No Tax on Their Pictures—Credits Move to Co-operative Spirit

ON Monday, November 12, all General Film branch managers were notified from headquarters in New York to abstain from making the recently agitated charge of fifteen cents per reel per day against exhibitors for rented films.

This action lines up the General Film Company squarely as one of the distributing organizations which will not expect exhibitors to bear this added charge.

An official of the company described the action in the following words: "The directors of the General Film Company have ordered the discontinuance of the charge of fifteen cents per reel per day. This was done at the first regular meeting after the passage of the Revenue Bill, and as soon as the directors had the opportunity to act on the information gathered for their consideration.

"The action is taken with the full understanding of the additional burden which will have to be borne by the company and its contributing manufacturers, the extent of which is now appreciated by the exhibitors. However, it was determined to relieve the exhibitor in every possible way, even though sacrifices had to be made to do so.

"In doing this the General Film Company is following its policy of co-operating with the exhibitor in every way in its power in order to advance his interest. It is the practice of the General Film Company wherever it can to suggest to its exhibitors means and methods for the promotion and increase of their business. The exhibitors appreciate this and the action of the General Film Company in meeting the demands of the exhibitors in the matter of discontinuance of the fifteen cent charge is a further evidence of its desire to do all within its power to advance the interests of those who look to it for assistance in promoting the Motion Picture Industry."

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Keeping After Patrons Every Day

Suggestions for Advertising Weekly and Semi-Weekly Change Houses—Varying Displays

PREVIOUS discussions of advertising in this department have referred only to the Sunday displays. The weekday exploitation is just as important, though many exhibitors do not appear to believe so. In fact, it is remarkable in a survey of a number of daily newspapers to find that in some instances, and in cities of considerable size, that many theatres are content to use space on Sunday only and none during the week.

That is poor policy. If a theatre can really afford only a certain amount of money for display, it would be a great deal better to reduce the Sunday display to the point that will provide for showing on every day of the week. And, as a matter of fact, if the exhibitor finds that the Sunday advertising is paying him, he will find that the increased patronage will justify the additional expense of seven days a week advertising.

Keep your wares before the public every day. Don't rely on the reader of your Sunday display making up his mind to see your picture on Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday. Put your punch in your newspaper display Sunday and, if possible, get the idea in his mind that he will see the picture on a certain day, but be sure that when that day rolls around you will have a reminder before him in the shape of an advertisement in the newspaper that day.

We have heard some exhibitors oppose daily advertising on the ground that they want to center the display on Sunday and then depend upon the "word of mouth" advertising that will come from those who determine to see the picture Sunday or Monday. Certainly there can be no question about the fact that "word of mouth" advertising is the most valuable sort, but it is folly to depend upon that alone. Granted that a person who has seen your attraction on Sunday or Monday recommends it to a dozen more people, would it not be a much surer guarantee that those persons would attend if they had a daily reminder that this was a good show? Certainly there could be no argument about that.

Other exhibitors who advertise only on Sunday base their policy on the fact that they get representation on the theatre or motion picture page with stories and pictures on Sunday and that they get none during the week. Experience all over the country has shown that there can be no discussion about this. Newspapers everywhere will be found ready to co-operate with the theatres, and they will help convince the exhibitor that it does pay to advertise every day in the week. Your example may start the other houses to using daily space and any newspaper, when it finds that there is a demand for this matter and that the advertising justifies it is pretty certain to meet the conditions. That is the reason why papers all over the country are running daily photoplay columns. We know of one instance where the owner, when the price of paper soared, attempted to cut out this column with the result that there were so many complaints from patrons themselves that the column was speedily restored. We are going to take up later this question of newspaper co-operation and show you what papers are doing in various sections, but this will serve to dismiss the argument here.

It seems so obvious that theatres making daily changes or running pictures for only two days are compelled to advertise daily, even if merely in "directory" form, that we are going to confine the discussion here to theatres running pictures a week, or those making mid-weekly changes.

Most of the theatres that are converted to daily advertising do not get the full benefit out of their expenditure because they do confine their week-day advertising to the directory or the card form. In other words they write their Sunday display and then a smaller display which is printed in the dailies—in the identical form—during the run of the picture.

This is bad advertising. There should be thought given to each display each day and there is never any excuse in running the identical advertisement more than two days in succession. It should be as strikingly different as possible, keeping in mind what we have said to you before about maintaining the individuality of the house by using your standard "name plate" and keeping close to your regular styles.

There are certain days of the week on which both weekly change and semi-weekly change houses should use more space than on other days and there are very apparent reasons for that. (In fact the more you begin to study all angles of advertising—and for that matter all angles of theatre management—you will find that there is a very marked psychology to all of it.)

Let us take up first the weekly change house, which we will illustrate with the advertising of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, one of the most intelligently exploited houses in the country and, therefore, one of the most successful financially.

We will presume that in all cases of week-run advertising you have hit the picture a big smash on Sunday. This is essential whether you have a Sunday showing or not. The Sunday paper is the most closely read issue of all, because it remains in the home and is seen by practically the whole family—because it causes gossip and because it fixes more or less firmly in the minds of the readers their program for the wek. If you are interested in what the Circle did on its Sunday display, turn to last week's issue of the NEWS and you will find a reproduction of the advertisement which occupied a space five columns wide by nineteen inches deep.

While we failed to receive a specimen of the Monday advertisement on this big double bill, the Italian war picture and "Magda," we know enough about the policies of the Circle to feel sure that on that day a smaller advertisement was used. The reason for this is that the "word of mouth" advertising does get in a great effect for the first day and the strength of the Sunday display is still pulling patrons in for you. And another point is that the newspapers give reviews of the pictures on Monday and this may be counted as directly in addition to the display advertising and the best possible sort of publicity, for a great percentage of those who saw your display Sunday and failed to go to the theatre that day will be anxious to see what the newspaper says about it. In keeping with the amount of space used on Sundays and other weekdays we would advise a space two columns wide by three inches deep on this Monday display.

Now note that this is in the case of theatres that give Sunday showings. If you are unable to open until Monday you should again use considerable space in your Monday display—say about half as much as you used on Sunday. You haven't yet had the advantage of the "talk" from those that have seen the picture.

On Tuesday the advertising should grow. You should figure that by this time the pulling power of your Sunday display has grown less and you need a new argument to put before the public—additional reasons why this bill should not be missed—Circle theatre increases its advertising to 4¾ inches across 2 columns. Right here it is well to call attention to one thing that makes the advertisements of the Circle theatre stand out—they are different. You will see that the same cut is not used twice in the series; each display has a separate appeal and therefore each one will attract attention to itself as well as achieve the cumulative effect.

What is true of Tuesday conditions is even more true on Wednesday and Thursday. The Circle increases its advertising on those days still further, using a space Wednesday 2 columns wide by 7 inches deep and Thursday 3 columns by 3½ inches. Now such advertising ought by this time to have attracted the attention of everyone in the city. The various displays should have drawn so many people into the theatre that the "word of mouth" advertising has been increased many fold since Monday. The theatre can now afford to drop down for the remaining two days, but it cannot afford to drop out.

The Circle theatre evidently believed that it had attracted all the attention necessary to "The Battle of Gorizia" for it turned its attention Friday and Saturday to Clara Kimball Young in "Magda." Friday the theatre uses a space 2 columns wide and 2¾ inches deep and on Saturday the same width but only 2 inches deep.

In our opinion the Circle theatre furnishes a splendid example of the way to divide your advertising over the various days. The only criticism that we would make is that we believe that it is good policy, in most communities, to enlarge the Saturday display and devote two-thirds of the attention to the picture that is to open Sunday. It gets the "advance jump," so to say. It takes advantage of those who on Saturday are making their plans for Sunday and there are a large number who are doing this. Still, this is a point on which many authorities differ, some preferring to keep all the interest on the NOW picture until the run is entirely ended.

Now for the house that changes its bill twice a week. We take as an illustration of this the Imperial theatre, Montreal. (And let us say in this connection that many American exhibitors might well take exploitation tips from their Canadian allies.) The Imperial changes its bill on Sundays and Wednesdays. A peculiar situation exists in Montreal in that most of the papers are not printed on Sunday. But the Imperial furnishes an excellent example of the arrangements of advertising, if one simply adds to that a liberal display in the Sunday papers, which are printed in most of the cities in this country.

So we will presume that the campaign has been started by a Sunday display, advertising the picture opening that day, with reference at the bottom of the ad and in smaller type to the mid-week change in bill.

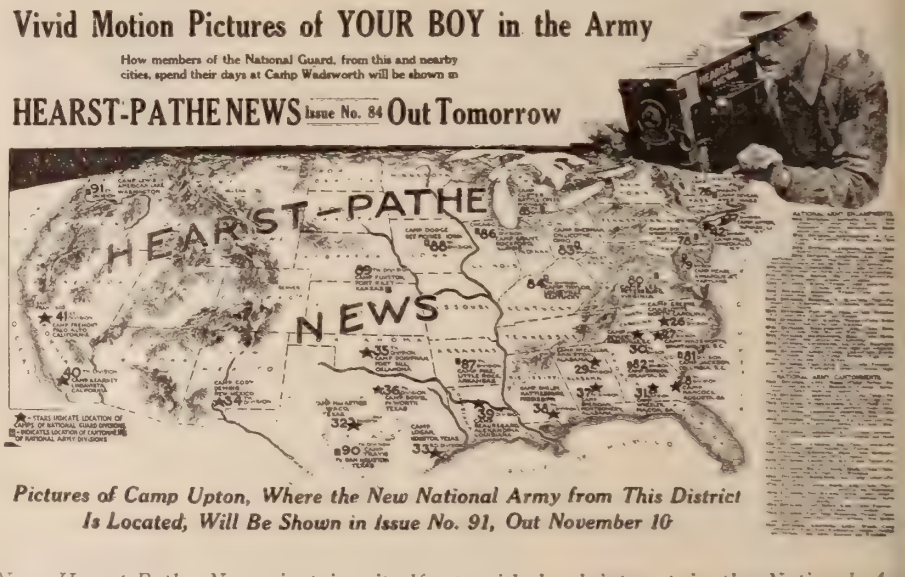
Monday the Imperial uses 3¼ inches single column advertising its current attraction, for the same reasons as we have pointed out in the case of the Circle. But Tuesday the situation is different. This is the last day of the run of the Charles Ray picture and Sunday having been, presumably, the big day, the Imperial devotes the greater part of its attention to the attraction for the coming day, Clara Kimball Young. Wednesday and Thursday the same advertising is used, with a cut of the star and occupying a space 7¼ inches deep. Friday the theatre can afford to drop down slightly in the space used and it does so, though it keeps the name of the star and the story prominently to the front.

On Saturday the Imperial hits a swat for its Sunday change, although we believe it is bad form, where you have a Sunday paper coming in between, to devote any space at all to the middle of the week change. The Imperial cut the TODAY attraction down too far in order to accomplish this display. We would at least have given "Magda" the additional space accorded the Geraldine Farrar picture—if we also had the Sunday paper, though, of course, the Imperial was laboring under this handicap.

But the point that we have tried to point out here is that not only must you advertise every day, but there are some days on which advertising is worth more than others, and resting upon perfectly logical theories.

Here is a suggested arrangement of the expenditure of space for a week run attraction: Sunday, 30 per cent; Monday, 5; Tuesday, 10; Wednesday, 15; Thursday, 15; Friday, 10, and Saturday, 15.

For a twice-a-week change the same space on Sunday and Monday, and 15 per cent on Tuesday, provided you are changing the bill the next day, and then 20 per cent on the day of the change, followed by 10 on Thursday, 5 on Friday and 15 on Saturday.



Of course, these percentages are subject to local conditions. There are a few cities in the country where Saturday advertising is not considered of great value because of the fact that it is a half holiday. No one can figure out any definite schedule without taking local conditions into consideration. You can better figure these percentages out for yourself.

But the point is that you should advertise every day and that you should take advantage of the pulling power of advertising on different week days. Try to keep your theatre before the public always and try to gauge your advertising, in quantity and quality to build up your business on what would be the weak days if you failed to advertise or simply resorted to the standing card system.

There are lots of things to learn about advertising, but none more important than timing your blows to get the most out of them.

That Jewel Productions is keeping it promise to supply highly artistic advertising during the runs of its productions i certain cities is evidenced by the advertising campaign that is being conducted i Philadelphia in connection with the showing of "The Co-Respondent," Starring Elain Hammerstein. All of these advertisement are "big copy" carrying striking hal tones with artistic typing. It is the sort o display that is bound to attract attention

Pictures of Camp Upton, Where the New National Army from This District Is Located, Will Be Shown in Issue No. 91, Out November 10

Now Hearst-Pathe News is tying itself up with local interest in the National Arm Cantonments. The Atlanta Georgian, Chicago American, Chicago Examiner, Los Angele Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, New York American, New York Journal and Bosto American have been advertising the special National Army editions of Hearst-Path News. The idea of showing to every section of the country scenes in the army camp where their boys are located has made a big hit. Theatre managers report advertisin increased the interest greatly.

Butte Theatre Manager Raises and Lowers the American Flag Every Day

LAST week we told you that P. E. Noble, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Montana, was one of the exhibitors of the country well worth watching. He is up to date on lobby displays, advertising and all of the branches of exhibition. Now here is another way that he has taken advantage of conditions and has served to unite patriotism with exploitation.

Mr. Noble started the patriotic movement in Butte recently by setting the example for proprietors of big business houses to raise the American flag each morning and to lower it each evening. Rain, snow or sunshine, the national emblem goes up and down every day over the American theatre.

Mr. Noble, who had a military course at the Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, acts as bugler. In fact he performed the same role at the military college. Assisting Mr. Noble in the ceremony is Charles Kelly, who was a member of the Ninth Illinois regiment in the Spanish-American war. Inauguration of this ceremony brought prominent displays in the Butte papers.

"My action is a patriotic endeavor to get the people of Butte to extend the honor and courtesy to the American flag that it is entitled to," declared Mr. Noble. "The American theatre has flown no flag until it could do so properly—that is, lower it at sundown, as prescribed by military law. There are a number of states that demand this. Some cities also have ordinances that make it compulsory to lower Old Glory at sundown."

Mr. Noble added that it is the desire of the American theatre management to have all business houses, in the downtown section at least lower their flags. Business men, with whom Mr. Noble has discussed the matter are enthusiastic over his plan and a number have promised to cooperate with him in lowering the flag from the stores and buildings as Mr. Noble sounds retreat from the roof of the American theatre.

Bureau Invites Ideas Used in Stunts for Holidays

What holiday stunts are you putting over at your theatre?

How are you utilizing Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year's in your program, your newspaper advertising and your exploitation?

Have you done anything out of the way in stage displays, in the decoration of your theatre, in special music or original programs?

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau would like to have the benefit of your ideas. Send us an account of the special stunts that you have used, especially if you have photographs to illustrate them, or specimens of your advertising and programs.

The live exhibitor is taking advantage of this season of the year to promote business. Are you doing that?

Fox Issues Handsome "Cleopatra" Brochure

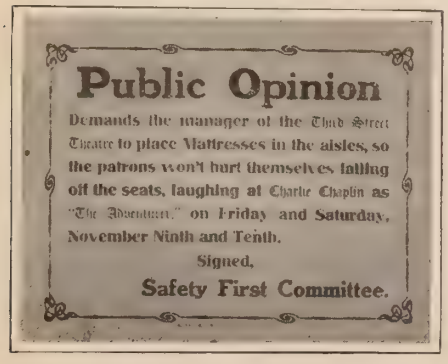
As an exhibitor's aid in the exploitation of "Cleopatra," the big production starring Theda Bara, the Fox Film Corporation has issued an unusually handsome sixteen-page brochure. These were inaugurated with the presentation of Dustin Farnum in "The Spy" and will be continued on all Standard Pictures.

The brochures, which by their own quality emphasize the elaborate and artistic sides of the productions, describe the picture in such a manner as to give the exhibitor an excellent idea of the points to be developed in his own publicity work. The "Cleopatra" booklet, for instance, the cover of which is in purple, black and orange on white cardboard, is a reproduction of the Sphinx with the face faded into a likeness of Theda Bara, exactly as it is shown on the screen.

The articles between the covers, all well illustrated—many without much covering except that of the book—emphasize the sumptuousness of the production, explain the version of "Cleopatra" followed by Fox, discuss reincarnation theories and cryptic prophecies coupling the Cleopatra personality with that of Miss Bara and give details regarding the elaborate settings and costumes and the battle effects on land and sea. The two center pages are devoted to pictorial presentation of "the three loves of Cleopatra"—the tempting of Pharon, the ambitious love for Caesar and the real love for Antony.

Your Idea—and Ours

RECENTLY we called your attention to the value of the use of cuts of the stars in your advertisement. Standard theatre, Cleveland, O., which is one of the most intelligently advertised houses in the country furnishes a novel example of the use of four cuts of Mae Marsh and one of Bobbie Harron in advertising



"Sunshine Alley." This was a particularly adaptable subject, for Miss Marsh has a most appealing face and one that attracts the attention of readers without the name. Note that the Standard has not gone into any description of the picture—it is allowed to stand simply on the popularity of the two stars. And in order that one may remember her work in past productions she is shown as she appeared in a couple of her former pictures.

Every now and then we find the expression: "Nothing cheap except the prices." Certainly the expression itself is.

THIS is an idea that we wouldn't recommend for steady use, but once in a while these circus stunts go over. Manager Buss, of the Third Street theatre, Easton, Pa., used big red cards with good effect in advertising Charlie Chaplin in "The Adventurer." This is perfectly legitimate advertising and will attract attention in small communities.

It is a good idea to note that Church

text type was used in the name of the theatre, Chaplin's name and the title of the picture. This kept them from standing out and "giving away" the notice and caused the public to read entirely through the card. These were 11 by 14 inches and were tacked up all around the city of Easton and placed in store windows.

Most people who try camouflage in the motion picture business generally end by hiding the truth from themselves.

MANAGER J. A. CARRIER, of the Avon theatre, Decatur, Ill., put over a clever one over the opposition of his afternoon newspaper and the stunt had everyone in the city talking. The Decatur Review refused to sell Mr. Carrier a thousand copies of the newspaper, suspecting that he had some advertising scheme, but this did not stop him. He arranged a crew of boys to purchase papers from the newsboys as fast as they came out of the newspaper office, and these were rushed to the printers where the imprint advertising "The Whip" was placed over the front page in red ink. The papers were then turned back to the regular newsboys free and they were sold in that shape. In addition copies were placed in all of the business houses and one on every table in the restaurants. The newspaper management was somewhat peeved at Mr. Carrier's enterprise, but forgave him on his promise of "Never Again." We don't recommend fighting the newspapers, but one has to hand this showman the palm for enterprise.

Fifty-seven varieties of policies are pretty certain to put your theatre in pickle.

HERE is just another of the little things that count in conducting a motion picture theatre. To no increased expense, Manager Arthur G. Stole of the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa., used a specially designed program for his November bill, carrying out the Thanksgiving idea. These "stock cuts" are such as are in the possession of any good printer, even in the smaller cities and they added a holiday touch to the program. There's a whole lot in adapting yourself to the season. It makes your program all the more read, and certainly convinces the public that you are enterprising.

No matter what your finances may be, remember that the public has the first mortgage on your theatre.

L. M. SCRIVEN, manager of the Lyric theatre, Hawarden, Iowa, shows that a small-town exhibitor can adopt ideas that will bring him business. He believes in keeping up the interest in serials and so

You will find my picture on the other side of this card.

I am one of Pathe's greatest stars.

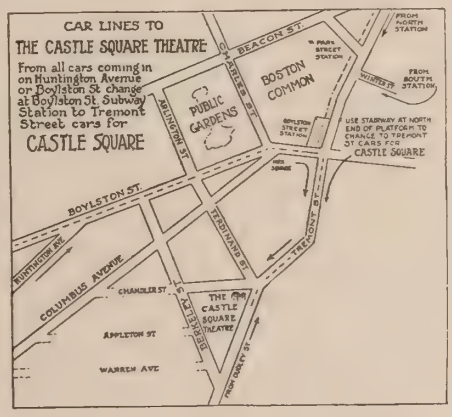
What Live Wires Are Doing

during the run of "The Seven Pearls," Pathe serial starring Mollie King, he mailed to all of his patrons and his possible patrons cards bearing the picture of Miss King. On the reverse side was the message reproduced here.

This is getting into play the direct personal touch on the current chapter. Note the name of the picture itself is not even mentioned and doubtless there were scores of people who had not seen the first episodes who were attracted by this announcement.

Live exhibitors are men who put the "Am" in Ambition.

HERE is another example of the clever advertising that is being done in New York City on "Cleopatra," in which Theda Bara is starring. It might be called the more sensational style of display, but still the subject is well fitted to this plan.



In this display the designer has hit upon the idea of camparing Venus, Cleopatra and Miss Bara in their physical form and while there is no special reason for the comparison, it is bound to attract attention. And the big point about this advertising is that it is unusual, and unusual things generally accomplish all that is asked for them in the way of exploitation.

The "Special Vampire Matinee" is another good idea. Real, imaginary, finished and amateur vampires were invited to come that day. It was a clever stunt.

Put that "Welcome" from the doormat on your face. A lot more people will see it.

CASTLE SQUARE THEATRE, Boston, has adopted a rather novel idea in its house program—a map of the neighborhood to show the public how to reach the theatre. This shows the location of the house and the various "L," subway and surface lines going to various parts of the city. Evidently this house is working for new patronage all the time and this is one of the ways to get it. Of course, Boston is a large city and there is an almost unlimited field to which the theatre may appeal, but the same idea might be used with success by many of the neighborhood houses in cities of 100,000 and more, because it will be found that the greater part of the people are uncertain what car lines to take to reach these houses.

The idea might be further elaboratd to good use and used in country weeklies to show the auto trade of your section how they can get to your house and what are the good roads to it from the various neighboring towns.

There is but one "U" in success. Think it over.

HERE is the best advertisement of a theatre that has been called to our attention during the week. It is the work of the Strand theatre, Seattle.

In the first place one must understand that it occupies a space four columns wide by sixteen inches deep. And then you appreciate how striking the face of Mrs. Castle appears, occupying more than half of the entire space. Also note that there is very little type, for really the name of the theatre in outline space at the top and the smashing profile of the star tell the whole story. How many exhibitors using an equal amount of space would try to tell everything they knew about the production and leave nothing for the imagination of the patron?

The exhibitor who is following the same policies he followed four years ago is generally the one who sees nothing but gloom in the industry.

SHADE theatre, Sandusky, O., used a novel and inexpensive lobby display during the run of the Goldwyn picture, "Baby Mine" recently. The lobby is long and between the ropes dividing the entrance from the exit space a nurse was placed with a couple of large dolls in baby carriages. In addition there were a couple of other large dolls seated in swings, while all around the ceiling of the lobby were other dolls. Along the walls still others were hung. It is noteworthy that there is not a single sign or piece of printed matter in the display. The management centered everything on the baby idea and got it over in splendid fashion.

The theatre manager who sees gloom ahead all the time need not expect crowds thronging to his theatre seeking joy.

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

SOME weeks ago we told you that Rothapfel said that he had never allowed the Rialto to be used for propaganda except the propaganda of patriotism. And the Rialto is going to that to the limit, and anyone who does not leave the theatre at least a more active American in the cause of his country certainly lacks the red corpuscles in his blood. To tax a theatre that is doing what the Rialto is doing is injustice; better had the Government pay such a motion picture house a bonus.

And every one of you can aid your country along the same line—all can contribute something to the national cause through your screen and your music. And you can do it with the feeling that you are giving the public just what it wants—if you show the pictures in that spirit that warms the heart—and not in the spirit of exploitation. Rothapfel does not advertise his patriotism: the Rialto reveals it. And we use the word "reveal," because the whole atmosphere of the presentation is perfect; because you are led to the spiritual plane where you do not force yourself to applause to show that you are a good American, but where you are carried away on the tide of sentiment. It is one thing to show a picture to invite applause, another to make the picture itself sweep you along.

In all the writer's experience with motion picture theatres, we don't believe that we have ever seen staged in any theatre a novelty that got as much heart-made applause as did the musical episode, "The Farewell," which is being sung this week by Greek Evans, baritone, and Mary Ball, soprano, two artists who have often scored big hits at the Rialto. Dr. Reisenfeld, who is in charge of this part of the program in the absence of Mr. Rothapfel on the coast, staged this patriotic wonder. First, with the lights low, and only the blue tone illuminants aglow, Miss Ball comes on the stage and begins to sing "Goodbye Dolly Gray," which was one of the most popular songs in Spanish-American war days. Finally, at the end of the verse, Mr. Evans, wearing the uniform of blue that obtained in the army in those days appeared and joined the duet. The audience went mad with applause. But that was not all—there was a second verse, this time applying to the boys who are going to fight for the liberty of the world. As this second verse began the curtains before the caplay panels on either side of the screen parted and showed the Statue of Liberty, illuminated, on one side, and the water front of Manhattan at night on the other. And as Mr. Evans reappeared, this time in the khaki uniform of to-day, there appeared behind the Statue of Liberty the beams of red, white and blue that caused the audience to drown the voices of the singers. Voices in the gallery cried out and there were mighty few dry eyes around the place where we sat.

You haven't the lighting effects of the Rialto, nor such a splendid orchestra, but a tableau along these lines could be put on in any theatre and your audiences will NEVER forget it.

With the exception of a Katzenjammer Kids cartoon, which is put in to relieve the strain, every number in the Rialto Animated Magazine bears on the war, and every one gives a thrill of patriotism.

But first let us explain a most clever introduction to the weekly and one that Dr. Reisenfeld has splendidly worked in with the music and lighting. After the scenic feature the orchestra takes up "The March of the Toys" from Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland." Almost at the conclusion of the number from either side of the screen comes a young lady dressed in the costume of a toy, and do the clever mechanical dance which ends in their parting the curtains over the screen for the announcement of the magazine. It was a delightful little touch.

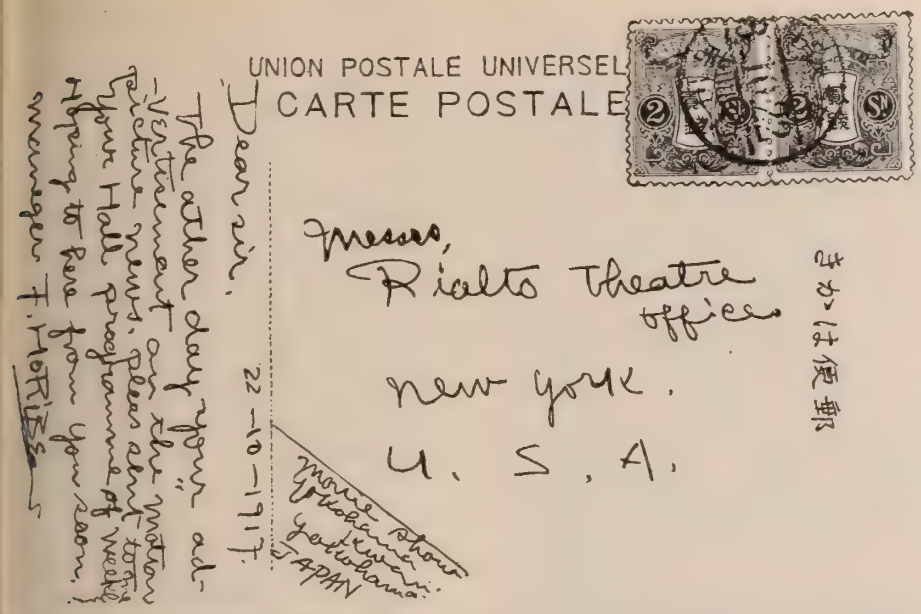
The magazine opens with an "Editorial"—"Be a War Daddy"—with an appeal for the community camp service. Then follows pictures of the National Army in training "somewhere in America" and the orchestra made it stirring by playing "Loyal Comrades." Then followed a Hy Mayer cartoon, "The Height of Liberty," celebrating the victory of woman suffrage. The musical accompaniment was "Oh, Johnny," one step. This fit exactly into the pictures of the first women mail carriers that followed. There the spirit of men and women joining to win the war followed with pictures of city firemen knitting for the soldiers. It has a clever comedy element. The Washburn Wire Works fire, the supposed work of enemies was shown to the accompaniment of fire bells, rushing water, etc. There came a pretty turn next with the American flyers in France paying tribute to the memory of Guynemer, the French aviator. The orchestra halted and the great organ broke into a chant of victory. A French officer who sat in the front row and whose blue cap lay on the orchestra rail, put his handkerchief to his eyes and every American heart in the audience burst with the emotion that was aroused by the picture. Then came contrastic relief with the comic cartoon. More excerpts from a letter written by one of Pershing's men to his folks in America, illustrated with scenes in France was shown while "Wake Up America" was played, intermingled with cannon shot and noise of combat. Then followed the visit of President Marchado of Portugal, accompanied by President Poincare to the French troops at the front, shown with "The March of Honor" and the audience cheered itself frantic. The magazine closed with a second cartoon, "Rushing the Christmas Kit," which showed the Allies filling Italy's stocking in the time of her need.

There is an interesting nature picture this week, one of the Pathe color products, showing how birds feed their young. There are plenty of laughs to it and it was accompanied by Victor Herbert's "Badinage."

The audience was particularly delighted with the feature, Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon," a fantastical comedy with plenty of action in it, and they even applaud Fairbanks name in the title. "Yvette," a one step was the musical motif. A splendid comedy effect was attained in the flat blare of trumpets every time "Long Live the King" was flashed on the screen, an element of humor that one must see the picture to realize.

There is another one of the clever, intensely human Drew-Metro comedies, this being "A Close Resemblance"—nothing much but a whole lot of good humor of the clean, appealing sort.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF NOV. 18



"DAMAGED, NO GOOD," a Foxfilm comedy, at the Rialto this week is another riot of laughter. When one of the girls appeared in an abbreviated costume a middle-aged lady just in front of us commenced "The very idea" in much shocked tones, but in a moment she was forgetting herself with the rest of the audience in their hilarity of merriment. It is about the limit in slapstick comedy, "marvelous" escapes and trick comedy. It's about the biggest bunch of real funny nonsense put together.

Pauline Frederick is the star in the feature, "The Hungry Heart," an intensely dramatic story and the rest of the bill is set around this to be light and diverting.

The overture, Auber's "Maxzaniello," was particularly well received and it was followed by a beautiful Pathe scenic, "Picture Ghent."

Strand topical this week contains a number of interesting subjects. It opens with the Paramount-Bray pictures of the greatest police force in the world (New York) and this is followed by a clever contrast showing the Pasadena, Cal., firemen knitting for the soldiers. Throngs in Petrograd and pictures of Kerensky drew applause. Inter-allied Films showed French soldiers at training, which was received with laughter and cheering. The Portuguese President's visit to the French front brought a tribute to the veterans. Making guns for the Italians at Genoa and explanation of the gasoline engine by Bray, followed. Then followed the big patriotic elements, showing the new army in training at Camp Grant, Illinois, and President Wilson at the American Federation of Labor, Buffalo. These were Pathe.

John Phillips in "A Dream" and "Design," and Mery Zentay and Mischa Violin in a violin duet, Alard's "Second Symphony" were the musical numbers.

Here is a postcard called from far away Japan by "Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel"

Triangle Tells Exhibitors How to Get Best Attendance in Holiday Season

TRIANGLE DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION is urging exhibitors to take advantage of the holiday season to increase business and has issued a number of suggestions as to how the motion picture theatres can profit from the spirit of festivity and gaiety. It is pointed out that Thanksgiving Day inaugurates the holidays and that from that time on social events will increase and "shop early" signs will be seen everywhere. "Just as the stores urge 'shop early'," Triangle advises, "so should the theatre urge 'play early'. Thanksgiving is an auspicious time for imbuing patrons with this mood."

Here are some of the suggestions:

"The one means of inviting the passerby to entertain and relax himself is by decorating the lobby in such a way that he feels the impulse. It is unnecessary to enumerate what are appropriate decorations. They include pumpkin jack o'lanterns, pyramids of cornstalks, turkeys, and everything that suggests a harvest of plenty. Souvenirs of all styles are available at small cost, and these may be used on circulars sent out to patrons on the mailing list announcing the feature of the day together with any attractions that may be added, such as special instrumental music, singers, dancers or readers.

"A few weeks before Christmas it would be well for exhibitors to commence emphasizing their matinee programs through advertisements and special features. Neatly printed invitations, announcing the program for the week and urging women to make the theatre their headquarters while shopping, might be sent out to the mailing list. If an exhibitor has no such list, he should compile one, from the directory of his town or neighborhood, for it is a valuable aid. Exert every effort to make the theatre particularly attractive during matinee hours. Have flowers or Christmas decorations in the rest room, and, if possible, station a maid there to assist women and to check packages.

"During the school holidays, preceding and following Christmas day, a series of Kiddie Mornings might be arranged to the profit of the exhibitor. The program for these mornings should be of the type that appeals to children. A consultation of the list of past Triangle releases will supply any number of features particularly suitable, as "The Sawdust Ring," "In Slumberland," "Cheerful Givers" and any of the Bessie Love plays. Additional entertainment might be provided by having a reader tell children's stories or give a few humorous selections. Horns, rattles, drums and other noise-makers so delightful to kiddies might be kept on hand and distributed. Souvenirs of popcorn or candy would also be welcomed to small hands and would attract children to the theatre the next day as molasses would bring flies.

"A Kiddie Christmas morning has been attested a success by several exhibitors. The performance should begin about nine-thirty or ten o'clock to give ample time for enjoyment before the Christmas dinner. A Santa Claus and Christmas tree should, of course, be the prime features.

"An exhibitor who tries out a kiddie morning plan will be surprised to find the number of adults attracted to his house, for nothing is more enjoyable than to witness the enjoyment of children as they follow intently a picture that they understand. Aside from the five-reel features suggested above, the Keystone and Triangle Komedies are good juvenile entertainment; the antics of the performers invariably delight youngsters.

"These special morning entertainments should be advertised by circularizing the schools just prior to the holiday vacation, and by informing parents through newspapers or mailing lists that wholesome diversion will be provided for children, with attendants to look after their welfare during the shows.

"A novel way to supply entertainment that advertises itself is to employ a camera man to take several hundred or a thousand feet of film showing the children of the town at play on the school grounds or marching past the camera close enough for each to be recognized when the picture is projected on the screen. Announce to them that their pictures will be shown during the holidays at the theatre. Pictures of prominent women shopping or any group of individuals would be an added attraction for any performance. This has been done by several exhibitors on divers occasions and advertised with the line 'Come and See Yourselves as Others See You.' The pictures of children would, of course, attract their families as well as themselves.

"If an exhibitor plans extra entertainment and special decorations during the holidays,—and virtually every one does,—it would be a good plan for him to mail out neat cards printed to the effect that 'We Not Only Wish You a Merry Christmas, We Present You a Merry Christmas.' Below this greeting could be listed the program for the holidays, calling attention to the music, the decorations, the special matinees and whatever other attractions are planned. Advertisements to the same effect in the newspapers and in the house programs would bring results. Another form is that of using the name of the star who is to appear Christmas week in a way that makes her seem hostess for the occasion, as 'Margery Wilson, our presiding Christmas star, wishes you a Merry Christmas and invites you to her photoplay party at the Grand theatre holiday week.'"

Japanese Exhibitor "Sees the Rialto with Rothapfel"

"SEEING THE RIALTO WITH ROTHAPFEL" is being read by exhibitors all over the country as is attested by the letters received by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and by Mr. Rothapfel himself.

Even far away Japan is interested in what the big New York theatre is doing, for Mr. Rothapfel has just received the postcard reproduced here asking for a full copy of his program. If a showman in Yokohama can get benefit out of these articles the American exhibitor ought to get very much more.

Here is what the postcard says:

"DEAR SIR: The other day your advertisement in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Please send to me your hall program of weekly. Hoping to hear from you soon.

"MANAGER F. HORIBE,
"Movie Show,
"Yokohama Kwan,
"Yokohama, Japan."

Not only will Manager Horibe receive a full copy of the Rialto program in due course of the mails, but the incident was so unusual that several of the New York newspapers printed the story.

It was the one ADDITIONAL straw that broke the camel's back. Did you ever think what one additional effort might do for the benefit of your theatre?

Oral D. Cloakey, Manager Allen Theatre, Calgary, Canada

This Manager Uses Pages in Newspapers

Here is an example of an exhibitor who not only believes in advertising, but who believes in going the limit—in using page displays when his pictures warrant the use of that space. He is Oral D. Cloakey, manager of the Allan theatre, Calgary, Canada.

Mr. Cloakey is an American, having been born in Michigan. He is a musician and was identified with a circus for some years. In 1913 he went to Calgary and became assistant manager of the Allen theatre, from which position he was promoted to his present post.

This manager pays a great deal of attention to his music and the fact that he has the technical knowledge, makes this feature one of the most attractive about his theatre. He also uses all of the exploitation knowledge that he secured during his circus connections and that accounts for the fact that the Allen is one of the best advertised houses on the continent.

"Breakfast Matinee" Attracts Children

In connection with the showing of the Fox Standard picture, "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp, Manager Fred Miller, of Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, sprung an entirely new one by giving a breakfast matinee for school children on Saturday morning of the first week this picture was on exhibition at this theatre. The ticket office was opened at 8.30 a. m., and found a waiting line at that hour. By nine o'clock the auditorium was completely filled, and the show continued from that time throughout the day.

In the second week Miller is getting the children's patronage by taking advantage of the shortage of pennies in Los Angeles. He admits children at half price during the matinees if they will bring pennies for the admission price. Pennies are now being sold by the bank at a premium of forty cents on the thousand.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THEATRE J. was especially built for a motion picture house. It is located on the main street of a city of about 300,000, and although not in the busiest portion of the shopping district, it could be easily made as popular as any of the other houses were the proper attempts made. The theatre is now principally devoted to vaudeville, pictures being shown only as an additional feature.

While there is no question about the fact that this city is now in the grip of the cheapest sort of vaudeville, the history of the house would not make it appear that it failed of success because it was devoted to motion pictures, but rather because of the conduct of the house.

In the first place there was a gaudy lobby display of six sheets, crowding the entrance and confusing the patron. But worse than this was the man walking down in front of the theatre distributing handbills. The man was dirty and unkempt and one rather resented having him walk up and hand out one of the circulars. It was not in keeping with the physical appearance of the house. Such methods leave the impression in the mind that there is something of the fake inside.

But even these facts weren't the cause of the house turning to vaudeville.

Shortly after the opening the theatre adopted the policy of showing a single serial for a week, together with other pictures. This serial was not a success in this house. Although the serial was well advertised by the manager in advance and the story printed in one of the local papers, manager of Theatre J. did very little to keep it linked up with his house.

After this the house secured the second run franchise of one of the most popular brand of pictures which had been shown at a two change a week house only a couple of blocks away. There were probably hundreds who had failed to see these pictures at the first run house who could have been induced to see them at Theatre J. except for the fact that this second manager advertised practically one, and when he did he used a ten line "display" and crowded into it enough material for ten times the space.

Then there was another change, this time the picture being the so-called special feature, though for a time it is said that it appeared that the house was trying to show those near the ragged edge. Then came another change, this time the house getting the first run franchise of one of the most popular brands, but still the manager failed to advertise, and it was largely as the result of this policy that he lost this franchise, it being taken over by ar other house on the same street.

Then came another change back to th special features, and then into vaudevill

There never was any particular polic for any length of time at this house. Firs the theatre tried to appeal to the societ element and then reversed from that t those patrons that the first run house ha missed. Then it passed to those wh wished to see drama that at least migh be classed under the "strong" class. Prob ably the best chance that the theatre ha was when it secured the first run franchis to which reference has been made. Th manufacturer urged the theatre to adver tise these pictures on a plane equal to th other houses on the same street, but wit the exception of an occasional spurt thi policy was not followed.

Theatre J. never became identified in th general public mind with any particula class of pictures, and therefore it had n particular line of trade. In fact it shifte policies so often that one who was not regular attendant never knew what sor of pictures they would see there. The did know the sort of pictures which th other leading downtown houses showed and though, on account of peculiar ex hibitors, war conditions that existed fo a while, there were a number of change in service franchises, yet the public wa familiar with the class of pictures.

Mark what the conditions were in th case of Theatre J. In the first place i occupied a location where there had neve been a theatre before and there was needec an advertising campaign to familiarize th public with the house itself. This was no done. The manager bought the serial men tioned on the strength of the advertising but did not keep up the advertising him self. When he got the second run fran chise he still did not make any play fo those who had failed to see these attrac tions at the other house.

When he got the "special feature" idea he still used the smallest possible space in the newspapers. For some reason, and mistaken in most cases, these picture are supposed to have a "show girl" appeal but no effort was made to get that and the advertising was done in the front of the house, in just sufficient superiority to disgust any of the highest class of former patrons.

But the point was that the theatre neve had any permanent policy—it never meant anything to the general public. Wher Theatre J. got the first run privilege it had a chance to cure its errors of the past, but it didn't.

If your theatre is going to be a success you've got to identify it with a certain quality of pictures. People like to speak about going to the Queen or the Standard or the Victory because they know what class of pictures they will see there. They don't like to be unfamiliar with the atmosphere, in the first place and then be left in the air by the lack of advertising

Is Theatre J. like yours?

Leading Exhibitor Finds "Great Value" in Service Bureau

Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and one of the leading exhibitors of the country, whose efforts have been noted many times recently in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, writes:

"The Motion Picture News has always been anxiously scrutinized and your department has been not only interesting but of great value."

Many Parents Attend Children's Matinee

Mall theatre, Cleveland, O., has scored such a complete success with its children's matinees that after the second week it was announced that they would be continued indefinitely. The bill on November 10 included "Chris and the Wonderful Lamp" and comedy pictures. Two performances are given at 9 and 10:30.

On Saturday the Mall devoted the greater part of its regular newspaper space to the announcement of this matinee. Parents who accompanied their children were admitted at the same price—ten cents. Many attended. The regular feature was shown at the afternoon and evening performance.

Theatre Saves Time by "Forward" Exit

The forward exit plan that has proved successful in street cars has been just as much of a success in one Minneapolis theatre. The Calhoun theatre, Girard avenue and Lake street, though in an outlying district, is one of the large theatres of Minneapolis and one of the most crowded. The lounge is packed to overflowing on many nights and when one run is completed those who leave are asked to leave by the exit near the screen. The theatre is on the corner and the exit opens to a side street. This leaves the doors between the lounge and auditorium free for the new patrons to pass in without inconvenience.

20,000 Children See Film in Minneapolis

Charles Branham, manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, made the whole city see "The Man Without a Country," when it played in his house. He ran the film in a week in which there were three school holidays due to an educational convention. The theatre and the Minneapolis Journal entered a partnership and the paper invited the children to be its guests. A coupon printed daily in the Journal admitted the children free at children's matinees. Three of the matinees were in the morning hours when the theatre is ordinarily closed. Fully 20,000 children saw the film, they told their parents and the parents saw it.

Striking lobby display put on by the Rialto theatre, Toronto, Canada, during the run of "The Jockey of Death." Note that the circus effect is fully carried out, even to the use of an old circus wagon.

Canadians, Leaders in Lobby Displays, Set Fine Example for American Theatres

By William A. Bach

Service Head, Universal Film Co.

FROM what I have seen of the theatres in the United States, I'm convinced that the exhibitors of Canada and particularly Eastern Canada have on the whole a keener sense of display, of hitching up the selling points of a picture to a big dominant display on the front of their houses, with the consequent luring of dollars to their respective tills.

Take for instance, the photo of the lobby on the "Jockey of Death" which accompanies this article. This picture, I believe is a repeat in the Rialto theatre of Toronto, Canada, in whose lobby the display shown was erected. Mr. Stewart, the man who was responsible for the idea, is one of the new school of exhibitors and the proof of the pudding is that he is successful. And at one time this house was a lemon in Toronto. Anyone who knows the house realizes the wonderful change that has taken place in it, with the new owners who have had it for some months.

In this case the dominant idea of a circus was brought out to a nicety by the circus "big top"—the circus ticket box—and the circus slogans. The whole, however, was not allowed to degenerate into a motley mess of apparata, but was held together by a uniformity of design and decoration that put the whole thing over with a punch.

The Rialto is not the only house to use these striking displays, although it is perhaps the most prominent of them all. The "Strand," the "Globe," the "Colonial," whose advertising on the Gray Ghost serial resulted in a line up on the last night that smashed his front doors, "His Majesty's and a dozen others downtown and suburban houses in Toronto, all through their managers' use of brain and craft, have arresting and selling fronts that bring the people in multitudes to their houses.

Toronto might almost be called the home of lobby display, to such a fine point has the art been brought. Most certainly, I am sure, no American city can boast such an array of clever, and carefully thought out ideas, which is not to the credit of American showmen. At one time, when our friend Kashin was in Montreal, that city was a great rival, but with Kashin's flitting to New York, Toronto has assumed the lead.

Perhaps one of the most notable displays in Toronto, which by the way would have been a knock out in the United States was put on by the Rialto for the "Crisis." Half of the lobby was decorated to represent a fort. The exit being through iron gates. The other half brought back to the minds of all that passed the country of the cotton fields and old log cabins. Through the window of the cabin was seen the White House and just above the window the caption read "From Log Cabin to White House." At the extreme left hand corner of the lobby, there was a cut-out of Abraham Lincoln draped in an American flag, with a basket of raw cotton at his feet. If this got crowds in British Toronto, what would have happened in volatile New York, sentimental Washington or sensation-loving Denver.

It may seem that I have harped a little too much on this one theater, but my excuse is that it is the leader in this movement of "sell your film on the sidewalk, not in the theatre" of which I am heartily in accord and also, because I believe Mr. Stewart deserves credit for what he is doing and for what he is teaching all of us.

Mae Murray in Parisian Society Drama, "Princess Virtue"—Romance

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Mae Murray, in a Parisian society drama, "Princess Virtue," will be seen at the ——— theatre ——— week. In the supporting cast with Miss Murray are Lule Warrenton, Wheeler Oakman, Clarissa Selwynne, Gretchen Lederer, Harry von Meter, Paul Nicholson and Jean Hersholt. In this picture Miss Murray wears a most elaborate collection of gowns. In support of Miss Murray, Paul Nicholson, known to the millions for his work on the musical comedy stage, will be seen. Miss Murray has the part of Liane Demarest. The drama is an adaptation from Louise Winter's popular novel of the same title. It presents the grandeur of the Parisian salons, night life in Paris and the gay life in general as led by the idle rich. Liane Demarest is reared in the midst of the gay life of Paris. Her companions are without funds but with high-sounding names and respectable ancestry. She is an American by birth. She is sought by the social lepers, who have nothing but ancestry to offer. She has an adversion to their autocratic ways and refuses to be led astray by their companionship. She loves the gay life and realizes that only through associations with such men can she move in the social circles. She finds true romance at an unexpected time and from an unexpected source. She is known as "Princess Virtue" and a relative learning through the papers that she is associated with the society scandals, goes to Paris to investigate. Her many adventures and the events which follow her relative's attempt to draw her away from her parasite friends from a picture worth while.

William Desmond in Irish Character Part in Late Picture "The Sudden Gentleman"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

The story of a rollicking Irish lad is told by William Desmond in his late Triangle picture entitled "The Sudden Gentleman." With nice bits of humor running through the five reels of this drama it serves as good, refreshing entertainment for drama on the screen. Mr. Desmond is supported in this picture by Mary McIvor, Jack Richardson, Margaret Shillingford, A. Hollingsworth, Donald Pullen, Alberta Lee, Walter Perry and Percy Callenger. Garry Garrity is the role presented by Mr. Desmond and his leading lady. Miss McIvor presents that of Louise Evans. Garry wakes one fine morning and finds that he has fallen heir to a large fortune and the guardianship of a young girl. He leaves his home in the little Irish village for the city of Chicago. Louise learns that she has been left by her father's will only a few thousand dollars. She has dreamed of a Count whom she wishes to marry but decides that the small amount of money left to her by her uncle is not sufficient to induce the Count to consider the marriage. She is angered by Garry's free and easy manners, but events so shape themselves as to convince her that the real man is underneath the happy-go-lucky Irishman who is her guardian. They marry and then a friend of the Count tries to compromise Garry. Garry forces the Count to confess and the way is paved for happiness. In this picture Mr. Desmond gives one of the best characterizations of his career. He makes the typical Irishman. The story was written by R. Cecil Smith and scenarioized by Joseph Anthony Roach. Thomas N. Heffron directed.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week William Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman," a Triangle feature.

(World Five-Reel Production)

Modern life in a big city and the trials of a girl who is compelled to face the world alone are the points of interest in the World Film's latest production featuring Kitty Gordon. The story was written by Raymond Schrock and the production made under the direction of George Cowl. Supporting Miss Gordon in this production are George Morgan, George MacQuarrie, Edward Burns, Lillian Cook, Eric Mayne, Yolande Brown, Jean Wilson, Frank Beamish and Justine Cutting. Miss Gordon presents the role of Rita Castle, employed in a department store who, because she resents the advances made by one of her superiors, is discharged and is finally compelled to receive the attentions of a man whom she does not love in order that she may earn a livelihood. Her brother has been sentenced to a term in prison and she is left alone to face the world. The man soon tires of her and she meets a prominent business man who loves her and they marry. Trent, who had disgraced her, turns up and her husband suspects that she has a past. She admits that she has and is driven from the house. Years later Trent is nominee for a public office and Rita is given the opportunity to defeat him.

"Her Hour" is the title of the picture and Miss Gordon is given the opportunity to display all those talents that endeared her to the millions when she was behind the footlights.

"Her Hour," with Kitty Gordon in the leading role, will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Regenerates," with Walt Whitman in Featured Role—Alma Reubens Supporting

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"The Regenerates" is the title of the latest Triangle picture featuring Walt Whitman, one of the oldest and most capable character actors on the screen or stage. Alma Ruebens, one of the most beautiful girls on the screen, presents the principal feminine role. Others in the supporting cast are Darrel Foss, John Lince, Louis Durham, Allan Sears, William Broady and Pauline Stark. Mr. Whitman presents the role of Mynderse Van Dyun, of a wealthy New York family. His chief aim in life was to bring about a marriage between his granddaughter, Catherine Ten Eyck, and his grandson, Pell Van Dyun. He wanted to perpetuate the family name. Catherine's cousin was of a wild nature and had fallen victim to the drug habit. She detested him. Her choice was Paul La Forge, whose family name was not high sounding enough to please the old man. He objected to his granddaughter's marriage to La Forge. Pell, the grandson, has an unfortunate affair with Nora, Catherine's maid, and Nora is forced to leave the house. La Forge and Pell quarrel over Catherine. Soon after Pell's body is found on the lawn in front of the house and La Forge is held for the murder. Later he is released because of lack of evidence and he and Catherine are married. It develops that the murdered man and Nora had been secretly married. A baby is born to Nora. The old man, proud of his ancestry, is finally reconciled to the situation and gratefully acknowledges Nora's little son as the possessor of the family name.

Walt Whitman in "The Regenerates" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"For Valour," with Winifred Allen Featured—Story of a Sister's Sacrifice

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Winifred Allen presents the featured role of I. A. R. Wylie's story, "For Valour," a five-part Triangle production to be seen at the ——— theatre ——— week. 'Melia Nobbs is the daughter of a Boer War veteran living in Canada. When the great European war breaks out 'Melia is a chorus girl in a musical comedy show. Her brother works for a small salary and through his desire to furnish the girl whom he loves with pretty clothes gets into financial troubles and asks 'Melia to assist him. 'Melia asks the manager of the theatre where she works to advance her the money but he refuses. Leaving the theatre she sees the star's purse lying on the dressing table and takes it. The manager sees her. She returns home and gives the money to her brother and urges him to enlist. He does so. She is later arrested. The strain has been telling and she collapses and is taken to the hospital. Her brother wins honors on the battlefield and returning learns of the sacrifice that his sister had made. The manner in which he makes restitution for his sister's sacrifices for him is told in this most interesting drama, with Winifred Allen interpreting the role of 'Melia. Richard Barthelmas presents the role of the slacker brother. Henry Weaver and Mabel Ballin are in support. "For Valour" is a strong, meaning drama and contains everything that goes to make for an hour's entertainment on the screen. The production was made under the direction of Albert Parker and supervised by Allan Dwan.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "For Valour," with Winifred Allen in the leading feminine role, supported by Richard Barthelmas.

"I Will Repay," Adapted from O. Henry Story, with Corinne Griffith Featured

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

O. Henry's "A Municipal Report" has been adapted to the screen under the title of "I Will Repay" and it can be safely said that it is one of the best works of Mr. Henry that has been produced for the silent drama. The story is laid in the South and has been produced by Vitagraph under the direction of William P. S. Earle, with the typical Southern atmosphere abounding in every scene. It is one of the very human stories by this author, who has written of those phases of life and those in it that most appeal. His characters are taken from life and made to enact the natural. His character of Virginia Rodney is impersonated by Corinne Griffith, who has been seen in some of Vitagraph's best five-reel productions. George Forth presents the principal supporting role of Roger Kendall, a young newspaper reporter who is sent to Kentucky to obtain the services of Azalea Adair, a woman writer. At the station in Nashville he gives the old darkey who takes him to the home of Miss Adair a torn dollar bill, and through the medium of this bill he learns information that reveals the secret of the writer's sad life. He also meets Virginia, a friend of the writer, and later marries her. It develops that her husband, who is a drunkard, has been extorting money from her and that she has given it to him to save herself from disgrace. He is seen spending the money which Kendall had given her as advance money on her contract and the old darkey servant, who had seen him take it from his mistress, follows and kills him. Through the entire run of this picturization of O. Henry's work there is an appealing note. Miss Griffith in the leading role is everything that the character of Virginia should be. At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"A Little Patriot," with Baby Marie Osborne —Patriotic Drama with Many Surprises

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Pathe presents Baby Marie Osborne, the child actress, in "A Little Patriot," a modern story of Joan of Arc. The little actress will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and will give her audiences her idea of patriotism. John W. Grey is the author and the picture was produced under the direction of William Bertram. Little Miss Osborne has the role of the little patriot, whose teacher reads her the story of Joan of Arc and who is so impressed by the patriotism of the French girl that she insists that her father enlist and do his part in the war. Her father feels that he should not enlist, but his little daughter's insistence finally prevails and he leaves for France. Marie organizes a company of soldiers among her playmates. The little patriot's mother takes a boarder whose actions arouse the suspicions of Marie. He does not leave his room and explains that he is working on an invention. Marie slips in unnoticed and crawling under the sofa overhears a conversation between the strange boarder and his friend. They leave with a suit case and Marie follows. Her mother searches the room and finds evidence to convince her that the boarder is a spy. Little Marie, who has followed the two men to the laboratory of a rich manufacturer, sees the men light a bomb and run. She picks it up and is injured. The owner of the building finds her and takes her to her mother. When he arrives with Marie he recognizes her mother as his long missing daughter.

(Perfection Five-Reel Production)

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" is the title of the late five-reel production featuring Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's clever child actress who left such a favorable impression with her millions of admirers when she appeared in the "Do Children Count" series a few months ago. Since then she has appeared in several five-part dramas and has met with success as a star. In her late picture

she is given the role of Sadie, a six year old child of the tenements, to impersonate. Sadie has a vision of heaven awakened within her by the teachings of a settlement worker. She sees the worker's motor car standing in front of the mission house and thinking that this is part of her reward in heaven, she jumps in, conceals herself in the clothes hamper, and is whirled away to the beautiful home of Mrs. Riche. She is discovered by the servants and they, thinking that Mrs. Riche would give her the best of care, dress the little stranger in beautiful finery and turn her loose in the big mansion. Mrs. Riche returns unexpectedly and is immediately won over by the child's winning ways. Sadie's dog had accompanied her and Mrs. Riche orders the dog to be put out. Sadie refuses to stay unless her dog remains so she departs for home and tells her mother that she has been to heaven. Sadie's experiences in the home of Mrs. Riche form a quality of entertainment on the screen that is seldom surpassed. Comedy, pathos and child simplicity are combined to make an hour or more of real, satisfying entertainment.

"All for a Husband," Virginia Pearson's Late Picture—Impersonates Dual Role

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

Virginia Pearson supported by an all-star cast of Fox screen artists, including Dorothy Quincy, Gladys Kelly, Carl Moody and Williams Crimans, appears at the ——— theatre ——— week in one of the most unusual photodramas ever presented on the screen of a theatre. "All for a Husband" is the title and Miss Pearson impersonates a dual role. The story hinges on the fact that Henry Hardin is a so-called "woman-hater" and Henrietta Hardin is convinced by his sister that she is the one woman in the world who can bring about a reformation in the life and ways of thinking of her brother. She is living at the Hardin camp in the Adirondacks and writes her brother to the effect that she has a friend stopping with her whom she wants him to meet. He writes her that he does not trust any woman and does not want to meet her friend. Myra Haynes, who is mentally deranged and a patient at the sanitarium nearby, escapes. His sister and Henrietta get an idea and Henrietta leaves for the city. Myra also arrives at the same time and announces during a political meeting at which Hardin is speaking that she is his wife. Myra goes to his home, having been given the key by Hardin's sister, and awaits the coming of Hardin. The complications that follow this mix-up form the important events in this late Fox production, "All for a Husband," featuring Virginia Pearson. Miss Pearson's last picture was "Thou Shalt Not Steal." This was acclaimed a big success by the critics. Her late picture is equally as good and different from anything that has been seen on the screen.

Virginia Pearson in "All for a Husband" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Another five-reel feature, with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in the leading roles. A typical Pickford-Huff story, offering opportunities for both to present themselves in true fashion. "Jack and Jill" is the title. It was written by Margaret Turnbull, who has contributed many of Paramount successes to the screen, and adapted by Gardner Hunting. The picture was produced under the direction of William D. Taylor. Jack Pickford has the role of Jack Ranney, who has set out to win his fortune with his fists. He enters the roped arena for one purpose—to obtain enough money to marry Jill (Louise Huff). The picture opens with Jack and Jill standing in front of a motion picture theatre debating whether or no they shall spend the price of admission. While discussing this important matter the manager of an athletic club approaches Jack and offers him a good proposition if he will fight. Jack consents, not knowing that the fight has been "fixed." The fight is staged and Jack delivers the knockout blow. The managers tell him that he has killed his opponent and offer him $25 to leave town. Jack takes the money and leaves for New York. New York doesn't appeal to him and after many adventures he finds himself in a ranch town in Texas. He boasts of what he accomplished in the fighting game in the East and the cowboys arrange with some friendly Mexicans to call his bluff. What happens and haw Jill learns of the true state of affairs concerning the fight follows. Jack and Jill are united and settle down in the little ranch town to happiness.

Zoe Rae, Most Talented Child Actress on the Screen in "The Cricket"

(Butterfly Five-Reel Production)

Zoe Rae, one of the most talented child actresses on the screen, is featured in a late Butterfly production in five reels entitled "The Cricket," which will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The story opens in the Latin quarter of New York, where The Cricket, a child of six, is found. Saveline, Caesar and Pinglet live in the Latin quarter and when The Cricket's mother dies the three Bohemians adopt the child. Twelve years elapse and The Cricket has become a beautiful girl. Her three benefactors, who made a vow that a woman should never come between them have been successful. The three men have devoted their lives to the happiness of the adopted child and when she refuses to marry the man whom they have chosen for her they adopt ways and means to prevent her from marrying another. They talk with Pascal, whom she loves, and persuade him not to see her again. She steals away, finds Pascal and they are married. She becomes a great actress and years later her three benefactors see her at the theatre. A little girl is brought to the box Saveline occupies and he discovers that she is the child of The Cricket. He takes the child to the garret, invites his two friends, whom he has not seen for years, and waits for The Cricket to come for her child. She finds them and a happy reunion and forgiveness results.

Mary Miles Minter in Typical Minter Production, "The Mate of the Sally Ann"

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

"The Mate of the Sally Ann" is the next Mutual release, featuring Mary Miles Minter that will be shown at the ——— theatre. The little actress has been given an ideal part to interpret in this production, and she does not disappoint. She presents the role of Sally, the ward of an old sea captain, who has had unpleasant acquaintances in the world, and keeps as nearly isolated from others as possible. Sally who is full of life and fond of acquaintances is kept aboard the ship as much as possible, with the result that she is little acquainted with the outside world. Nearby Hugh Schuyler and his mother live in the summer colony. Hugh makes daily visits to the home of Judge Gordon, and reads law with the old man. The Judge is alone in the world, his only companion being a dog. Sally, while on the beach playing, sees the dog, and follows it to the home of its master. There she meets Hugh, and finds in him the ideal of her dreams. The Judge is struck by her beauty, and gives her the dog as a token of his friendship. Thereafter Hugh comes to the beach often to see Sally. The Captain sees him on one occasion and drives him away. The Judge gives a party, and Sally is invited. She is given pretty dresses and wears shoes and stockings for the first time. The Captain suspecting that she is at the home of the Judge follows her there and takes her home. The next day the Judge sees a resemblance between Sally and his wife, and discovers on investigation that she is his daughter. The Captain, the Judge, and Hugh are united, and Sally is made mistress of a yacht and happiness is hers.

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

In the role of a Red Cross nurse, serving the wounded in France, Edna Goodrich comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "American Maid" is the title of the five-reel drama, in which Miss Goodrich will be seen. In the supporting cast are: George Henery, William B. Davidson and John Hopkins. Miss Goodrich is known to the thousands who have patronized the spoken drama, for she has been seen in some of the biggest successes on Broadway. It is just recently that she has entered the studio to work before the camera, but in the comparatively short time she has given to the work of the silent drama she has gained a reputation equally as good as followed her in the spoken drama. In her latest work before the camera, she presents the role of Virginia Lee, a Red Cross nurse. David Starr, an American soldier in France (part interpreted by William Davidson), describes to his comrades in arms, the ideal girl. Shortly afterward he is wounded, and sees in the nurse who cares for him while in the hospital, the ideal girl of his dreams. Starr is sent to Washington to recover from his wounds, and there, at the Embassy Ball, he meets Virginia. Realizing that he can never win her love in his station, he goes West to make his fortune. There he meets with adventure, and it develops that Virginia is the one who is destined to free him.

Claire McDowell Seen in Thrilling Scenes in "The Ship of Doom"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Claire McDowell, whom you will remember for her appearances in the silent drama when the single and two-reelers were the features of the motion picture theatre's program, is featured in a late release of Triangle, entitled "The Ship of Doom." Monte Blue, Arthur Millet, Aaron Edwards and Frank Brownlee are in support. The story was written and directed by Wyndham Gittens. Miss McDowell played with Mary Pickford and Blanche Sweet when these two stars were featured in the old Biograph dramas. She is one of the best known actress on the screen, and her ability to interpret character woman roles is known to the millions. In this late Triangle feature, Miss McDowell presents the role of Clara Gove, belle of a little fishing village. She is engaged to Martin Shaw. She boasts of her friendship with Jeff Wittlesey and Martin kills him. Before the guilt is fixed, Martin and she escape on a fishing launch. One of the crew falls in love with Clara, and he conspires to kill Martin. There is mutiny aboard the ship, it catches fire, and Clara and Martin find themselves together in the same lifeboat. Martin goes overboard to save Clara, and the two meet on a desert island.

"The Ship of Doom," with Claire McDowell in the leading role, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Man from Montana," with Neal Hart and Vivian Rich in Leading Roles

(Butterfly Five-Reel Production)

"The Man from Montana" is the latest Butterfly production, featuring Neal Hart, who is known to the millions for his characterizations of Western roles, and his thrilling stunts before the camera. There are thrills aplenty in this Butterfly offering which is typically Western, and is punctuated by rapid-fire action in every scene—with every flash of the camera. Mr. Hart presents the part of Duke Farley, part owner of mining property in the little town of Green Water in the heart of the West. His partner, Dad Petzel (George Berrell), is given the power to dispose of the mining property. During the absence of Duke, Dad sells the more productive of the two mines to a gang of speculators. The speculators had introduced a girl to Dad, and he having succumbed to her beauty and, having trusted her, sold the mine. When Duke returns and learns of the transaction, he starts East to apprehend the swindlers and the adventures he has form the main action of this powerful drama. Dad and his pals follow Duke to the Eastern city, and having indulged too freely in liquor, find themselves along the water front, and are taken by the crew of a sailing vessel and find themselves shanghaied. The swindlers are apprehended, and Duke finds the one girl in all the world who can make his life happy. In the cast with Mr. Hart are E. J. Piel, Betty Lamb, Willard Wayne and Vivian Rich, who is Mr. Hart's new leading lady.

"The Man from Montana" will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Sea Crawler"—Third Episode of "Who Is Number One?"—Kathleen Clifford

(Paramount Serial, Two-Reel Production)

"The Sea Crawler" is the title of the third episode of "Who Is Number One?" Paramount's first serial production, with Kathleen Clifford in the featured role. This baffling mystery story from the pen of Anna Katherine Green is replete with thrills and surprises. The first two episodes you have seen. Hand-to-hand conflicts on the bottom of the ocean and thrilling adventures with a submarine are the sensational thrills that will be seen in this late episode. The Hales, assisted by Aimee, continue the search for their enemies. They follow in a submarine. The party reach a treasure ship and Tommy Hale and his companions don diving suits and leave the submarine. Tommy is captured and imprisoned in the treasure ship. The T-T-T lays plans to dynamite the ship. This episode reveals some of the most thrilling stunts ever accomplished before a camera and stands out as a rapid-fire, sure-hit chapter in this mystery serial.

NEWS NOTES FROM CANADA

Globe Films Distribute Paralta Plays in Canada

Arrangements have been consummated between Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and Arthur Cohen, president of Globe Films, Limited, of Toronto, Ontario, under the terms of which the Globe Films, Limited, will be the distributors of Paralta Plays throughout the Dominion of Canada.

This deal will no doubt have a very great and far reaching influence on the motion picture industry as it brings into correlation in interests another distributing organization with Paralata Plays which are to be distributed throughout the United States by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Globe Films, Limited, have been a potent factor in the film industry for a number of years and represent in Canada the output of the foremost film producing companies in the world. Philip Kauffman, vice-president of the company, who is one of the early pioneers of the Canadian film industry, has been in New York for a number of days arranging the details for the distribution and is most enthusiastic over the Paralta Plays which he has seen.

Paralta Plays include the productions of Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan and Henry B. Walthall. "A Man's Man," in which Mr. Kerrigan appears as the star, will be the first picture to be released under this agreement. This will be followed by Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's secret service classic, "Madam Who," after which will come "His Robe of Honor," in which Henry B. Walthall will make his debut as a Paralta star.

Woman Exhibitor of Moncton Robbed of Receipts

Mrs. Walter Davidson, proprietress of the Dreamland theatre in Moncton, N. B., was the victim of masked bandits one night recently. She was held up in true Western style, the robbers binding and gagging her and robbing the safe of the day's receipts.

It had been Mrs. Davidson's custom to bank her weekly receipts on Monday morning, but the week of the robbery, which occurred on Saturday, she had gone to the bank a day early, and thus only one day's money was in the theatre.

Edmund Owens Appointed to New Brunswick Board

The vacancy on the New Brunswick Board of Motion Picture Censors has been filled by the appointment of Edmund Owens, who for many years has been a follower of the theatre here and was for a time the St. John representative of the Dramatic Mirror.

Mr. Owens is well known to the film men and theatre managers, and is expected to prove a satisfactory official.

Breezy Items

Charles Lalumiere, manager of the Montreal office of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., recently returned to his office from a trip to Ottawa. He reported business there very good.

J. Lieberman, manager of the Fox Film Corporation of St. John. N. B., was in Montreal the past few days, taking up several matters of importance with the Montreal offices.

Joe Kauffman, of the Montreal office of Globe Films, has been appointed manager of the St. John office of Globe, which was recently opened.

Visitors who were recently noticed at the Canadian Universal Exchange in Toronto, to arrange their programs for the winter, included Manager Morgan, of the Princess, Stratford, Ont., and Manager Jackson, of Newmarket, Ont.

The following out-of-town exhibitors were in Montreal recently in the interests of their various houses: George Vallieres, Olympia theatre, Grand Mere; A. Parent, Casino theatre, Three Rivers; D. Bertrand, Princess theatre, Riviere du Loup, and Henri Paguet, of the Auditorium theatre, Quebec.

Manager John F. O'Connell, of the Academy of Music, Halifax, N. S., which house will begin showing pictures the first of the year, was in New York recently in connection with the inauguration of the new policy at his theatre. The Academy has heretofore been a legitimate and stock house.

Academy of Music in Halifax Shows Pictures

An announcement of interest in motion picture circles in the Maritime Provinces is that the Academy of Music, Halifax, which has hitherto played only legitimate companies and for five years has been the home of a winter stock company, is to join the ranks of the converts to the silent drama. Manager John F. O'Connell, who has directed the Academy's destinies, is the moving spirit in a syndicate of Halifax men who have acquired the lease of the theatre, and will run it as a combination picture and vaudeville house, playing the better class of road attractions. Mr. O'Connell will continue as manager and it is understood the house will be run in close co-operation with the Imperial, St. John, as to bookings.

The change will take effect the first of the year. The Academy of Music is an historic old theatre, one of the finest in the Provinces.

Bessie Love Company Gets Scenes at Palm Beach

Bessie Love, the Pathe star, has gone to Palm Beach, Florida, with her director, Madame Blache, and a large company which includes Donald Hall and Flora Finch.

Miss Love's first work under the Pathe banner is on Henry Kitchell Webster's "Spring of the Year." The script requires much work in and on the ocean. Palm Beach now has two companies working on Pathe pictures—the Bessie Love company and an Astra company, with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The Astra company is under the direction of Hobart Henley.

Loew Opens New Combination House in Montreal

Marcus Loew's new motion picture theatre and vaudeville house on St. Catherine street, West, Montreal, was opened Monday, November 19, to a packed house, and everyone who attended the opening expressed themselves highly pleased with the theatre and the program presented.

The theatre is said to be the largest and costliest in Canada, and is probably one of the finest in the world. The big feature for the opening was Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country."

No expense has been spared in building. The costliest Italian marble, expensive silk for the walls, heavy velour hangings, the finest painters and artists for mural decorative work—all have combined to make it not only a theatre, but a show place, a palace of art second to none. It will seat 3,400 people. In this temple of amusement will be shown feature photoplay productions of the very best, with an orchestra of twenty pieces.

Exhibitors in British Columbia Organize

The owners and managers of the motion picture theatres in British Columbia, according to Motion Picture News' correspondent in Toronto, have organized under the name of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association. Immediately following its formation, the organization declared it is here to stay, and that the exhibitors realize the only way they can stand up for themselves is by organizing.

Officers elected were J. R. Muir, of the Dominion theatre, president; Hector Quogliotti, Colonial theatre, vice-president; Frank Gow, of Broadway theatre, secretary. W. P. Dewees and F. Gow were appointed to secure information for the association in regard to the new amusement tax and the revenue being raised from this source for the Provincial Government.

First Western Canada Film Ball in Winnipeg

The first film ball to take place in western Canada has been set for November 29 at the Fort Garry Hotel, in Winnipeg, under the auspices of the Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, it was announced last week. Arrangements have been made to utilize both ballrooms on the seventh floor of the hotel for the ball; dancing in one hall and vaudeville in the other. The entertainment is expected to be on a pretentious scale, with enough of interest to attract all the film people within that section of the province. Exhibitors of Winnipeg have been making arrangements for the presence of several well known picture stars, to lend distinction to the ball.

Storm Ties Up Goldwyn Company in Maine

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn star, who, until her debut under that trade mark in "Polly of the Circus," was familiar with only the balmy climate of California, had a real taste of Eastern climatic conditions recently when the company with which she is engaged in making her next photoplay to follow "Sunshine Alley," took her to Sebasco, Maine, to "shoot" a number of fishing and seacoast scenes.

At Sebasco the company, which included the entire cast of "The Beloved Traitor," together with Director William Worthington; his assistant, F. A. Thurston, and George Hill, cameraman, was weather-bound at the hotel for three days. In addition to Miss Marsh, the cast of players numbered E. K. Lincoln, George Fawcett, Hedda Hopper, J. A. Furrey, Jack Ridgeway, Myra Brooks, Louis Grisel and Ann Pallette.

Gail Henry Appears in L-Ko Comedies in Future

Gail Henry, who has established herself as comedienne of Joker Comedies under Universal brand, has transferred her activities to L-Ko, and will work opposite Hughie Mack and Bobby Dunn. Thus, talent from three well-known brands will assemble in this particular L-Ko organization; Hughie Mack having lately come from Vitagraph, Bobby Dunn from Keystone, and Miss Henry from Joker. President Julius Stern, of L-Ko, made the trip to Los Angeles to rearrange the comedy organizations in consultation with J. G. Blystone, director general of L-Kos. There will be further changes, it is announced.

"Fall of Romanoffs" Opens Idea in Producing

Is Said to Be First Big Story of Russian Incidents That Can Be Changed with the Times—Brenon Discovers Elastic Quality

THE rapidly changing political situation in Russia, in bringing out the unique quality of Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is said to be revealing a new field of thought in film production. The screen story of the birth of Russian freedom is claimed to be the first production ever made which can be changed with the times.

Mr. Brenon created "The Fall of the Romanoffs" as complete in every way as possible. When he filmed it, it is said, he had no intention of adding new scenes. However, as events in Russia developed, the director found that history itself was furnishing new and vital incidents of striking dramatic force.

Thus the producer hit suddenly upon a new idea, capable of great scope and possibilities. Mr. Brenon has unexpectedly proved that a big photodramatic story could be built around current history, and then kept alive and up-to-date by additions from time to time.

The elastic quality of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is considered unlike anything in the development of the silent drama, opening up a hitherto untouched field of thought in screen production. It gives the screen a combination of the salient qualities of the history, drama, and newspaper. American directors have contributed the flash-back, the close-up, and other essentials of the screen play of today. Mr. Brenon believes that, through his "Fall of the Romanoffs," he is giving a new mission to the screen.

Already a new scene has been added to "The Fall of the Romanoffs." This shows the appearance of Charles Edward Russell, the socialist member of the American (Root) Commission, before the Russian Duma. Through the interest of labor leaders in the production, Mr. Russell himself posed in a reproduction of the Duma's reception, staged at the Brenon studios.

It is said to be very possible that other scenes will be incorporated in the historical drama. If the Bolsheviki revolution proves a fore-runner of other startling developments in Petrograd, these will necessarily be added to "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

With these possible additions in view, Mr. Brenon has retained all the players who participated in the production, so that he may call upon them at a moment's notice.

"Cinderella Man" Named as Holiday Goldwyn

Has Been Set for Release on December 16, with Mae Marsh in the Star Role—Said to Follow Original Story Closely

THE release of the Goldwyn production, "The Cinderella Man," starring Mae Marsh, which has been set for December 16, has been apparently well timed by Goldwyn for holiday showing at first-run photoplay theatres. The very nature of the story makes it exceptionally well adapted to feature purposes during the Christmas and New Year period.

Importance of the holiday note to exhibitors throughout the country, according to Goldwyn, can not be over-emphasized, for the Christmas period, it is cited, is notoriously slack for theatres, the money of the public being devoted to gifts rather than to amusement and entertainment; and special inducements are required to keep up the average of patronage.

In "The Cinderella Man" the entire action takes place during the Christmas season; and it is said to be full of holiday decoration, Christmas cheer and good will to men.

However, although the story has an unusual number of elements that apply to the holidays, it is said to constitute a year-round appeal, a fact attested by the long run of the play when it was on the speaking stage. According to the statement from the Goldwyn offices, the play by Edward Childs Carpenter, the well known dramatist and short story writer, required little or no change to adapt it to the screen, so its popularity in the new field seems virtually an assured fact through its success in the world of the regular theatre. It is said, further, that Mae Marsh has not found a more congenial part in her entire screen experience, than the role of Margaret Caner, the millionaire's daughter in "The Cinderella Man."

The play derives its title, "The Cinderella Man," from the circumstance that the hero is as poor and generally miserable as the little girl in the classic fairy tale, a poet living in a garret; and the heiress who reciprocates his love is a veritable fairy godmother, bringing him all manner of riches in a mysterious way.

Fannie Ward Begins Her Work for Pathe

Fannie Ward, the Pathe star, has already started work in the Astra studios on "Innocent," the George Broadhurst play produced by A. H. Woods, which had a run in New York and on the road some seasons back. "Innocent" ran at the Eltinge theatre for six months with Pauline Frederick as the star. George Fitzmaurice is directing the picture which will be one of the Pathe Plays.

Reproductions of the Cover, Frontispiece and Two Pages in Jewel's Elaborate Edition de Luxe of "Pay Me," Five Thousand Copies of Which, at a Cost an Equal Number of Dollars, Are Being Distributed to Advertise Dorothy Phillips in the Feature.

Jewel Publishes Nifty Booster for "Pay Me"

Is Edition De Luxe in Things of Its Kind, and Represents Cost of $5,000, After Seven Weeks in Preparing and Printing

AN edition de luxe of "Pay Me," the five-act Jewel production, is off the press, and represents one of the most comprehensive photodramatic campaign complements ever issued. It was conceived and developed in the New York offices of Jewel Productions, Inc., and is said to have cost $5,000. It was seven weeks in the making; nine different types of paper were used in its construction, each page representing a plate, hand-drawn and hand-lettered; six artists are represented. Some 5000 copies are being issued.

The book proper has sixty-six pages, with French fold, shadowed cover, bound with silk cord and bow, an inner cover, back and front, of spiderweb tissue. The cover design, printed in black and gold and embossed, represents a jewel box, with contents escaping. The hand lettering announces, "Jewel Productions, Inc., Present Dorothy Phillips, The Idol of Millions, in 'Pay Me.'"

The mottled paper employed for this cover, which is peculiarly appropriate for it, was secured after three weeks of effort, through a New York jobber, from an upstate mill, which, because of war conditions, had discontinued making the superweave. Superfine white coated paper is employed in the rest of the book, which boasts in the centre a 21 x 8¼-inch insert photograph of Miss Phillips, the production's star.

The pictures and photographic compositions of the book are backed with delicate buff tints, which bring out the fine details of the drawings. The first page announces in hand-embossed black and gold the book's contents. The second page presents an autographed photograph of Miss Phillips. Page three presents Miss Phillips, wearing her much-discussed trouserette gown, poised, butterfly-like, above a dazzling background of Broadway, at night. Page four introduces scenes from "The Nugget" wherein is staged the big manfight of the piece, and the roulette table which plays so vital a share in the Jewel production. A clever innovation gives credit to Director Joseph De Grasse, to De Jonjhe for the costumes, to Bess Meredith for the scenario, to Brinkerhoff for locations, scenes and settings, and to King Gray for the superphotography.

The entire remainder of the book is occupied by reproductions of headlines and criticisms,—excerpts from New York daily and trade papers, commenting on "Pay Me." A synopsis of the piece, an effective page of stills, from tense moments in the drama, advertising aids to the exhibitor, co-operative press suggestions, cuts, pages, illustrative in art and copy of the primitive passions, love, hate, fear, jealousy, which largely feature the offering, alternate effectively with these critic pages.

The last five pages of the book are occupied by the five other exceptional Jewel offerings which have attracted such widespread attention since the inception of Jewel Productions, Inc., in the early Autumn.

"Freedom of World" Sweeps Critics Off Feet

What was intended to be a mere experimental showing developed into what Goldwyn considers a season's event when that company began its distribution of Ira M. Lowry's production, "For the Freedom of the World," with an engagement at the Victoria theatre in Philadelphia.

Goldwyn announced this week that the dailies of the Quaker City outdid themselves in extended encomiums of praise that were longer in many cases than the reviews accorded elaborate productions on the legitimate stage.

As a sample of the reviews in Philadelphia Goldwyn furnishes the following, from a daily that accorded the picture "three stars" as a mark of excellence: "The story has real grip and dramatic intensity, and incorporates about the best battle scene any patriotic picture has so far included."

Elsie Ferguson's New Feature Completed

Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraf announced last week that a new photopla with Elsie Ferguson as star, has been con pleted, and is a dramatization of the bool "Rose of the World."

"In this subject," said Mr. Green "Miss Ferguson is seen in a role simila to those in which she has won her triumph on the regular stage. The press of th country has been flooded with praise b dramatic critics of Miss Ferguson's emc tional work, and in 'Rose of the World she is given an opportunity of displayin these talents with the widest latitude. A Rosamond, the heroine of the story, sh encounters incidents of such dramatic in tensity that her hair turns white."

Maurice Tourneur, it is announcec directed the picture, and in the cast ar Wyndham Standing, Percy Marmont Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarenc Handysides, Marie Benedetta, Gertrud LeBrant and Sloane DeMasber.

The release date of "Rose of th World" has not been announced.

Bara and Caprice Again to For for Fox

Following so closely on the heels of th successes chalked up by Theda Bara an June Caprice in "Cleopatra" and "Mis U. S. A.," respectively, the announcemen from the William Fox offices last weel that the two stars are shortly to be pre sented in photoplays that should prov equally as popular is of more than pass ing interest.

June Caprice, it is made known, is ir the midst of another feature that has a theme said to be as splendid as that ir "Miss U. S. A." The cast includes Kit tens Reichert, Florence Ashbrooke, Ine Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill and Tom Burrough.

The next widely known character that Theda Bara is scheduled to add to her repertoire is that of Madame Du Barry, in an elaborate production of a feature with that title. The picture, which is said to have been done on the scale characteristic of Standard pictures, will be a forthcoming release.

Universal Directors Steer Serials by Chart

Directors of Universal serials have worked out a system for directing and keeping track of the advancing episodes. With "The Mystery Ship," featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, under way and the new serial, "The Bull's Eye," in which Eddie Polo and Vivian Reed are the chief adventurers, there are endless details to be worked out in advance and systematically scheduled.

The chart idea is being especially applied to "The Bull's Eye," under production by Director James W. Horne, in association with Tom Gibson, the writer. The chart is more or less on the order of a map of the imaginary locality "out West" in which much of the action occurs, and push-pins of different shapes and colors mark the whereabouts of different factions and characters in the story. A card attached to the pin explains just what that person or faction is doing there. On the map is shown the distance between important points, boundary lines of ranches, rivers, roads, railroads and telephone lines. With this before them, the producers more easily can visualize the action as it is invented, having the entire story thus mentally pictured.

Robert McKim Shines in Feature with Wm. S. Hart

Robert McKim, described by certain individuals in the film industry as the king bee delineator of screen scoundrels, is said to have a role of almost stellar importance with William S. Hart in "The Silent Man," made by Thomas H. Ince for Artcraft pictures.

In Hart's new photoplay, "The Silent Man," to be released in the near future, McKim will be presented as the proprietor of a gambling place in a small town on the borderland of the Arizona desert. In this film he is said to have a particularly strenuous character to portray and it is expected that he will receive new prominence among film patrons as a result of this portrayal.

Earle Williams Begins New Blue Ribbon Feature

Earle Williams, with Miriam Miles as his leading woman, has begun work on another Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, with Tom Mills as his director. The company was on location all last week at Glen Cove, L. I. This picture will mark the return of Mr. Mills to the regular Vitagraph feature production department, he having devoted his time and talents for months past in the making of O. Henry pictures.

This is the third picture in which Miss Miles has worked with Earl Williams, they having appeared together in "The Grell Mystery," soon to be released, and "In the Balance," a Blue Ribbon feature adapted from "The Hillman," a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim and scheduled for release about the middle of December.

The working title of the picture Mr. Williams is making now is "The Stars in Their Courses."

Madame Petrova Promises New Characterization

Deplores What She Terms "Artificial and Unreal" in Motion Picture Presentations—Is in Favor of Modern Roles Only

Madame Petrova, Along with Her Remarkable Artistry, Displays a Wonderful Array of Gowns in Her First Petrova Picture, "Daughter of Destiny"

MADAME PETROVA, at present engaged in the screening of her second starring feature for the Petrova Picture Company, under the direction of Larry Trimble, is frankly at odds with the choice of many of the roles essayed by the various female stars of the screen, and has deputized her press department to air her opinion freely.

The Polish artiste, in a discussion of the point, said: "One of the extreme personal pleasures connected with the recent organization of The Petrova Picture Company, formed for the purpose of presenting eight starring vehicles for myself during the forthcoming year, is the opportunity offered for my own selection of the roles I am to depict.

"Since my entrance into the fields of the cinema art, I have observed countless cases of parts foisted upon highly capable female players for which they were neither suited by talents or inclination to portray. The result invariably has been a poor characterization by the star, dissatisfaction on the part of the film producer, and a severe blow to the popularity of the lead among her screen followers who witness the production.

"I have contended for some time that the player should always fit the role for which she is cast, and that the methods employed by many producers wherein a story is purchased for the sole sake of the publicity value attached to the author's literary reputation, with no consideration of its suitability to the talents of the star, is a grievous mistake, and one which reacts both artistically and commercially on all those concerned.

"I personally believe that a long-suffering motion picture public is tired unto death of the simpering, gushing ingenue and the many remarkable species of "vampires," so-called, who continue to "vamp" regularly along the artificial and unnatural lines laid down by short-sighted producers. The person should be nothing less than a medium for the true interpretation of life in all its naturalness and its many-sided phases through which all of us must pass every day of our lives.

"To this end, I have decided that my future screen efforts shall be entirely devoted to characterizations portraying the woman of today:—a modern, quick-thinking and wholly human woman with an appeal to every member of both sexes by reason of her naturalness and lack of "motion picture heroics." The formation of the Petrova Picture Company has enabled me to carry out this idea in its entirety. My first production, 'Daughter of Destiny,' to be shown at the Rialto theatre, New York, for its initial presentation in the near future, will prove, I feel certain, the truth of my assertions on this subject."

Enis Gets Busy for McClure and Petrova

Bert Ennis, the publicity purveyor, recently appointed to the post of publicity director for McClure Pictures and the Petrova Picture Company, has taken up his new duties, and is keeping the Underwood well exercised.

Ennis will handle exclusively the trade press exploitation matter for Madame Petrova and the eight starring vehicles in which she will appear during the forthcoming year. He will also publicize "Mother," the six-part George Loane Tucker production sponsored by McClure Pictures, together with the other film interests of the firm, with headquarters at 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York.

Roy Stewart Begins New Western at Hartville

Director Cliff Smith and company, including the Triangle cowboy star, Roy Stewart, have begun work on a new Western drama at Hartville, Triangle's ranch studio. The working title of the new picture is "The Law's Outlaw." Others in the cast are Fritzi Ridgeway and Ed Brady.

Sally Crute Appears With Harold Lockwood

Engaged by Metro for Leading Feminine Role in Feature Now in Making, "The Avenging Trail," Directed by Ford

Sally Crute Has Been Engaged to Play Leads with Harold Lockwood, Metro Star

METRO last week announced the engagement of Sally Crute, the well-known actress of stage and screen, as the leading support to Harold Lockwood in his new Metro play, "The Avenging Trail," now being produced under the direction of Francis Ford, with Fred J. Balshofer supervising.

Miss Crute has been appearing before the camera for the last six years with Essanay, Solax, Edison, Lubin and Metro. She was featured by Edison in a number of productions, including "The Magic Skin," "The Colonel of the Red Hussars" and "In Spite of All." For the Lubin Company she appeared as leading woman for Orrin Johnson in "The Light of Dusk." Miss Crute's latest engagements have been with Metro for whom she played in "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana, and "A Wife by Proxy," starring Mabel Taliaferro. Another recent appearance was in Syd Olcott's production of "The Belgian."

On the speaking stage Miss Crute's experience numbered engagements with the Elitch Garden Stock Company in Denver; a season as Aggie Lynch in "Within the Law," and appearances in "The Only Son," "The Deep Purple" and "The Rosary."

In "The Avenging Trail" Miss Crute is playing Rose Havens, the leading feminine role.

Hale Thinks Screen Men Make Excellent Soldiers

That motion picture actors will make good soldiers and will have less trouble than the average man is the opinion of Creighton Hale, who plays one of the leading roles in "The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial which is apparently making a hit with exhibitors and audiences.

"No soldier is more prompt in obeying orders given by his officer than the motion picture actors are in obeying orders given by the director—and this holds doubly good if the actor is working in a serial," said Creighton Hale.

Commonwealth Settles Into a Yonkers Studio

Begins Production of a New Series of Comedies for Release Through General Film—Cooper, Clark and Clarendon Stars

THE Commonwealth Comedy Company, it was announced last week, has moved into permanent quarters at the Epic studio, East Yonkers, and has begun production of a new series of comedies for General Film distribution. The Commonwealth company was formerly installed at New Rochelle, where it made Three C Comedies.

Arthur Ellery, among the well known comedy directors in the United States, has been engaged to direct Claude Cooper, Virginia Tracey Clark and Kenneth Clarendon, a trio of Commonwealth stars.

Beginning with "The Hod Carrier's Million" these new single reel comedies will be released weekly, it is announced.

President Joseph A. Klein of the Commonwealth Comedy Company, promises a high order of subjects under Director Ellery, who directed the Princess and Falstaff comedies. Claude Cooper, the leading man, holds a record for comedy parts, having appeared in 492 roles on the stage. His first work in pictures was as a director, and for fourteen months he directed and played leading parts in Falstaff Comedies. He has also played in support of Mary Pickford, Jane Cowl, Ethel Barrymore, Weber & Fields, and in "The Garden of Lies," "The Sign of the Cross," "Three Weeks," "The Melting Pot," "The Magpie" and "The Man Without a Country."

Miss Clark, the ingenue star, gained her first picture experience in a child's part seven years ago. For two years she has been appearing in high class film productions, such as "Gloria's Romance," with Billie Burke, the Perry Comedies, the Billie Quirk Comedies and a series of the Pokes & Jabs Comedies. Her last engagement was in the King Bee Comedies, opposite Billy West. The third member of the group, Kenneth Clarendon, has been appearing in comedy pictures for eight years with the Edison, Thanhouser and Vitagraph Companies and in the Falstaff and Princess Comedies, assisting Mr. Cooper.

Ida Darling Engaged for Talmadge Feature

Norma Talmadge, now at work on her next Select production, "The Ghosts of Yesterday," in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, has engaged Ida Darling for a role in the picture, thus bringing the cast up to what Miss Talmadge considers perfect.

Ida Darling's character work on the legitimate stage and in pictures is well known. Since leaving the speaking stage she has appeared in pictures for Fox, Lubin, Selznick, Pathe and Famous Players.

Following closely on the heels of Miss Talmadge's first two Select successes, "The Moth" and "The Secret of the Storm Country," "The Ghosts of Yesterday" promises to break records, in the opinion of the Select exchanges, which will distribute the feature.

Dainty Dorothy Phillips Stars in Theatrical Story

A drama that is said to go deeply into the life that lies beyond the footlights of New York's theatrical world is "Broadway Love," upon which Director Ida May Park lately started production. It is a picturized version of a magazine story by W. Carey Wonderly.

Dorothy Phillips plays the leading role, surrounded by a cast in which William Stowell is the leading man and Lon Chaney is playing the principal character role. Others in the cast are Juanita Hansen, Gladys Tennyson, Lule Warrenton, Eva Southern, Harry Von Meter and William Burress.

Frieda Hempel Possesses Valuable Screen Assets

From various sources, since it was announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS that Frieda Hempel, the prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House, was considering several offers to enter motion pictures, it has been reported that numerous persons have taken special occasion to tabulate the singer's abilities and assets as a motion picture star—and these indicate that Miss Hempel will no doubt become a genuine favorite in the silent drama as well as on the operatic stage.

It has been set forth that none can fail to be impressed by the aspect of the singer, whose grace in acting promises to lend itself admirably to the screen in developing for her a personality second to none of the stars now in pictures.

It has not been decided by Miss Hempel, according to announcements last week, whether she will sign a contract with a company now in operation or accept the offer of financial interests which desire to form a company exclusively for her.

Edison Gets Rights to a Printed Serial

The motion picture rights to "Josselyn's Wife," the latest serial by Kathleen Norris, have been acquired by the Edison Studios, it was announced last week. The story is now appearing in printed form in a weekly publication.

The screen production, it is said, will feature a Broadway star, whose name has not been announced, and the picture will be released as a Perfection Picture through the George Kleine System.

Ethel Clayton, the World film star, expects to have her picture in over a million homes during the coming year, as a result of having been selected by a well known flour manufacturer as an exponent of American womanhood. The picture, which will be used, according to plans, on a calendar for 1918 distributed by the flour company, was selected from sixty negatives.

Fox Companies Start Seven New Productions

Two Are Announced as Standard Pictures and Five as Special Features—George Walsh Completes Latest Feature

IT was announced last Sunday by the Fox Film Corporation that work was begun last week in the William Fox studios on seven new productions. Two of them are Standard Pictures, and five are Fox Special Features. The Standard Pictures and two of the Special Features are being made in the East, it was made known.

In addition, it was announced that George Walsh has completed his latest feature, "The Pride of New York."

Mme. Sonia Markova, whose first picture as a star, "The Painted Madonna," was released November 11, went to Massachusetts the first of last week with Director O. A. C. Lund and members of her company to take a number of scenes in a new Russian drama which George Scarbaugh has written for her.

Jane and Katherine Lee, who finished "Troublemakers" only a few days ago, already are taking scenes under Kenean Buel's direction for a new production. They are working in the New Jersey studio which Mr. Fox recently equipped for their special use.

June Caprice is being directed by Harry Millarde in a production which is said to be equally as timely and forceful as her last picture, "Miss U. S. A." In her company are Kittens Reichert, Florence Ashbrooke, Inez Marcel, Dan Mason, Richard Neill and Tom Burrough.

The next Theda Bara Super-picture has been cast, except for two roles. The company will include Wayne Hope Allen, Walter Law, Sidney Mason, Hugh Thompson, Lisle Leigh and Reba Porter. Besides studio work at Fort Lee, scenes also have been taken in and around Patchin place in Greenwich Village.

In the Western studios, Jewel Carmen, Gladys Brockwell and Tom Mix are engaged on new productions. Miss Carmen, who shortly will make her debut as a star, is working with Frank Lloyd, her company including Genevieve Blinn, Joseph Manning, Nancy Taswell, G. Raymond Nye and Murdock MacQuarrie. Miss Brockwell, under the direction of Bertram Bracken, is doing a story of a patriotic sort, the scenes of which are laid in Berlin and on the Western front just before the declaration of war by the United States. Betram Grassby, Charles Clary, Willard Louis and Colin Chase are the members of the cast who have been selected.

The company which is to support Tom Mix in his first picture as a star in Western dramas has been selected and Mr. Mix is fairly well along with his scenes. Wanda Petit is a member of the cast.

Tom Ince's "Wonder Boy" Holds Unique Place in Films

CHARLES RAY, the youthful star, who is generally referred to as Tom Ince's "wonder boy," holds a unique place among screen players.

Ray, one of the youngest and most versatile of stars, whose poplarity is second only to his artistry, has never been with any other producer than Thomas H. Ince. His first picture, screened two years ago, was "The Favorite Son," which was followed by "The Sharpshooter." Following them a long series of pictures demonstrated Ray's talent and artistic sincerity.

Recently discussing this young actor, Mr. Ince thus accounted for his appeal: "If I could sum it up in a phrase," said Mr. Ince, "I should say it is because Ray has youth; expressive youth. That is, he naturally and unerringly portrays the emotions and mannerisms of youth.

"It is a strange thing, but a fact, that nearly all leading men choose as their models actors who are old enough to be their fathers—often their grandfathers. They are really imitating the mature methods of artists who are unable to express youth and who have to rely on their acquired artistry and stage technique to supply the illusion. Ray has never made this mistake. He has always, so to speak, played the youthful part called for by the scenario."

Artcraft Releases New Farrar Feature Shortly

Walter E. Greene Schedules "The Devil Stone" as Artcraft's First December Picture—Wallace Reid Again Opposite Star

Geraldine Farrar as She Appears in Her Newest Artcraft Feature, "The Devil Stone"

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, announced last week that the next Geraldine Farrar subject, following "The Woman God Forgot," will be completely finished within the near future, and that it will be the first release of Artcraft in December. The picture, which will be called "The Devil Stone," is now going through its final treatment before presentation, the scene of activities being the Lasky plant in California.

It is said that one of the most attractive features of the new photoplay is the artistic presentation of the theme, which is based on superstition, by Cecil B. De Mille, who staged the production. In handling the supernatural effects of the story Mr. De Mille was afforded particular opportunity to display his master technique. In staging such situations Mr. De Mille is probably in a class by himself and that the new film should prove an artistic triumph both in point of the star's acting and the director's presentation is anticipated.

Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the stories for "The Woman God Forgot," "Joan, the Woman," and other Farrar photoplays, is responsible for the scenario of "The Devil Stone," which is adapted from the original story by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun.

Geraldine Farrar in this picture is said to offer a characterization entirely different from anything in which she has ever appeared on the screen. As Marcia Manot, she portrays the part of a simple Breton fisherwoman who believes she finds a famous stone which has been lost for generations and as a result enters a new world from that in which she has been living. The treatment of the story links the time of the legendary Queen Grenelda, of Norse folk lore, with the present and promises a novelty in the handling of a film story.

Opposite the star again appears Wallace Reid. Other well-known players who have won distinction in Farrar pictures appear in the new production, including Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, James Neill and Raymond Hatton. Gustav von Seyffertitz, Ernest Joy, Mabel Van Buren, Lillian Leighton and Burwell Hamrick also appear in important parts.

"The Auction Block" Sells at Regular Price

Goldfish Makes Arrangements with Beach Whereby Exhibitors Get Another Advantage—Scheduled for Release December 2

UNDER an arrangement made last week between Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and Rex Beach, the latter's screen production, "The Auction Block," will be delivered to all Goldwyn contract customers at the regular price paid by exhibitors for Goldwyn Pictures, it was announced this week.

"The Aucion Block" will be released throughout North America December 2, replacing Goldwyn's own picture, "Joan of Plattsburg," in which Mabel Normand was scheduled to make her return to the screen.

Certain military material depicted in "Joan of Plattsburg" is said to be of such a character that government officials deem it unwise for Goldwyn to release it at this particular moment when affairs at the Plattsburg camp are guarded with all possible secrecy and the request has been made that Goldwyn temporarily postpone the release of Miss Normand's production.

Samuel Goldfish determined at once to strengthen the Goldwyn organization with the exhibitors of North America by obtaining for them a special production which had been made to command high rental prices from exhibitors.

Goldwyn therefore announces four productions in straight succession. These and the dates of their release are as follows: November 18, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn; December 2, "The Auction Block," by Rex Beach; December 16, Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man"; December 30, Mary Garden in "Thais,' by Anatole France.

"Miss Normand's second Goldwyn production," by George Laone Tucker will soon be ready to again bring her back to the screen," said Mr. Goldfish last week.

Marie Dressler Begins New Comedy for Goldwyn

Marie Dressler, the "Tillie" of the stage and screen, who recently completed "The Scrub Lady," a comedy being released through Goldwyn exchanges, has begun work on a new production from her own pen called "Fired," and described as the story of the busiest day of her life.

"Fired," which will also be released to exhibitors through the Goldwyn sales organization, is another of the "Tillie" series, and begins with the ejection of that character for the 'steenth time in her rather checkered career from the hash foundry operated by Simon Legree. That establishes the title.

Malcolm Williams Live Corpse i "Empty Pockets"

Malcolm Williams has what is terme the unique distinction of playing a dea man throughout the whole length of Her bert Brenon's production of Rupe Hughes' romance, "Empty Pockets. "One thing alone relieves my mind," sai Mr. Williams, in discussing his decease depiction, "I'm the livest dead man eve celluloided."

Mr. Williams plays a millionaire man about-town, "Merry" Perry Merithew whose body is found on an East Side tene ment roof in the first scene of the Hughes melodrama. Shallenberger and Priest Handling "Persuasive Peggy"

W. E. Shallenberger and W. R. Priest, with offices in the Times Building, New York, whose latest work in the independent field is the exploitation of "Persuasive Peggy," produced by Mayfair Film Corporation, with Peggy Hyland featured, report success with this production. Both these men are prominent in the independent field. Mr. Shallenberger is president of the Arrow Film Corporation whose latest production is the "Deemster," based on Hall Caine's novel of the same name. He has been identified with the picture business for several years. Mr. Priest will be remembered for his work in connection with the exploitation of the Captain Scott pictures, the British War Pictures and Thomas Ince's production, "Civilization." Mr. Shallenberger and Mr. Priest announce that following the exploitation of "Persuasive Peggy," they will market "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona."

U. S. Exhibitors First Release Well Received

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh Trade Showings of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" Attended by Enthusiastic Buyers—Good Reports from Other Sections

FRANK HALL, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corporation, reports that the work of the organization is running along with the smoothness of machinery. Reports from Pennsylvania exhibitors, who saw "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," last week when it was shown for review in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, gave this production a welcome reception.

The Philadelphia showing was given at the Locust theatre and was attended for the most part by exhibitors from eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. The showing was in charge of William Alexander, special representative of the booking corporation, and Allen May, who will handle the business of the concern in Philadelphia, making his headquarters at the offices of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange.

The Pittsburgh showing at the Pitt theatre was held under even more auspicious circumstances. It was the first trade screening ever held on a Sunday in the Smoky City and exhibitors within a radius of one hundred miles came by train and automobile to see what the newly organized U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation had to offer as its initial release. Representatives of the Clark and Rowland chain of theatres were present and heartily endorsed the production.

With an efficient system of distribution already in full operation in the East, South and Middle West, the Ince spectacle is being heavily booked in these territories, it is reported. The Fox theatres throughout New England also have booked.

Nathan Gordon, directing head of the Gordon picture and theatrical interests of New England, is handling the distribution of the U. S. subjects through the Globe Feature Film Corporation of Boston. Negotiations also are under way for circuit bookings in the metropolitan district.

The Southern territory distribution is being handled through the exchanges of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, with offices in all the principal cities of the South. Although in operation for only a week many bookings have already been recorded in the South. William Oldknow, a well-known Southern film man, will supervise U. S. distribution in that territory.

Arrangements are under way for the establishment of a distribution system girdling the West. It is likely the Hoffman-Foursquare interests will handle U. S. subjects beyond the Rockies and by January 1, the Booking Corporation will have a complete distribution system covering the entire country and Canada.

Foursquare Pictures, Inc., Organized in Colorado

New Organization Will Handle Independent Features of the Hoffman-Foursquare Brand in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Mexico—Cohen Manager

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the formation of the Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Colorado, for the purpose of handling distribution of independent productions in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico.

The officers are George Backer, M. H. Hoffman and Ben. S. Cohen; and the concern mentioned will be affiliated with M. H. Hoffman, Inc.

Among the Hoffman-Foursquare features which Mr. Cohen will offer through the Foursquare Pictures exchange, in Denver, will be "The Bar Sinister," "The Fringe of Society," "The Sin Woman," "One Hour," "The Silent Witness," "The Great White Trail," "Her Fighting Chance" and "Madame Sherry." Other super-features, just secured for his territory by Mr. Cohen, are "The Whip," "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" and "The Italian Battle Front."

M. H. Hoffman, in commenting on the deal, said:

"As one of the broadest-minded men in the business, Mr. Cohen's move is of the utmost advantage, to us as well as to his own step toward independence. As vice-president and general manager of the Foursquare Pictures, Inc., of Colorado, Mr. Cohen virtually enters business for himself and I am gratified in having him as an associate.

"During Mr. Cohen's two years with the World Film, when he served as manager of the New York exchange, and later as division manager for the territory including Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Indianapolis and Detroit, he joined the Selznick organization and was instrumental in forming the Clara Kimball Young Corporation. He opened nearly all the Selznick offices, selling franchnse changes in the West and exercised general supervision of eleven of the various exchanges.

Mr. Cohen said: "A believer in actions rather than words, I think at this time the least said the better. It is sufficient, in the circumstances, to remark that I am proud to serve as an officer of our new corporation with Messrs. Backer and Hoffman, for they are men whose business ideals and methods mean everything for the progress of a great industry which is fast coming into its own.

"Exhibitors in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico will be considered first of all, and if I am correct in my beliefs they and we will work in harmony—for the greatest and most lasting good of all concerned."

Japanese Scenes in Next Burton Holmes Feature

BURTON HOLMES, in the ninety-first release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, is to introduce his followers to the pictorial beauties of that modren fairyland, "The Land of Madame Butterfly. The picture is said to be not alone very interesting as a specialty, but is also a lovely reel in so far as scenes are concerned.

In the ninety-second release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures will be shown the immediate environs of a certain mountain well known throughout the world. This release is called "Around Fujiyama."

Lubin and Sawyer Report Record Business with "Warrior"

Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin sales managers of the General Enterprises, Inc., report record sales of the company's two big features, "The Warrior" and "Cabiria." They are now in the Middle West and, last week, reported that during the week they had closed a deal with the Allen Film Corporation, of Chicago, for the territories of Illinois, Michigan, Nebraska and Iowa, for "The Warrior." It is estimated that 50 per cent of the country's territory has been sold for this production. The Canadian rights are owned by the Globe Films, Ltd., Toronto, Canada. During the absence of Messrs. Lubin and Sawyer in the West, exploitating these two productions, M. R. Fink, head of the foreign department of the General Enterprises, Inc., will handle the affairs at the New York office.

McClure Pictures Reports Good Sales for "Mother"

McClure Pictures reports that George Loane Tucker's latest production, "Mother" with Elizabeth Risdon featured, is meeting with success on the independent market. Good sales are reported. Elizabeth Risdon, the featured player, who is to start on tour with William Faversham's production of George Bernard Shaw's stage play, "Misalliance," will have the unique distinction of appearing in the same city, at both the theatres offering the spoken and the silent drama. She will leave this week with the road production and appear in every important city from New York to the Coast. It is pretty certain that at some point between here and the Coast she will find "Mother" showing at one of the theatres.

"The Fringe of Society" to Be Given Trade Showing

The Fringe of Society," recently finished by the George Backer Film Corporation, will have its first New York presentation during the latter part of this month. The distribution will be handled by M. H. Hoffman, Inc., and although business has not been sought by the various Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges throughout the country demands for early booking have been received, it is announced.

Manager Hy. Gainsborg, of the New York Hoffman-Foursquare exchange, has ordered twice the customary number of prints for this feature. Canadian exchanges have placed an order for an extra supply.

M. H. Hoffman says "The Fringe of Society," is a picture which possesses not only distinction but so many elements of entertaining appeal that it is certain to strike an exceptionally popular note.

No inconsiderable part of the quality of "The Fringe of Society" has been gained through the supervision given the setting by George Backer, president of the George Backer Film Corporation. Mr. Backer provided for interiors which are typical of those to be found in the homes of people of means having the best taste.

Ruth Roland and Milton Sills are co-starred, and Leah Baird, J. Herbert Frank, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby and Tammany Young are in support. The story was written by Pierre V. R. Key.

"In all respects," said Mr. Hoffman, "'The Fringe of Society' is worthy to carry the Hoffman-Foursquare brand. It is on that account that I have confidence in its value to the exhibitors, for the reason that it will, in my judgment, meet every requirement which is being sought by the men who realize the importance of giving their patrons the best."

May, Philadelphia Representative for U. S. Exhibitors

Allen May has been appointed Philadelphia representative for the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and will make his headquarters at the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange at 1325 Vine street, that city. He has taken up his new duties and reports a good demand from eastern Pennsylvania exhibitors for "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the Ince production which is the initial release of the booking corporation.

Mr. May is one of the pioneer exchangemen of America and has been prominent in theatrical lines.

He retired from the theatrical business to take up motion pictures and affiliated himself with the World Film Corporation at the inception of that company. He joined the sales forces of the Universal, from which organization he comes to the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

Silhouettes of Charlotte, the Ice Skater, Whose First Feature for Commonwealth Pictures Has Been Completed. It Promises to Add Much to the Prestige of the Silent Drama

Schlesinger Pleased with Results of Hyland Production

President of Mayfair Film Corporation Gratified with Reception of First Peggy Hyland Picture—Example of Clean Drama, He Says

"PERSUASIVE PEGGY," the late production of the Mayfair Film Corporation, with Peggy Hyland featured, is, according to reports received from M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, meeting with the approval of the exhibitors who have booked same. In a comparatively short time this production has been placed in more than half of the territory in the independent field and Mr. Schlesinger accepts these rapid sales to buyers throughout the country as assurance of marked success for his production. Shallenberger and Priest are handling the exploitation of this production.

In commenting upon this production and the rapidity with which it has been placed on the independent market, Mr. Schlesinger said:

"I am more than pleased at the reception which 'Persuasive Peggy' has been given by the press and trade. The public at large, and the vast preponderance of people who visit motion picture theatres, which means of course the majority of the people, are clean in their aspirations and want clean subjects presented to them for the screen. I saw that screen salacity, though successful for a time, would only have a transient existence. At least 60 per cent. of the frequenters of motion picture theatres are women and girls. If you please them you make a success of your picture.

"This fixed principle was in my mind before we started on the production of 'Persuasive Peggy.' I recognize the pulling power of big authors' names; we all do, of course. But your big author is sometimes an awkward asset.

"'Persuasive Peggy' didn't trouble the censors. Maravene Thompson writes for the millions and not for the few. The output of magazines and publications appealing exclusively to women is vast.

"When 'Persuasive Peggy' was chosen as the theme of the first Mayfair production is was because it made an appeal to every girl, in every home. It is a newly wed theme.

"Miss Hyland, the star; the direction; the photography, are all in accord with the clean, wholesome, entertaining drama found in 'Persuasive Peggy.'"

Has Your Competitor Got An Advantage Over You?

Some of the wise independent exchanges know that MOTION PICTURE NEWS is just as good as a New York office for them. Information of all kinds is right on tap to be supplied them at the word.

Some of the other exchanges are slow to take advantage of this service. They would not let their competitors get an advantage over them in their territories, yet they let Mr. Competitor have the full advantage all alone of MOTION PICTURE NEWS facilities.

It isn't right. It isn't good business. Let us hear from you, too. Let us do favors for you. Get ready—shoot!

Metro Answers the Question, "Who is June?"

Following Extensive Advertising Campaign Explains That June Is None Other Than Viola Dana in "Blue Jeans" Feature

THE flaring question, "Who Is June?" that has been asked in the advertising pages of magazines, trade and newspapers, and which has created an unusual amount of interest throughout the country, has been answered by the Metro Pictures Corporation, which organization explains that the unique "teaser" method of stirring up interest was taken because it was felt that a more lasting impression could be given the trade and public that way.

"Who Is June?" turns out to be none other than Viola Dana, the Metro star, in "Blue Jeans," a feature in which she is expected to pack all theatres that show it. The question arose from the name which Miss Dana bears in the picture, that of June. In this case Metro explains that June, or Miss Dana, is a demure little country girl, without mother, father, or, in fact, anything that most little country girls have in their youthful days. June is even put out of the poor-house because she pulled a geranium from the flower bed with which to decorate her mother's grave. Following this she travels over the hills of Indiana, arrayed in nothing more fine nor costly than a gingham dress. For a long time, according to Metro, June was not exactly sure of just who June was. She thought she did until she discovered that her dead father wasn't her father at all, and, as a result of the revelation it looked as if she had married her brother and that her husband was not her husband because he had been married before. Then, nothing could be simpler than the question, "Who is June?" In the end it all came out to everybody's satisfaction and everybody was happy. June came into her own.

It is estimated that about six million persons in the United States have witnessed the legitimate production of "Blue Jeans." Those persons paid admission prices running from thirty cents minimum to three dollars maximum.

The screen production, it is announced, will be presented at prices commensurate with prices usually asked for the best of special productions and these prices will be far less than those obtained by the theatres at which the legitimate production was presented.

Already numerous theatre managers of houses where the legitimate play was presented are said to be asking for the first run of the picture version. Motion picture exhibitors throughout the country also are making inquiries regarding "Blue Jeans." In the majority of cases it is said they are endeavoring to book the picture for long runs.

As the result of the screening of "Blue Jeans," Metro thinks there probably will be a revival of the popular songs of a decade ago. One of the first of these will no doubt be "The Picture That Was Turned Toward the Wall." This song was written by Charles Graham as the result of an inspiration he received while witnessing the premiere performance of "Blue Jeans."

Essanay Plans Release of Perodical Specials

Features Will Be in Six or More Parts, and Stories Are to Be Chosen from Best Books of the Day—Only Big Stars Used

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announced last week that his company will shortly begin the release of special features of six or more parts, at varying intervals. The stories are being selected from the best books or literature of the day, and only stars of national importance will appear in them, it is said, and the features will be placed on the market as specials independent of any program.

A national advertising campaign is about to be launched, including the bill-boarding of the entire country, it is announced. This work, with other lines of specialized advertising, is expected to begin early in December.

One picture already has been completed, another in course of production and the rights for two others have been purchased and are being put into shape to put on the floor.

The first picture will feature the former stage star, Taylor Holmes, who recently appeared in the photoplay, 'Efficiency Edgar's Courtship." This was followed by the pictures, "Fools for Luck," "Two Bit Seats" and "The Small Town Guy." The name of his first super feature is announced as "Uneasy Money," taken from P. G. Wodehouse's story, and directed by L. C. Windom. The story starts in London and winds up in the United States. Taylor Holmes takes the part of an impoverished English lord, who is such a decent chap that he takes the pains to cure a grouchy American of splicing.

The second super feature to be released will be that of Mary MacLane, the writer and author of "I, Mary MacLane" and other books. She is now working at the Essanay Studios under the direction of Arthur Berthelet in one of her own works, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." This is described as a series of vampirish experiences of a world weary woman.

Then is scheduled to come another special, with Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap," from the book by Harry Leon Wilson. The exterior settings for this picture will be taken in Arizona, and L. C. Windom is now picking a troupe to accompany Mr. Holmes West, where a temporary camp will be established for several weeks until the picture is completed.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Mutual Presents Edna Goodri in "American Maid"

Edna Goodrich will be presented "American Maid," the fourth of t series of motion picture productions whi she is making for Mutual, on Novemb 26, it was announced last week. The fe ture is a five-reel drama written by Juli Rothschild and was adapted for the scre by Hamilton Smith. It was directed Albert Capellani, the French director, a produced at the Glendale studios of t Mutual Film Corporation.

In "American Maid" Miss Goodrich cast as a typical American girl. The sto is built around the melting pot idea, sho ing the variety of types and nationaliti which have been blended to make t American woman the queen of creation.

The story opens in a field hospital ne the French firing line and the reproductic of this battle scene is said to be a masterf portrayal. Miss Goodrich is a Red Cro nurse. A romance has its inception in t hospital, the lovers are separated during a attack by the enemy and are brought t gether two years later, she finding that h soldier is an outlaw. Time proves he worthy of her love and that he was merel shouldering the crime of another.

In the supporting cast with Miss Good rch are George Henery, William B. David son, John Hopkins and others.

Miss Goodrich's pictures have proved ou at the box office. "Reputation," the firs of the series, was a revelation and "Quee X" and "A Daughter of Maryland," sec ond and third of the series, have shown he growing popularity as a screen star. Sh is just completing "Her Second Husband.

More Service Stars Are Added to Triangle's Banner

Triangle Distributing Corporation announced last week that several new names have been added to the roll of honor at the Triangle Culver City studio in the past week.

Among the young men who have departed to swell the ranks of Uncle Sam's army are Harry Gunstrom, property man, now at Camp Lewis, American Lake; Joe Roach, scenario department, to Camp Lewis; Chick Collins, employment bureau, to Camp Kearney, San Diego; William Lipe, member of the Triangle playing forces, to Camp Lewis; Alfred Werker, company clerk for Director G. P. Hamilton, also to Camp Lewis; and Oliver Perrault, assistant cameraman with Director Jack Dillon, to Toronto, Canada, to join the Royal Canadian Aviation Corps.

The latest Triangle-Keystone employee to be called to the colors is Duke Reynolds, who was assistant to Triangle-Keystone director Harry Williams. Duke left for the training camp at American Lake, Washington, last week. Mr. Reynolds' wife, known to filmdom as Cecile Arnold, has also left for Tacoma, Washington, to be near her husband until he is called to France.

Roy Del Ruth, of the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff, also left for American Lake last week, but it is reported that a telegram came shortly after his arrival at the training camp, permitting him to return to his comedy work in Southern California.

Mal (Slim) St. Clair, the Triangle-Keystone comedian, when asked if he was subject to the draft, gave out two good reasons why he didn't expect to be dodging shrapnel in the present war. The first is, that he is under draft age, and the second, that his linear perpendicular is all out of proportion to his gross tonnage.

"A Branded Soul" Finished by Gladys Brockwell

The William Fox production, "A Branded Soul," in which Gladys Brockwell is the star, has been completed at the Fox studios in the West, it was announced last week. The picture is said to end with many thrilling scenes distinctly new in character.

Universal Stars Eddie Polo Western Serial

"The Bull's Eye" Is Narrative of Cattle Country, and Is Being Directed by James W. Horne—Cast Is Well Chosen

STARTING right off with a slam-bang, a new serial recently went into production at Universal City. It is called "The Bull's Eye," and is a narrative of the cattle country—said to depart from the usual sort of wild-and-woolly Western yarn.

Eddie Polo, whose strenuous work in previous Universal serials, notably "Liberty" and "The Gray Ghost," has made him one of the popular male stars, is playing the leading role in the production. Vivian Reed has been secured by the Universal Company to play opposite Polo.

The basic idea of the story was furnished by Henry McRae, production manager of Universal City and formerly a director of Western features, who knows whereof he speaks when he tells of the unbounded West. The story is being written by Tom Gibson, who has been responsible for a large number of photoplays during an engagement of three years on the scenario staff of the Universal Company.

James W. Horne has been "turned loose" as director of "The Bull's Eye." In a long engagement with the Kalem Company he produced, among others, "The Mystery of the Grand Hotel," "The Girl Detective," "Social Pirates," "The American Girl," "The Girl from 'Frisco," and "Stingaree." Art Flavin is his assistant and Al Cawood is the photographer.

William Welsh, who formerly played roles in Universal films, notably in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," has rejoined the company after a year's absence and is playing the "heavy." Hal Cooley plays a juvenile lead and Ray Hanford has an important part, as has Frank Lanning, recently of the Lasky Studio, who plays the role of a sheep baron. Noble Johnson, who will be well remembered as the Indian, Little Bear, in Universal's "Red Ace" serial, also appears in "The Bull's Eye" in an essential role.

Molly Pearson Makes Screen Debut for Brenon

Will Appear with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back"—Formerly in the Stage Production

MOLLY PEARSON, the Scotch heroine of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," is to make her screen debut with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," it was announced this week by the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation.

The Jerome K. Jerome symbolical drama, in which Sir Johnston will be seen in his role of the Stranger, is now in progress of filming at the Brenon Studios, Hudson Heights, N. J. Miss Pearson has started her first film work, playing the role of the slavey, Stasia, which she created in the original New York production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," when it was presented at Maxine Elliott's theatre in 1909.

Miss Pearson was born and educated in Scotland. She obtained her first theatrical position with the Ben Greet Players and subsequently toured England, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and India. Miss Pearson came to this country with Olga Nethersole's company. She did not, however, attract unusual attention, until she appeared with Sir Johnston-Forbes Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Her touchingly drawn portrayal of the little slavey of a drab London boarding house established her as a young actress of unusual ability.

Miss Pearson scored again when she appeared in the role of the canny Scotch lassie, Bunty, in "Bunty Pulls the Strings." In a single night she became the talk of Broadway.

Miss Pearson has since appeared in a wide variety of New York productions, ranging from drama to musical comedy, but it is probable that the theatregoers of the country best remember her as the Stasia of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," and the Bunty of "Bunty Pulls the Strings." Her re-appearance in the role of the slavey, on the screen with Sir Johnston, should consequently have unusual interest.

Raymond West Nears Completion of First Paralta Play

RAYMOND B. WEST, late drector of Ince-Triangle subjects, expects to shortly complete the filming of his first Paralta play which stars Bessie Barriscale. This is titled "Within the Cup" and is from an original scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn, which in addition to having an atmosphere of Paris, has many of its scenes laid in the artist colony of New York.

Mr. West has been with Paralta since a week or two after the studio was opened in Los Angeles, but until a few weeks ago his time was entirely taken up with other matters pertaining to production. But what time he has lost in making pictures will be made up in quality of his first subjects if elaborate settings and painstaking detail work are to be used to judge from.

No less than a dozen very elegant settings, each of a distinct type and out of the ordinary finish for detail, will be used in "Within the Cup." They represent beautiful entrances and interiors to homes of the wealthy, elegant interiors of stylish lobster palaces, and of particular interest should be the views of the bal-masque, which will be a reproduction of the annual artists' event in Paris. Mr. West plans it will require at least three weeks for the filming and editing of this subject. George Fisher, who had an important part in "Civilization" and has since played in a number of releases with Mary Miles Minter, is playing the lead opposite Miss Barriscale.

New Material Assigned to Triangle Directors

Announcement of Coming Releases Shows Efforts of Julian Johnson to Get Best Fiction and Encourage the Staff Writers

GREAT things are forthcoming, apparently, from the scenario departmen at Triangle's Culver City studio, according to an announcement that several high-class and unusual stories are now in various stages of completion there. This seems to insure promises of production up to, if not above, Triangle's standard.

In addition to original stories by the Triangle staff authors, it is announced that several well known magazine authors are represented in the assortment of stories soon to be produced. Neither pains nor money are being spared by Julian Johnson, editor-in-chief, and Frank Beresford, scenario editor, in their efforts to obtain the best material on the market.

One of the productions said to be of unusual interest is the original story now called "Evidence," by Jack Cunningham, for which the scenario is being prepared. Another one which Triangle puts in the same class is being completed by E. Magnus Ingleton, who wrote "Because of the Woman," the seven-reel feature on the December program. It will probably bear the title of "Mr. Butterfly," as it sets forth a reversal of situations and characters in the story, "Mrs. Butterfly." E. Mason Hopper is expected to direct the feature, with an all-star cast.

Hayden Talbot, recently added to the Triangle scenario staff, has completed a play of American life entitled, "The Girl Nobody Knew," as a stellar vehicle for Belle Bennett. Jack Conway, who has completed "Because of the Woman," the first seven-reel program feature to be produced by the Triangle under the new regime, will probably do "Real Folks." The screen adaptation was prepared by Catherine Carr.

Director Jack Dillon has almost completed work on the story "Betty Takes a Hand." Olive Thomas and Charles Gunn have the leading roles in this feature. Miss Thomas' next story, already completed and waiting for her, is "Limousine Life."

Texas Guinan, who recently returned from her New York vacation, has been cast to play the title role in a Western story, "The Gun Woman," to be released in January.

Roy Stewart, under the direction of Cliff Smith, has commenced "The Law's Outlaw," by Ethel and James Dorrance. The screen adaptation of the story was made by Alvin W. Neitz.

Wyndham Gittens has put the finishing touches on an original story dealing with crooks along new and unusual lines, which George Elwood Jenks is preparing for the screen. Director Gittens expects to begin shooting in a few days.

Immediately after finishing "The Gown of Destiny," a war drama featuring Alma Rubens, Director Lynn Reynolds will probably start work on a drama of the oil fields. The story is from the pen of Wilbur Hall.

Harvey Gates is writing the continuity on "Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau," from the story of that name by Francis William Sullivan. This will probably be the next story on which Director G. P. Hamilton will begin shooting.

Vitagraph Western Studio Keeps Things Moving

Big Sun Stage Is Nearing Completion and Will Provide Much More Production Space—Two Administration Buildings Ready

ACCORDING to reports from Vitagraph offices last week, a visit to Greater Vitagraph's western studio, in Hollywood, Cal., would convince even the most pessimistic that there is no such thing as retrenchment in the motion picture industry, at least insofar as Vitagraph is concerned. The studio is said to be one of the busiest spots in Los Angeles county, where the comprehensive program of building an expansion laid out by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is being hurried to completion.

The big "sun" stage, 100 x 100 feet square, is nearing completion and will provide an additional production space of 10,000 square feet. Two concrete administration buildings have been turned over by the contractor, and are models of their kind. They will house the executive offices of the Western Vitagraph ompany. Early in the summer there was completed an up-to-date building for the screen folk, twenty-four dressing rooms with showers and every other convenience—each room to satisfy a star.

Actors in four producing companies are turning night into day with Blue Ribbon features, Big V Comedies and the fifteen-episode serial, "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Just as a side issue, a three-ring circus tent has been pitched outside the studio lot for the filming of a scene in "The Eighth Great Grand Parent," by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester and made into a forthcoming Blue Ribbon feature, starring Alfred Whitman and Nell Shipman.

Nearby is the Vitagraph menagerie, said to be already "some" show and growing. In it, among other exhibits, are the llamas used in the Peruvian picture "The Flaming Omen," the big bear, hero in the fourteenth episode of "Vengeance—and the Woman."

Fifth Group of Jaxons Start Through General

In the new series of six Jaxon comedies released by General Film, Pokes and Jabs are slated for some more hilarity in the form of screen fun. The current release in this, the fifth, series, is called "Blundering Boobs," and other subjects in the series are "Disappointed Love," "He's In Again," "How It Worked," "Their Model Careers" and "His Fishy Footsteps." The last two subjects, it is said, will introduce a new comedy team, Finn and Haddie, who promise many novelties in the comedy line.

Tucker Struck Snags in Filming Risdon Film

According to George Loane Tucker, the ordinarily peaceful pursuit of producing motion pictures takes on an entirely different aspect when attempted on English soil at the present time. The director, now at work in this country for Goldwyn Pictures, encountered many difficulties during his picturization of the McClure production, "Mother," starring Elisabeth Risdon. Made in the Dartmoor Hills section of England, close to the sea-coast, the various locations necessary for the screen productions are said to have offered a shining mark for the raids of German Zeppelins. Due to the many interruptions necessary during the visits of the air ships, the time consumed in filming "Mother" is said to set a new record in feature productions.

Bluebird Specializes in Novels and Stories

Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., is evidencing a purpose to incorporate more popular novels and published stories in Bluebird features than heretofore. Bluebird's staff of scenario writers will furnish various original scripts to diversify the offerings, but the announcement is made that future releases will be largely made from novels that have attained popularity with the reading public.

Among the stories are: "Heart's Blood," assigned to Dorothy Phillips, the novel by Elaine Stern; "Back to the Right Trail," by Fred Bechdolt, will be given a special production; John S. McGrogarty's "Kane of Liscarra" and "The Mortgaged Wife," by F. H. Clark, will become future Bluebirds. Many others are also under negotiation.

Sherry Signs Two New York Towns for Paramount

The towns of Schenectady and Albany, N. Y., were definitely won over to Artcraft and Paramount when William L. Sherry visited them last week, and five houses were signed for the Star Series Service offered by the two distributing companies. Mr. Sherry returned to New York last Monday with the contracts, aggregating, including the new Paramount serial and other short subjects, $100,000. The total will be $150,000 worth of business when contracts now pending are closed.

In Albany, where the Star Series Service had never been placed, although offered to the exhibitors of the town since last August or before, four houses were signed by Mr. Sherry with arrangements for the taking on of two others if bookings could be arranged. The houses are, in the order of their run on the production: The Regent on South Pearl street, managed by S. Suckno; the Leland on South Pearl street, a Proctor house managed by E. Hart; the Colonial on Central avenue, managed by Walter Powers, and the Pine Hill on West Lawrence street, under the management of George Wright. The Orpheum and the Hudson theatres have deals pending which Mr. Sherry has neither accepted nor rejected as yet.

In Schenectady the Lincoln theatre, under the management of J. G. Walker, was taken on by Mr. Sherry in addition to The Albany, which had been previously signed for the Sherry service. Seven houses are to use, or are already using, Paramount's serial production, "Who Is Number One?" with Kathleen Clifford.

Mr. Sherry's trip to Albany and Schenectady lasted but a week and a half. The $100,000 worth of business he secured, aside from $50,000 worth of contracts pending, is regarded by the wiseacres of filmdom as probably the greatest volume of booking contracts ever closed by one man in so short a space of time.

Pathe-Astra Enters Era of Renewed Activity

Louis J. Gasnier Has Big Plans and Is Said to Be Working Them Out in Big Way—Many Pictures Now in Production

GREAT activity with big pictures the order of the day is reported at the Pathe-Astra Studios in Jersey city and in Fort Lee. Louis J. Gasnier, president of Astra has big plans and is said to be working them out in a big way.

William Parke, the director who made the Gladys Hulette Pathe-Astra pictures, is producing "The Frame-Up" by Wallace D. Clifton with Mrs. Vernon Castle, Helen Chadwick, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Harry Benham and J. H. Gilmour. This is expected to prove the best of the Castle-Pathe Plays. It is said to be a very strong story, with big situations, which give Mr. Parke fine opportunities for dramatic development.

George Fitzmaurice is now preparing the A. H. Woods success, "Innocent," for Fannie Ward. The cast will also include John Miltern of the original company and Caesare Gravina.

Hobart Henley is in the South with Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, at work on what is expected to prove Agnes C. Johnston's best picture. Miss Johnston is the author of "The Shine Girl," "Her New York," "The Candy Girl" and other Pathe features.

Albert Parker, a new Astra director, is making what is considered a remarkable picture from A. H. Woods' stage hit, "The Other Woman." The star has not yet been announced, but the supporting cast includes Milton Sills, Anna Lehr and William Parke, Jr.

As "The Fatal Ring" is now completed, George B. Seitz, director of this serial, is resting in Atlantic City. His next production will be one of the Pathe Plays starring Pearl White. This was written by Charles T. Dazey and Roy Somerville.

It is stated also that plans are now about completed for the production of a new Pathe-Astra serial, and further details about this are expected to be forthcoming in the very near future, just as soon as some of the minor details are adjusted.

Many Well-Known Players Appear with Lina Cavalieri

MME. LINA CAVALIERI, it was announced last week, will have excellent support in her first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," in which she will appear as the Princess Cordelia Sanzio. The cast has been chosen with great care, it is said, and consists of many well known screen players.

The role of Harry Althrop is interpreted by Elliott Dexter, well known to Paramount patrons, while Count Rudolph Frizl is portrayed by Alan Hale. Among other prominent actors who appear are Edward Fielding, Mildred Conselman, Hallen Mostyn, James Laffey, Pierre De Matteis and Peter Barbier.

Emile Chautard, who directed the production, is known internationally. He has directed, among others, Vivian Martin, Alice Brady and Kitty Gordon. The story was written by Mme. Fred de Gressac and Eve Unsell prepared the scenario.

Mme. Cavalieri was born in Rome, where appropriately enough many of the scenes in her first Paramount picture are laid. From comparatively humble beginning she became a celebrity.

Hodkinson Continues Series of Paid Articles

Believes That Men In Industry Should Read Advertisements as Well as News Columns to Keep Up with Business Advance

THE series of signed advertisements by W. W. Hodkinson, which have been appearing in the trade papers for three weeks past, is to be continued for some time, according to information from the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at 527 Fifth avenue. Mr. Hodkinson's idea in putting out, over his signature, his views of the industry was explained last week, when he discussed the relationship of motion pictures and advertising.

"I find that the advertising pages of the trade papers—those of national standing in particular—distinctly a place where we all say the thing we want to say, without restrictions, and virtually over our own signatures," said Mr. Hodkinson. "To a certain extent this is true of all advertising, but to no such degree as in the motion picture weeklies, where it is as important to read the advertisements if you would keep up with the business as it is to read the editorial and news columns.

"This being the condition, I decided that as long as the advertising sections were public platforms I could say my say there as well or better than anywhere else. And as every advertisement is inspired by someone, though his name does not appear, I decided to sign my advertisements, so that there would be no doubt about my meaning what I said.

"Men in the industry have been good enough to say that they were interested in my views on the business and also in the things which I plan in a larger way. Naturally, they look on my distribution plans in the light of what they mean to exhibitors individually, but what I am looking forward to in the business, the things which may mark the future development of the trade, are, these men say, of genuine interest. And just now, at any rate, I am willing to let it go at that.

"I got away from the whole scrambling game last summer and went fishing. I watched from a distance and I have come back with a little clearer vision than I had when I left or than most of my friends have today. The past two weeks I have been laying a groundwork for the men in the business, and particularly the exhibitors who do not know me, so that they will understand the experience on which I base my assertions. From now on I will have some pertinent things to say on conditions which will not only explain fully the reasons for my return to the motion picture business but may throw some light on the works that are back of or are not back of a lot of the big clock faces that the trade is keeping its eyes on with the purpose of reading the true signs of the times."

Chautard Directs Only Clara Kimball Young

Star Was So Well Pleased with Director's Work in "Magda" That His Services Were Clinched by Exclusive Contract

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG and her associates, it was announced by Select Pictures last week, were so well pleased with the work of the French director, Emile Chautard, in the first of Miss Young's Select Pictures, "Magda," that contracts have been signed whereby the screen star secures for herself the exclusive services of Mr. Chautard as director in the future.

Miss Young is now at work on the third of her Select Pictures, "The Marionettes," under Mr. Chautard's direction in the Thanhouser studio at New Rochelle.

Emile Chautard first directed Clara Kimball Young in "Magda"; then, owing to a prior contract, he was obliged to leave Miss Young's company in order to direct the making of "The Eternal Temptress," in which Lina Cavalieri is starred. As soon as this picture was finished, however, he returned to Miss Young for work on "The Marionettes," and now has signed to become her permanent director.

Not only Mr. Chautard's directing, but also the camera work shown in "Magda" has been praised by many who have seen the picture, it is said. Jacques Biguel is the photographer who was responsible for this camera work, and he has returned to the Clara Kimball Young Company with Mr. Chautard. Mr. Biguel, it is claimed, photographs Miss Young in a manner particularly suited to bring out the texture for which her screen portraits have become known. "The Marionettes" is now in the third week of its work, and is said to be rounded into shape.

War Melody Is Recalled by Feature, "Mother"

"Just Break the News to Mother" Suggests Itself to Exhibitor When He Sees Picture, and Song May Be Used as Accompaniment

APPARENTLY echoes of a song which stirred the United States during the last war crisis through which this country passed have been reawakened by the film production of "Mother," the six-part George Loane Tucker feature starring Elisabeth Risdon.

McClure Pictures, which organization is at present disposing of territorial rights for the feature, were in receipt of the following letter a few days ago: "Gentlemen: Nothing has appealed to me so strongly in the moving picture world as your production of 'Mother,' starring Elisabeth Risdon.

"Have you in connection with this feature the war song on slides 'Just Break the News to Mother'? At the present crisis this combination of song and story should prove a sensation.

"Yours very truly,
"M. G. KIRKMAN, Mgr.,
"Strand Theatre, Hays, Kansas."

The suggestion contained in the communication has been taken under consideration by the McClure Pictures executives and the strong sentimental interest attached to the inquiry may lead to arrangements being made, if possible, for a reissue of the old war tune on slides to accompany the showing of "Mother."

"Just Break the News to Mother" swept the United States during the struggle between this country and Spain, and the beautiful idea of mother-love expressed in the former war-time melody parallels most closely the dominating theme of the McClure production "Mother."

Since the outbreak of hostilities with Germany "Just Break the News to Mother" has been republished in song form and bids fair to outrival the present day crop of war songs.

Jewel Gets Telegram Lauding a Patriotic Picture

That the people of the West Coast are strong for pictures containing a patriotic appeal, is indicated in the following telegram from W. W. Whitson, manager of the Plaza theatre, in San Diego, who, on commenting on the success of Jewel productions in his house said: "It may interest you to know that "The Man Without a Country" has played to the most profitable week's business the Plaza theatre has ever known under the present management and has twice broken house records for attendance and receipts. It has been the film sensation of the city and the dear old Plaza has topped them all for the entire week."

Christie Hollywood Plant Not Leased to King-Bee

A general denial that the Christie plant in Hollywood has been leased to the King-Bee Company, making Billy West comedies, was made last week by General Manager Charles Christie. When the King-Bee organization came to California it was the intention to lease stage space at the Christie studio, but they found it to their advantage to take a separate studio, and so are now busy with their first Western-made subject at the Yorke-Metro studio, a few blocks distant, in Hollywood.

Director Leonard Races Feature for Drafted Actor

While creating Mae Murray's second Bluebird, to be released December 24, under the title of "Face Value," an exciting and unique race against an issue that could not be avoided was successfully accomplished by Director Robert Leonard and his company of players and Wheeler Oakman, the leading man, in particular. Director Leonard was trying to keep ahead of the selective draft.

Mr. Oakman had put in four weeks' work on "Face Value" when he was notified to hold himself in readiness to join Uncle Sam's forces at a moment's notice. Under ordinary conditions it would take two weeks more to finish the production, and when Mr. Oakman got his "red card" a very delicate problem confronted Director Leonard.

Director Leonard decided to take a desperate chance to save the situation and investment. Working night and day, sleeping and eating only while he was waiting for new sets to be finished, the director sidetracked everything else to secure Oakman's scenes. The other members of the company had to be within call at all times so that there would be no delay when action came that rquired their appearance with the leading man. Everybody pitched in and helped. At two o'clock one morning an intruder at the studio might have seen Director Leonard pushing a grand piano the entire length of the big stage, while Oakman and Casson Ferguson, one of the players in "Face Value," laid rugs and arranged furniture on the sets and Miss Murray herself, at the top of a step-ladder, hung pictures on the walls.

"France in Arms" Goes Strong in Pathe Exchanges

"France in Arms," the five-reel Pathe special which was made by the Cinematograph Division of the French government, not only has received good reviews, but is being booked by many of the leading theatres of the country, it is announced.

The Pathe Los Angeles Office wired that the Plaza at San Diego has booked the picture for seven days, and the Alhambra of Los Angeles for the same length of time. Other Western theatres booking it are the Princess in Denver for four days, and Rothe's New California in San Francisco.

Bluebird Features Continue at Broadway Theatre

Bluebird will continue to provide attractions at the Broadway theatre, New York, where three subjects from that program have already been shown. This week's attraction, finishing November 24, is "The Door Between," a five-reeler created from Samuel Merwin's novel, "Anthony the Absolute." Ruth Clifford is the star in this Rupert Julian Bluebird, with Monroe Salisbury featured as Anthony. The regular program date for distributing "The Door Between" will be December 10. During the past week Franklyn Farnum made his first appearance at the Broadway in "The Winged Mystery."

John Emerson and Anita Loos Visit New York

Now Working on the Script and Making Arrangements for Next Douglas Fairbanks Picture—Expect to Uncover New Idea

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos, director and scenario writer, respectively, for Douglas Fairbanks, arrived in New York last week from California, and have been spending much of their time at the headquarters of Artcraft.

Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos are working on the script and making arrangements for the production of the next Fairbanks picture to follow "D'Artagnan of Kansas," now being filmed at Grand Canyon, Ariz., under the direction of Allan Dwan. This is in accordance with the new Fairbanks production plan whereby one director prepares the next play while the other is being made so that no time will be lost between pictures.

At the Artcraft headquarters Mr. Emerson announced a novel idea affecting the new picture. "We will stage this photoplay in six different cities, which means that the entire company will travel from coast to coast enacting the play in six representative locales of the United States. The idea of the story is a particularly novel one but I am not in a position to go into further details at this time.

"Miss Loos and I are at present making arrangements for the production of this picture in the various cities and are working out the details of the script so that there will be no delay in starting work, when the present film is completed.

"We are also looking about for ideas for new stories. We are not anxious to get scripts—our scenario department will attend to that—but are seeking novel ideas for photoplays. No one outside of our organization can develop a story in the manner we treat it. Our method is entirely different from that of any other organization and a person is wasting time trying to lay out a series of situations for Douglas Fairbanks, but if he will just devote his time to creating the basic idea for an original plot, our staff will attend to the rest. Douglas Fairbanks' stories must be different from any now being shown."

Work of Forest Rangers in Universal Release

Is First Film Under New Contract with U. S. Agricultural Department, and Is Scheduled for Initial Showing November 29

THE first release under the new contract between the Department of Agriculture of the United States of America and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, by the terms of which Universal secured the exclusive rights to film and present pictures showing the activities of the department, will be made on November 29 in the Universal Screen Magazine, under the title of "The Work of the Forest Rangers," it was announced last week.

Speaking of this latest addition to the numerous phases of the industry conducted by Universal, Carl Laemmle, is president, said: "There are two things that especially please us in undertaking this new work—one is the broad educational value that cannot fail to inhere in the presentation to the people of the country of pictures of the great work the Department of Agriculture is doing for them, and the second is our natural gratification at the recognition by the National Government of Universal as a medium through which to make this work fully known to the people.

"The Government has from forty to fifty thousand feet of negative films, which by this agreement are placed at our exclusive disposal for motion picture purposes. The films we will first release show the work the National Forest Service is doing. In the pictures will be seen the forest rangers hunting down predatory animals, stringing telephone wires in a national forest, making trails and building bridges, on posts at lookout stations, marking trees that are to be cut down and sold for timber, planting trees that are to replace them, placing fish in streams, and all the other activities of the daily life and work of the ranger. Then there are views of cattle and sheep grazing in the forest, of the homesteads built there, of miners at work, of reservoirs to supply irrigation to neighboring farmers, of hydro-electric developments. There are more than one hundred and fifty million acres of land in the national forests and the pictures showing those forests and the life within them will be a revelation to the people of this and other countries who see them.

"Under the terms of our agreement with the Government, Universal will distribute its films through all its exchanges in this country and Europe, in the Philippines, in South America, in India, China, Japan—all over the world."

Mary Pickford Feature Causes Ripples of Delight at Strand, While Elsie Ferguson's Strong Acting Pleases at Rialto

ARTCRAFT PICTURES were the big attractions at New York's two leading Broadway motion picture theatres last week—the Strand and the Rialto. At the former Mary Pickford in "The Little Princess" drew big crowds that came out apparently well satisfied that the little princess of the curls is still leading the field in her particular branch of motion picture endeavor, and at the Rialto Elsie Ferguson, in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," attracted long lines of waiting patrons in front of the box-office, and these same theatre-goers later remarked audibly and to themselves that Miss Ferguson's acting was among the best they had ever seen either on the screen or in the legitimate theatre. Even the critics agree that Miss Ferguson in her second Artcraft picture has created a character, Jennie Cushing, that is well nigh perfect.

The two Artcraft offerings were similar in many respects, not only as far as their drawing power was concerned but in the productions themselves. Both plays were adapted from well known books. The consensus of opinion was that these two subjects were the best pictures of each star. Both photoplays were produced at the same time, "The Little Princess" on the West Coast under the direction of Marshall Neilan and "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" at the Fort Lee plant by Maurice Tourneur. Both film plays were taken from books by women authors, the original Pickford story having been written by Frances Hodgson Burnett and the Ferguson subject by Mary S. Watts.

Both theatres reported good business and many particularly favorable comments were accorded the pictures by New York critics. The New York Tribune in its review of "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," said: "Evidently those who saw the picture in the afternoon sent all of their friends to see it in the evening for unless you knew the pass word it was impossible to get within a block of the theatre. As Jennie Cushing, Elsie Ferguson does one of the best things that ever has been done in the drama, either silent or spoken."

Of Mary Pickford's film, the Herald said: "It is one of the best productions Miss Pickford has had, being well balanced with pretty comedy and pathetic little touches of girl-hood." Other reviews were to the same effect.

Tooker Appears in Cast with Bushman and Bayne

William H. Tooker, widely known for his screen portrayals, will play the role of Patrick Connolly in support of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, in their new Metro production, "Red, White and Blue Blood," under the direction of Charles J. Brabin, it is announced. The picture was adapted by June Mathis from the story of Shannon Fife.

Mr. Tooker has just completed his work in the role of Michael Ford in "Alias Mrs. Jessop," starring Emily Stevens. In the Stevens picture he played the father of Lillian Ford and the uncle of Janet Ford, both of the last-named characters being portrayed by Miss Stevens.

Lumsden Hare Engaged for Madame Petrova Productions

Madame Petrova announced last week, through her publicity department, that a contract has been made between the Petrova Picture Company and Lumsden Hare, the English player, whereby the latter will appear in the forthcoming productions of the Petrova company.

Already, it is announced, Mr. Hare is playing one of the leading roles in the second starring vehicle now in course of production at the Petrova studios under the direction of Larry Trimble.

The latest addition to the carefully selected cast supporting Madame Petrova has been internationally prominent for many years as a producer and actor. He founded the Pastoral Amphitheatre at Ranelagh, England, which was the forerunner of the famous English country clubs and for two years Mr. Hare produced all of the pastoral plays, which obtained a wide vogue in Great Britain. He has also appeared on the other side in the stage productions of Granville Barker, Cyril Maude and Sir Arthur Collins.

At the instigation of Charles Frohman, Mr. Hare came to this country to play opposite Ethel Barrymore and during his two years here, has appeared with John Drew, Maude Adams, Billie Burke, and a host of American stage artists.

His debut in the shadow world was made with Kitty Gordon in "As in a Looking Glass," and since then has become familiar to picture patrons throughout the country by reason of his many characterizations for the World Film, Pathe, Famous Players and others.

While appearing opposite Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep," Mr. Hare attracted the personal attention of Madame Petrova and his present appearance in the supporting cast of the second Petrova picture was the result. He depicts the part of Clinton Durand, a wealthy clubman and the husband of Madame Petrova.

Pickford and Huff Again Co-Star for Paramount

It was announced last week by Famous Players-Lasky that William D. Taylor, having finished the direction of a new picture starring Jack Pickford, and to be released in the near future by Paramount, is busily engaged in preparing a production wherein Jack Pickford and Louise Huff will again co-star. It is said to be an adaptation from a well known novel and play, and that it was the author himself who suggested that Mr. Pickford and Miss Huff would be the ideal combination for the leading roles.

Naval Recruits See Presentation of "The Slacker"

Election Day was celebrated by the men in training at the Naval Training Station, Pelham Bay, by attendance at a special exhibition of "The Slacker," arranged by the Drama League of America through the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The use of the film was contributed by the Metro Company.

Paramount Serial Credits Measure of Success to Title

A goodly portion of the success of "Who Is Number One?" the new Paramount serial starring Kathleen Clifford, is said by Paramount to be due to the unusual title given the Anna Katherine Green story.

It is the opinion that unless the title is strong and easy to remember, and stimulates the imagination, the advertising must necessarily be weak. "Who Is Number One?" according to Paramount's reports of communications from exhibitors, has every necessary quality for advertising. It is said that exhibitors have recognized the value of the title and have taken advantage of it. In this connection Paramount cites the case of Wm. O. Hare, the exhibtor of Des Moines, who, on the first day of the serial played to capacity all day and turned several hundred away at night.

Also, it is announced, a large number of exhibitors have used the season ticket idea in connection with "Who Is Number One?" and have sold tickets, at a reduced rate, good for the entire fifteen weeks' run of the picture. It is said the exhibitors and the patrons who have bought these tickets are greatly interested in the latest twist in the war tax relating to admission to theatres. Tickets bought before November 1 are not subject to the tax, even though they are good for performances on or after the date the tax went into effect, is Paramount's opinion, but an effort is now being made to have this reversed and the outcome is being watched with keen interest by many exhibitors who find themselves similarly situated.

Markova Has Russian Type Role in New Film

Madam Markova, the William Fox star, whose most recent release was called "The Painted Madonna," has the role of a Russian girl who is the guest of her uncle, the Russian ambassador to the United States, in her second starring feature for Fox.

Although the cast is not complete, the principal members of the company are working in Massachusetts on the sea scenes essential to the picture. These include David Herblin, who also was in Madam Markova's first picture; Eric Mayne, Bradley Barker, Stanley Heck, Wu-Soy-Fa and Charlie Fang.

Walthall's First Paralta Play Being Assembled

The final scenes of Henry B. Walthall's initial Paralta play, "His Robe of Honor," have been taken in Hollywood, and the final details of assembling and cutting are being finished with all possible dispatch. In order to prepare this production for an early shipment to New York, orders have been issued by Robert Brunton, manager of productions, to give it precedence over all other work in the cutting and assembling rooms. It is expected that the final work of preparing the production will be completed this week and that the picture will be on its way to the New York office of Paralta plays ready for screening.

Director Walsh with Goldwyn—Tucker Directs Normand

Raoul A. Walsh, Who Has Been Engaged to Direct Goldwyn Productions

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation last week announced the acquisition of a new director to its already efficient staff, and the re-engaging for a new production of a director who recently finished a Goldwyn production for early release. The latter is George Loane Tucker and the former is R. A. Walsh, well known for his recent Fox features.

Raoul A. Walsh, it is announced, joins the Goldwyn organization in December, having signed a contract with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, last week. At the expiration of his now expiring contract with William Fox, Walsh will immediately, according to plans, begin work on a production which Goldwyn will hold pending his advent into its ranks.

Among productions which Walsh has directed are "The Honor System," "The Serpent," with Theda Bara; "Regeneration," "The Innocent Sinner" and "Betrayed."

George Loane Tucker, Goldwyn has announced, has been engaged, immediately following the completion of "The Cinderella Man," in which he directed Mae Marsh for Goldwyn, to direct Mabel Normand's second Goldwyn production, work on which is expected to start at once. Its title and the make-up of the cast have not been announced.

"The Cinderella Man" is a Christmas story timed for the holiday season.

National Film Prepares Multiple-Reel Subject

"Tarzan of the Apes" Expected to Be Excellent Production, Featuring Elmo Lincoln—May Be Ready Early in December

A VERY excellent production is expected from the studios of the National Film Corporation of America, which has for the past several months been busy in the making of a multiple reel subject, "Tarzan of the Apes," adapted from the novel and newspaper serial of the same title, for General Manager William Parsons has selected some of the best known and capable players of the West Coast screen colony for the leading roles.

Elmo Lincoln, who played the featured part opposite Mae Marsh in "Her Shattered Idol," together with a number of other successes from the Fine Arts Studio, will be seen in the coming release in the title role, that of Tarzan, the ape man. The story relates to a baby being kidnapped by a mother ape whose baby had been killed by hunters. This child is reared to manhood in the jungles of Africa, and it is in the later period that the greater portion of the picture is laid.

The supporting cast includes such well-known motion picture players as Thomas Jefferson, True Boardman, who has just completed a title role part for a Lois Weber production, and prior to that featured in the two Kalem "Stingaree" series; Enid Markey, late star of Fox West Coast studios, takes the leading feminine role, and Kathleen Kirkham, who was featured in the "Eyes of the World" and other subjects, is to be seen in a principal supporting part. Director Scott Sidney, who has been in charge of the production, is a former Ince director, where he served for three years. Later he was with Morosco, and Pallas for one year, where he made some very excellent Paramount subjects.

It is expected now that the eight or nine-reel film will be ready for the market early in December, all but a few of the scenes having been made, and the organization has been editing the subject as it was produced.

Peggy Hyland Completes New Feature at Astra Studios

AN announcement from the Pathe Exchange, Inc., last week carried the information that Peggy Hyland has completed a five-reel feature at the Astra Studios, an adaptation of the A. H. Woods stage production called "The Other Woman."

The production was under the supervision of Albert Parker, a new Astra director, and it is expected to prove one of the best five-reelers yet made by that company.

The leading man of the feature is Milton Sills, who played opposite Irene Castle in "Patria." Others in the cast are Anna Lehr and William Parke, Jr.

It is understood that this picture will be characterized by an entirely new system of lighting and photographic work and other novel ideas, which have been carefully worked out. Two studios have been used in making it in order to obtain the desired effects.

Peggy Hyland in "The Other Woman" will, it is reported, be seen on the Gold Rooster feature program. The other Gold Rooster stars are at present Gladys Hulette and Baby Marie Osborn.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Jane and Katherine Lee, in "Trouble Makers," Their Newest Fox Picture, Create Much Merriment by Hiding Under a Church Pew, a la Dishabille. Francis Carpenter, Another Fox Kiddie Star, is Perfectly at Home in His Role in "Treasure Island"

Fox Picks Specials for the Holiday Season

Release Dates of Several Productions Advanced for Showing During Usual Dull Period—Kiddie Features Are Included

ACCORDING to William Fox, exhibitors who believe in making the most of every opportunity are responsible for the selection by the Fox Film Corporation of what are declared to be especially appropriate pictures for holiday season programs.

"We have had a large number of letters from exhibitors," Mr. Fox explained, "saying they want to appeal to the children of all ages, which includes adults, during the Christmas vacation of the schools. 'We ought to have an opportunity for as liberal selection as possible of high grade, wholesome featurtes,' is the way the appeal was stated, 'and of course the pictures ought to be of the sort which will prove equally entertaining to adults.'"

The Fox answer to this was a decision to push ahead the release dates of a number of productions which otherwise probably would not have been available to exhibitors until after the first of the year. "The Babes in the Woods" and "Treasure Island," featuring Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin; "A Daughter of the Gods," the fairy story in which Annette Kellermann is starred, and "Troublemakers," of which Jane and Katherine Lee are the principal characters, all were brought forward for pre-Christmas booking. In addition to these are two previous releases, "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," Carpenter-Corbin features.

"We never have offered a better selection of pictures for holiday week showing," said Mr. Fox. "These pictures, except that of Miss Kellermann, are a development of the present year in the motion picture industry. Their appeal, of course, primarily is to adults, but they have demonstrated they possess the quality of interesting children far more strongly than any series of photoplays ever previously released by us. They are elaborate productions, the equivalent in this respect of the best obtainable today, and yet they are developed along lines so definited, direct and forceful—their stories are so realistically told—that interest in them becomes rather a matter of ability to see than of age. Their appeal is as broad as human nature."

"A Branded Soul" Parallels Old Country Incident

A picture that is said to parallel an incident that occurred in Rome nearly two thousand years ago with one of today in a quaint old Mexican village is the Fox Special Feature release for November 25. The title of the play, which is derived from one of the strongest scenes, is "A Branded Soul," and the star is Gladys Brockwell.

Miss Brockwell is supported by a cast including Colin Chase, who was cast in "Conscience;" Vivian Rich, who played in "The Price of Silence;" Willard Louis, who has been in eighteen Fox productions, including "The Scarlet Pimpernel," "American Methods," "A Tale of Two Cities," "The Island of Desire" and "High Finance," and Lewis J. Cody, Gloria Payton, Fred Whitman and Barney Furey, who are making their first appearances in a Fox company.

The story is by E. Lloyd Sheldon, the scenario by Franklyn Hall and the photography by Charles Kaufman. Bertram Bracken is the director, this being his sixth Fox picture.

Irene Castle Feature Released December 16

Irene Castle, in a drama of society and high finance, is the Pathe Plays release announced for the week of December 16. The title is "Vengeance is Mine," scenario by Howard Irving Young from the novel of John A. Moroso, directed by Frank Crane. This is the fourth of the series of Castle-Pathe Plays, complete in five reels. The others are: "The Mark of Cain," a murder mystery by Carolyn Wells, directed by George Fitzmaurice with Antonio Moreno; "Stranded in Arcady," a story of adventure in the North Woods by Francis Lynde, directed by Frank Crane, and "Sylvia of the Secret Service."

Title Sounds Like Good Picture

It was announced last week from the William Fox offices that George Walsh's next production will be issued by William Fox under the title of "The Pride of New York."

If the production lives up to its title, as all Fox features are wont to do, it is predicted it will be another winner for the smiling star.

Pathe Productions Thick in Minneapolis Houses

In Minneapolis five downtown first-run theatres showed Pathe productions week before last. "Under the Stars and Stripes" showed at the New Lyric. Manager Calvert of the New Garrick used the three-reel picture, "In the Wake of the Huns," while other Pathes played the New Astor, New Grand and the New Palace theatres. The Castle pictures have been booked for the New Aster.

Frank Phelps of the New Palace, Superior, Wisconsin, has also booked the Castle pictures, as has Tom Furniss of the Rex, Duluth. Mr. Furniss has also contracted with Harry (Pathe) Buxbaum for the Russian Art Films.

Louise Fazenda's Newest Comedy Is Released

Louise Fazenda, whose skill in comedy work displayed itself admirably when she was with Triangle, made her Paramount-Mack Sennett debut on the screen in "Are Waitresses Safe?" November 18, when the picture was released by Paramount, and proceeded to chalk up another success for herself. The comedy, directed by Victor Heerman and supervised by Mack Sennett, includes in its cast Ben Turpin, Slim Summerville, a canine "actor" and a feline for the part opposite.

Coincidental with the release of the new Louise Fazenda fun-maker, it was announced that the first of the Paramount-Arbuckle comedies to be made in California, entitled "A Country Hero," is well on its way, and promises to be one of the best two-reelers Arbuckle has made.

"Who Goes There?" Released by Vitagraph November 26

"Who Goes There," a Greater Vitagraph feature starring Harry Morey, with Corinne Griffith, is announced for release November 26 by Albert E. Smith, president of the company. The play was made from the novel of the same name by Robert W. Chambers, and was produced under the direction of William P. S. Earle.

The picture is said to be one of the finest made by Vitagraph during the last year. The story is claimed to be an exceptionally strong one, the stars are box-office attractions and the direction is said to be fully up to the standard set by Mr. Earle in his productions of "Within the Law," "Mary Jane's Pa," and other big productions.

The story is laid in Belgium at the time of the German invasion and the role of Kervyn Guild is said to afford Harry Morey one of the finest opportunities of his career. Miss Griffith, as Karen Girard, a spy's courier, has an appealing role and her work is declared to be equal to the best she has ever done.

Vitagraph lavished money on the production and the feature is said to be remarkable for the extraordinary number of fine exterior scenes. One of the striking incidents is the destruction at night of a battleship attacked by a U-Boat. The shipboard scenes were made on the steamship Christianaford, which was wrecked a few days later after it sailed from New York.

The play is the third which Vitagraph has made from stories by Robert W. Chambers, the others being "The Girl Philippa," and "The Fettered Woman." Vitagraph has the exclusive film rights to the works of Chambers and has another big picture, adapted from "Between Friends" in production now.

Salisbury and Vale Stars in "Zollenstein"

Vola Vale and Monroe Salisbury are the featured players in "Zollenstein," the current Falcon Feature released through General Film, and which is an adaptation of W. B. Ferguson's story of a contest for the throne of Zollenstein.

"Zollenstein" is announced as the last of the current series of Falcon features released by General Film. In the cast with Salisbury and Vale are Daniel Gilfether, William Edler, Frank Erlanger, Jane Pepperell, Edward Jobson and Leah Gibbs. H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer supervised the making of the feature.

Victor Moore Finds Fun in Knitting Craze

Victor Moore heads a very good cast of comedy players in the Paramount-Klever Komedy, "Nutty Knitters," released November 19. Among the well known players are Dave Don and Peggy Adams. Thomas J. Gray is author of the comedy, which is woven about the knitting craze. Chester M. De Vonde directed it.

Another Paramount comedy release that is said to be meeting with much favor is the current Black Diamond comedy, "A Society Scrimmage," released Nov. 12.

Alma Ruebens Demonstrates Two Forms of Embrace in "The Regenerates," a Triangle Play, in Which She Stars

Unusually Diversified Program for Triangle

Features for November Expected to Round Out One of Most Varied Schedules of That Company in Months—Patriotic Play Included

THE last week of this month is a notable one insofar as Triangle and Triangle productions are concerned.

The Triangle features to be released that week, beginning November 25, are expected to round out one of the most diversified programs which has been put out by that company in several months.

Following the military drama, "Fighting Back," with William Desmond and Claire McDowell; "Up or Down?", the comedy-drama featuring George Hernandez; Roy Stewart's Western, "The Medicine Man"; "Indiscreet Corinne," Olive Thomas' fourth photoplay; the prohibition story of "A Case at Law," and "The Fuel of Life," in which Belle Bennett is a vampire, "The Regenerates" and "For Valour" are expected to pull big business when they are released November 25.

Walt Whitman, who scored in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," with Alma Rubens in the title role, will again star with Miss Rubens in "The Regenerates." The new play is said to give him a wide range for the intensive character work which has been so favorably received. In the supporting cast with Miss Rubens are Pauline Starke, Darrel Foss, John Lince, and a well-balanced company of Triangle players. The picture was directed by E. Mason Hopper.

"For Valour," the second release of the week, gives Winifred Allen a vehicle which is said to be splendidly adapted to that young lady's talent. It is a timely story of the war, but does not draw on the grim and sordid aspects of the conflict for its theme. Henry Weaver, who had the parts of Simonides in "Ben Hur" and the public prosecutor in "The Only Way," on the legitimate stage, appears in "For Valour," as Miss Allen's father. Allan Dwan supervised the production. In connection with the showing of this picture at first run houses, the Publicity Department of Triangle is sending out a very comprehensive promotion plan designed to make this an "Allies Week" at Triangle houses.

A meal ticket starts Paddy McGuire on his merry way in the Triangle-Keystone comedy for that week, "Won by a Fowl." Peggy Pearce, as the jealous wife, and Claire Anderson, Chef Baldy Belmont's waitress sweetheart, are among the girls who assist Fritz Schade in his adventures as boss of the cafe. William Beaudine directed the comedy.

"A False Alarm" and "A Tough Turkey Trot" will also be released on the regular program of November 25 as one-reel Triangle Komedies.

Goldwyn Furnishes Stimulus for Fading Year

Has Four of Own Features to Coax Crowds to Box Office, and Is Distributing Three Specials That Promise Good Returns

Seldom Does the Photographer Catch Three Such Celebrities as Geraldine Farrar, Samuel Goldfish and Mary Garden in the Same Group

GOOD pictures, according to Goldwyn's receipt for ailing business in picture theatres, are the cure-alls for either loss of interest or streaks of frugality. Give them good pictures and it is sure to stop picture devotees from counting the pennies, is Goldwyn's belief.

In this respect, it appears that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is fortunate at this season of the year, and at this particular moment, in having as its next four releases pictures of accented strength and appeal. And, in between its four productions of its own Goldwyn is offering to exhibitors the privilege to book in the open market three special productions, the distribution of which it controls.

The following are Goldwyn's own releases: Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn, released November 18; Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne, to be released December 2; Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter, for release December 16, and Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France, scheduled for release December 30.

The special productions, now announced as ready for distribution, are George Loane Tucker's "The Manxman"; Ira M. Lowry's "For the Freedom of the World," and Rex Beach's "The Auction Block." In addition it is announced the second comedy in the series made by Marie Dressler, as "Tillie," will be released December 2 under the title of "Fired."

Mabel Normand's return to the screen after a year's absence promises to be an event in filmland and surely one that will give audiences something new to talk about. The popularity of Miss Normand has apparently increased and Goldwyn thinks there are millions of persons ready to welcome her back when she makes her reappearance in the patriotic comedy-drama, "Joan of Plattsburg."

"The Cinderella Man" is claimed to be beyond question the best and most beautiful Mae Marsh picture ever produced, and being released as a Christmas offering its popularity should be tremendous.

Of course, the screen debut of Mary Garden in "Thais" on December 30 is expected to be one of the big events of the year in motion picture affairs.

Butterfly Schedules Its Releases for January

"The High Sign," Featuring Brownie Vernon and Herbert Rawlinson, Leads Off New Year—Louise Lovely Feature Next

ARRANGEMENTS for Butterfly productions in the first month of the new year have been made by Universal. Nearly all of Butterfly's galaxy of stars will be found in the line-up, either late in December or in January bills. Ella Hall, Harry Carey, Louise Lovely, Molly Malone and Little Zoe Rae now comprise the fixed stars of Butterfly, but in the following arrangements there are some features that were made at Universal City previous to the new alignment of principal players—hence the presentation of Herbert Rawlinson, Grace Cunard, Brownie Vernon and Jack Mulhall in some of these.

For New Year's week, starting December 31, "The High Sign," featuring Brownie Vernon and Herbert Rawlinson will be the Butterfly. The story was written by J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young and the production was made by Elmer Clifton.

January 7 brings Louise Lovely in "The Wolf and His Mate," directed by Edward J. Le Saint from Doris Schroder's scenario of Julia Maier's story. Hart Hoxie and Betty Schade will be featured in Miss Lovely's support. The January 14 Butterfly will be "Hell's Crater," featuring Grace Cunard, with Ray Hanford and Eileen Sedgwick also appearing in vital roles.

"Madam Spy," on January 21 will have Jack Mulhall featured in a story by Lee Morrison prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. The production was directed by Douglas Gerrard. Featured in supporting roles will be Donna Drew and Claire Du Brey.

Louise Lovely will complete the month's schedule with presentations of "Painted Lips," made from Charles Kenyon's scenario by Edward J. Le Saint. In Miss Lovely's support Alfred Allen and Betty Schade will have leading roles.

Klever Pictures Now Presents Victor Moore as a Knitter

Klever Pictures, Inc., released on November 19 Thomas J. Gray's newest comedy "Nutty Knitters," featuring Victor Moore. The subject was directed by Chester M. DeVonde.

The story goes: Vic goes to see his sweetheart's father to ask for her hand, and the old man tells him he is patriotic and that if Vic will knit fifty sweaters, he can call around again. Vic agrees to do this and off he goes. In the meantime his sweetheart's father phones to a detective agency, to trail Vic, and be sure he knits the sweaters himself, and does not buy them. Vic gets his knitting things and starts for home trailed by the detective. He drops his ball of wool upon entering his flat, which serves as a clue for the detective. The detective follows the trail of wool, which leads to Vic's apartment, where he finds the door locked, but he can hear Vic on the inside. Unable to get in, he lights the trail of the wool, which runs under the door, and then dashes off downstairs. Vic in the meantime is busy inside knitting on an old-fashioned loom. It is not long before he realizes that something is burning, and before he can do anything, his whole room is afire. He rushes downstairs to the fire house, where the firemen are all busy knitting and entreats them to come to his house to put the fire out. They refuse and kick him out. He rushes to the police station, where the policemen are also busy knitting. He also entreats them to come and "arrest" the fire, and they also kick him out. He starts down the street dejected and feeling that the opportunity to win his sweetheart is lost, when a truck passing down the street, drops a case off it, it breaks open and a lot of sweaters fall out of it. Vic seeing this rushes over to it, and picks up the sweaters feeling that they surely must have fallen from heaven. By this time the truck driver has discovered his loss, and starts back after his sweaters. Vic seeing this grabs up the sweaters and runs for his dear life, with the truckman and police after him. Vic makes straight for his sweetheart's house and rushing in with the armful of sweaters, asks the father to give him the "bless you my children." By this time the truckman and the police have reached the house and rushing in, make for Vic. Before anything can be done, Vic is hauled off to the lock-up, and for the finish we see him knitting his head off behind the bars.

Much Fun Promised in Third Sub-Deb Story

What the French describe as "contretemps," according to Famous Players-Lasky, render the forthcoming "Bab's Matinee Idol," the Marguerite Clark Paramount picture scheduled for release November 26, highly diverting and full of laughs. This third comedy in the sub-deb series is claimed to be the most laughable as well as the daintiest of the trio.

J. Searle Dawley directed the three sub-deb pictures with Miss Clark as star: "Bab's Diary," "Bab's Burglar" and "Bab's Matinee Idol."

Fox December Special Features Present Women Stars

All of the releases of William Fox Special Features during December will feature women stars it was announced last week, the same feminine stars appearing as in the 52-a-year pictures for November, except that a new star, Jewel Carmen, is scheduled to replace the new Russian star, Madam Sonia Markova.

As last month, the first picture will be June Caprice feature. She was last presented in "Miss U. S. A.". Dec. 9 will bring her back in "Unknown 274," the title being the tag number of a foundling in an orphan asylum. The action hinges around the life and identification of the girl, her restoration to her father finally being effected through the latter's recognition of the tone of a violin which he played in his younger days.

Miss Carmen's debut as a star will be made Dec. 16 in "A Soul for Sale," a Western mining camp story, in which the heroine sells herself for $6,000 to raise money for her brother, and is "bought" by a minister who is interested at first only for humanitarian and moral reasons, but who eventually develops a much more personal interest in his purchase. The drama is said to be rich in emotional opportunities.

The two other December releases have been completed but not titled. One, Dec. 23, will be a Virginia Pearson picture, and the other, to be available Dec. 30, will feature Gladys Brockwell.

Triangle Releases Seven-Reel Feature on Program

"Because of the Woman," which has been completed by Triangle on the Coast, under the direction of Jack Conway, will be the first seven-reel feature released on the regular program under the new Triangle regime, as announced in September. Belle Bennett has the leading role, with Jack Livingston opposite her.

Irene Castle Production Released Next Week

Is on Pathe Program Also Scheduled to Include First Episode of "The Hidden Hand"—Harold Lloyd Comedy Also in Line-Up

IRENE CASTLE, in what Pathe describes as a fast action photoplay, produced under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, the first episodes of "The Hidden Hand" serial, another chapter of "The Seven Pearls," and a Harold Lloyd comedy are among the features of Pathe's line-up for the week of November 25, it was announced this week.

Irene Castle is to be presented in "Sylvia of the Secret Service," a Pathe Plays special in five reels, produced by Astra, directed by George Fitzmaurice, scenario by Philip Bartholomae; from the story by Joseph Trant. The picture is announced as a detective play characterized by more thrills and fast action than any yet of the Irene Castle-Pathe Plays. In it the star has a part that is said gives her greater opportunity than any she has had before, either in "Stranded in Arcady" or "The Mark of Cain."

The first chapter of "The Hidden Hand" is entitled "The Gauntlet of Death." It stars Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton.

Mollie King is starred in "The Seven Pearls," No. 11, entitled "Gems of Jeopardy" with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. The mystery as to Ilma's disappearance is solved in the beginning of this episode when it is learned that Perry Mason, at the point of a revolver, forced her to leave Falenti's home at the end of No. 10.

"All Aboard" is the title of the Harold Lloyd comedy produced by Rolin in one reel. This comedy takes the company aboard a steamer bound for Bermuda and practically all of the farce is staged on the water. Lloyd tries with success to steal the Lady Fair from the "Barren" to whom she has been promised by her unyielding parents.

"Around Central Auvergne" and "Tonic Towns of England" are the split-reel Pathe colored scenic release. The first half shows the picturesque wooded heights of the highest mountains in the interior of France, and the second shows the popular watering place of Harrogate with the Royal Baths, Fontaine and scenes in the quaint town of Knaresborough.

An International Cartoon and Scenic Split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 96 and No. 97 complete this program.

Fairbanks and Hart in New Artcraft Releases

Athletic Comedian Presented November 19 in "Reaching for the Moon," and Hart Feature Is Scheduled for Screen November 26

ARTCRAFT PICTURES is carrying out its carefully laid plans, apparently, and is rounding out what it considers its banner month with Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart attractions, following closely the two productions starring Elsie Ferguson and Mary Pickford in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" and "The Little Princess," respectively. These four features in the same month, each an acknowledged box-office attraction second to none, is probably a record in the motion picture industry, and embrace the largest number of releases for Artcraft since its inception.

The latest Douglas Fairbanks offering was released November 19, and is entitled, "Reaching for the Moon." The story, by Anita Loos and John Emerson, was staged under the direction of the latter. It was for this picture that the entire Fairbanks producing organization crossed the continent to film eight scenes in New York City, after which it returned to California to produce the major part of the photoplay. It is announced that this is the most elaborate Fairbanks picture yet produced and entailed the building of several gigantic sets including a Venetian village, with its picturesque canals and romantic gondolas. The story tells of an American youth who finally realizes his ambition to become a king but soon learns the truth of the saying, "uneasy lies the head that wears the crown." In the cast are Frank Campeau, Eileen Percy, Millard Webb, Eugene Ormonde, Jim Hogan and Keene Thompson.

William S. Hart's second Thomas H. Ince release through Artcraft, "The Silent Man," will be the last November offering, on the 26th. This story is from the pen of Charles Kenyon. The effort of "Silent" Budd Marr, the role portrayed by Hart, to recover a gold mine that has been taken from him by an unscrupulous gambler, with the connivance of a government agent, forms the basis of this story. Staged under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, this production it is promised discloses "Big Bill" in a part that gives him great opportunity to not only display his histrionic talents, but his physical prowess as well. Appearing opposite the star is Vola Vale. Others in the cast are Robert McKim, J. P. Lockney, George P. Nichols, Gertrude Claire, Milton Ross, Dorcas Matthews and Harold Goodwin, a boy actor.

"The Lost Express" Causes Interest to Grow

As the solution of the mysterious disappearance of "The Lost Express" draws nearer interest is said to increase in the chapter play, now being released by Mutual and featuring Helen Holmes.

Chapter XI, "A Fight for a Million," released November 26, possesses, it is said, distinctive features of photography as well as thrills, in that it was staged in the beautiful Yosemite Valley. Miss Holmes enacts a dual role in this episode—bookkeeper as well as the leader of the little army struggling against the villainous syndicate.

Vitagraph Supplies Serial Episode Each Week

"The Fighting Trail," Now at Height of Its Run, and "Vengeance and the Woman" Is Almost Completed—Third Now Is Under Way

PRESIDENT ALBERT E. SMITH, of Greater Vitagraph, in line with an announcement issued from his office recently, last week declared, in an announcement concerning Vitagraph activities, that his company intends to supply exhibitors with a serial episode for every week in the year.

"The Fighting Trail," released in September, is now at the height of its run, and "Vengeance—and the Woman," the next one slated, is nearly completed. A third, the name of which has not been announced, is said to be in preparation, and production is already under way.

"Vengeance—and the Woman," which is scheduled for release in the latter part of December, is the joint work of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It features William Duncan and Carol Holloway, who play the principal roles in "The Fighting Trail," and is being produced under the direction of Mr. Duncan at the company's plant in Hollywood.

"'Vengeance—and the Woman,'" he said, "is the cumulative result of more than two years of study and experimentation in the matter of serial production and I can assure exhibitors that it will be the finest one we ever have sent forth. In the making of our serials, of which 'Vengeance—and the Woman' is the fifth, we have maintained a policy of steady progression. We have striven to make each one better than its predecessor, profiting by our experiences as we went along, and I believe we have been successful in our object.

"In witness of this, I need only point to the records that thousands of exhibitors are setting up with 'The Fighting Trail.' Not only are the bookings setting a new record, but the point that gives me the greatest satisfaction is that exhibitors are doing a volume of business almost unprecedented in serials."

"The Dream Doll" Promises New Delights to Children

According to an announcement from Essanay last week exhibitors who book Essanay's novelty photoplay "The Dream Doll" can promise to their patrons an attraction that will bring new delight to the hearts of the children and evoke wonder and interest in the grown up moviegoers.

"The Dream Doll," released on December 17 on the Perfection Pictures program, is the attainment of Howard S. Moss, who has achieved a means of animating dolls into motion picture actors and actresses.

In "The Dream Doll" Mr. Moss has employed a "stock company" of fourteen-inch actresses, portraying a romance amidst scenery that is said to belie the artificial. Through a patented process, after patient toil of nearly six months, Mr, Moss has portrayed the romance of Ruby and her lover.

Employing the Essanay players, Marguerite Clayton and Rodney LaRocque, to blend the legend of the elixir of life upon which it is built, this picture is said to afford a rare entertainment for theatre patrons.

Mr. Moss wrote his own scenario, directed the production and designed the scenes as well as the characters. His groups of dolls are valued at thousands of dollars, and in most cases were imported and made to order. He was assisted by Charles D. Bennes.

Women Stars Dominate William Fox December Program

All but one of the releases of William Fox Special Features during December will feature women stars, the same actresses appearing as in the 52-a-year pictures for November, except that this month another new star, Jewel Carmen, will replace the Russian star, Madam Sonia Markova.

The first picture, December 2, will be a draft-to-the-trenches war story, "The Pride of New York," with George Walsh battling for love and liberty. June Caprice, who was last seen in "Miss U. S. A.," will return December 9 in "Unknown 274," the title being the tag number of a foundling in an orphan asylum. The action hinges on the life and identitification of the girl, her restoration to her father finally being effected through the latter's recognition of the tone of a violin which he played in his younger days.

Miss Carmen's debut as a star will be made December 16 in "A Soul for Sale," a western mining camp story in which the heroine sells herself for $6,000 to raise money for her brother and is "bought" by a minister who is interested at first only for humanitarian and moral reasons, but who eventually develops a much more personal interest in his purchase. The drama is said to be rich in emotional opportunities.

The two other December releases have been completed, but not titled. One, December 23, will be a Virginia Pearson picture involving an attempt to fasten the theft of a painting on an innocent woman, and the other, to be available December 30, will feature Gladys Brockwell.

Harry Morey, with Corinne Griffith, are features in Vitagraph's "Who Goes There?"

Mae Murray, Bluebird Star, in a Winsome Scene from "Face Value"

Fox to Present William Farnum in Hugo Novel

William Fox, when he caused to be announced last week the screening of "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's novel, with William Farnum in the immortal character of Jean Valjean, delivered a punch that is likely to count for much in the exploitation of the picture by puoting from the Encyclopædia Britannica as follows:

"'Les Miserables,' the greatest epic and dramatic work of fiction ever created or conceived; the epic of a soul transfigured and redeemed; figured by heroism and glorified through suffering; the tragedy and comedy of life at its darkest and its brightest, of humanity at its best and at its worst."

Further in the Fox announcement it is declared "Les Miserables" will be undoubtedly the masterpeice of th Fox Film Corporation. The photoplay, it is said, will follow the story with realistic fidelity.

Mr. Fox entrusted the making of the photoplay to Frank Lloyd, who directed "A Tale of Two Cities" and other productions. In "Les Miserables" Mr. Lloyd is said to have excelled all his past efforts. The feature was made under ideal conditions in New Jorsey, and at a time of the zenith of photoplay production.

Under the heading "General Comment," the National Board of Review said: "In the opinion of those present this picture is an adequate representation of the great book and a fine example of the justice the motion picture can render the classics. The Jean Valjean of William Farnum is a wonderful creative effort."

Minter and Goodrich Star for Mutual Next Week

Presented in Five-Reel Productions Said to Be of Widely Diversified Character — Serial and Comedies Are Also Included

TWO five-reel productions said to be of a widely diversified character are on the Mutual schedule for the week of November 26, and in addition there are slated a chapter of the Mutual-Signal mystery serial, a one-reel Strand comedy, a one-reel Cub comedy and the Mutual Weekly.

The first of the five-reel features stars Mary Miles Minter, and is called "The Mate of the Sally Ann." The picture is a comedy-drama, and will mark Miss Minter's first appearance under the direction of Harry King. "American Maid," starring Edna Goodrich, directed by Albert Capellani, is also released on the same day.

"American Maid" is Miss Goodrich's fourth Mutual production. The story, beginning in a French field hospital in the war zone, changes to the American West and does not depend on a war theme to maintain interest, according to reports.

The Strand Mutual comedy, released November 27, starring Billie Rhodes, is said to be a regular laugh fest. "Tom, Dick and Harry" is a tale of three chums who match wits to win the love of one girl. One brings candy, another flowers and each dopes the other's offerings with dire results to love's sweet progress. A flank attack in the park with a grease gun wings the wrong victim.

"A Fight for a Million," Chapter XI of "The Lost Express," featuring Helen Holmes in her latest Signal-Mutual serial, develops intense situations as the solution of the mystery draws near. Bonner learns of Helen's plans through a stolen message and a pitched battle is precipitated at the mine in which the conspirators are victors.

In "Jerry and the Burglars," the Cub comedy, released November 29, George Ovey is said to get the most out of what is described as a cleverly written sketch. The Mutual Weekly, available Monday, November 26, presents happenings of interest abroad and at home.

World-Brady Releases Ready to End of Year

List Starts November 19 with Ethel Clayton Feature and Closes December 31 with Kitty Gordon in "Diamonds and Pearls"

THE release dates of World-Pictures Brady-Made were last week announced from November 19 to December 31, and include a number of features which look especially attractive to exhibitors, according to reports.

The list is scheduled as follows: November 19, Ethel Clayton in "Easy Money"; November 26, Kitty Gordon in "Her Hour"; December 3, Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly in "The Awakening"; December 10, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Good-For-Nothing"; December 17, June Elvidge in "The Tenth Case"; December 24, Madge Evans and Henry Hull in "The Volunteer"; December 31, Kitty Gordon in "Diamonds and Pearls."

Miss Gordon's early play of this series, "Her Hour," was written by Raymond Schrock and directed by George Cowl, while her second contribution to the list, titled "Diamonds and Pearls," was produced under the direction of George Archainbaud.

For "The Awakening," directed by George Archainbaud, Miss Dorothy Kelly, a very well known screen actress, was specially engaged as co-star with Mr. Love, and she is said to have a role that closely suits her acting capacities.

Mr. Blackwell himself discovered a play suitable to his requirements in "The Good-For-Nothing," and rewrote portions of the story. Mr. Blackwell also directed the making of this photoplay in addition to acting the leading male character. Miss Evelyn Greeley, who is starred with Blackwell in "The Good-For-Nothing," has advanced with great rapidity in the esteem of World-Pictures patrons.

Miss Clayton's most recent picture play, "Easy Money," was written by Gladys E. Johnson and directed by Travers Vale, while George Kelson was the director of Miss Elvidge's screen drama, "The Tenth Case."

"The Volunteer," in which Madge Evans and Henry Hull are co-stars, is from Julia Burnham's story, the scenario having been made by Virginia Tyler Hudson, with the direction in the hands of Harley Knoles.

A formal announcement of World-Pictures Brady-Made to follow the beginning of 1918 may be expected shortly, it is announced.

Universal Changes Release of "The Mystery Ship"

Postponement of the release date of "The Mystery Ship," Universal's latest serial, originally announced for Nov. 19, has been announced as desirable in order that the advance preparations may be entirely completed. An unusual amount of heralding will be applied to "The Mystery Ship," it is said, and the new date of release, now definitely decided upon, will be November 26 in all territories throughout the country. By that time six episodes will have been completed and turned out of the factory ready for distribution.

Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber will be chief adventurers in "The Mystery Ship," with Kingsley Benedict their featured assistant. Elsie Van Name and Duke Worne will also have roles of prominence in the eighteen-chapter serial. Harry Harvey is directing the feature and is making rapid progress toward the final episodes. President Laemmle, of Universal, intends that "The Mystery Ship" shall start upon its voyage better equipped than any serial his organization has ever released.

"The Tenderfoot" Heads Blue Ribbon New List

Is Second of Wolfville Stories, with Carol Holloway and William Duncan Featured—Four Other December Features

"THE TENDERFOOT," another of Alfred Henry Lewis's Wolfville stories, heads the December program of Blue Ribbon features, according to an announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph. This is the second of the Wolfville stories to be released by Greater Vitagraph.

William Duncan, with Carol Holloway, is the star of the feature and he also directed it. This combination appeared in "Dead Shot Baker," the first Wolfville feature, and probably will be used in others to follow.

In addition to the name of Alfred Henry Lewis, those of several other writers appear on the December list of Vitagraph features, they being Frederick Upham Adams, E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

The list as announced by President Smith is as follows: December 3, "The Tenderfoot"; December 10, "The Marriage Speculation," featuring Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald. This play, produced under the direction of Ashley Miller, was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and is said to be an exceptional offering.

December 17, "In the Balance," featuring Earl Williams. This production, an adaptation from E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel, "The Hillman," was made under the direction of Paul Scardon. He has a supporting cast, which includes Grace Darmond, Miriam Miles, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Julia Swayne Gordon, Templer Saxe and Frank Crayne.

December 24, "The Men Are Tempted," featuring Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman. This was adapted from the novel, "John Burt," by Frederick Upham Adams and was produced under the direction of William Wolbert.

December 31, "His Own People," Harry Morey with Gladys Leslie. This is a story of Irish village life and was produced under direction of William P. S. Earle. In it Harry Morey plays the role of a village blacksmith and Miss Leslie plays the part of a little colleen. In addition to the stars, the company includes William Dunn, Arthur Donaldson and Stanley Dunn.

Metro Releases Five Features in December

Ethel Barrymore, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Emily Stevens and Harold Lockwood Are Stars Concerned

METRO plans to bring the year to a close with five strong releases. Slated for appearance during the month of December are productions starring Ethel Barrymore, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Emily Stevens, and Harold Lockwood, the last named beginning and ending the month, being represented by two pictures.

First on the list of December releases is "The Square Deceiver," starring Harold Lockwood. The feature is a picturization of Francis Perry Elliott's story, "Love Me for Myself Alone," carrying out the policy of Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, which produces "The Square Deceiver," transferring popular fiction to the screen. Others in the cast are Dora Mills Adams, Richard L'Estrange and E. P. Sullivan. Fred J. Balshofer adapted and directed the feature. Pauline Curley has the feminine lead.

The December 10 release is "Alias Mrs. Jessop," with Emily Stevens as star. This, too, is a book play. Williams S. Davis directed it, Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted it for the screen and it was produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

On December 17 will be shown for the first time, "God's Outlaw," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne as co-stars. "God's Outlaw" was written and directed by William Christy Cabanne, the man who made 'The Slacker," and who directed the successor to "The Slacker"—"Draft 258."

"An American Widow," with Ethel Barrymore as star, will be the release of December 24. Frank Reicher is directing "An American Widow" and it will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

The final release of the year is "The Avenging Trail," with Harold Lockwood as star. "The Avenging Trail" is a picturization of Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf," a story of the North woods. Mr. Lockwood's role in this production is a distinct contrast to his part in "The Square Deceiver."

The usual number of Drew comedies will be released during the month of December.

"Madam Who" Claimed to Be Remarkable Film

"Madam Who," Bessie Barriscale's forthcoming Paralta picture, is claimed to be one of the most remarkable productions yet announced for consumption of screen audiences. It is said to represent the highest type of directorial skill and thorough coordination of all the details that go to make a picture good.

In discussing reasons for the finished character of the feature, Robert Brunton, director of productions for Paralta, said: "The underlying thought in making this picture has been to attain an excellence in the primary branches of the motion picture art and by the skillful combination of them, produce a picture that stands forth in finish of all technique. This is what we have accomplished with 'Madam Who.' In the first place, the basis of any good picture must be a story that has the merit of dramatic interest. No matter how good a star and the support may be or how able the director may be, no well-rounded picture can be made unless there is a good story to serve as the vehicle for their dramatic and technical skill."

Hearst-Pathe News Has Unusuall Wide Range

The Hearst-Pathe News, No. 91, whic is announced as a current release in new reels, covers, as usual, a wide era, consic ering territory.

It begins with scenes of Billy Sunda the evangelist, in action at Camp Kearne Cal., where he made addresses to the so diers in the drive for Y. M. C. A. fund Then comes scenes of the disastrous fir at Paterson, N. J., recently, in which fou teen men lost their lives. On the Atlanti ocean the steamer Rochester is shown, bu it is not made known whether the scene were made before or after the ship wa torpedoed by a U-boat. At Glasgow, Scot land, Britain's women workers hold a patri otic celebration to demonstrate their un swerving allegiance to their country, an in Paris scenes were taken of children o France paying a visit to the capital a guests of the city.

Artist Makes Sketches for Singl Reel Pictures

James Montgomery Flagg, the artist, ha prepared a series of life character sketche for the screen, it was announced last week which, for motion picture purposes, will b grouped under the general title of "Girl You Know." Mr. Flagg terms them "so cial satires."

Each sketch, it is announced, provide the basis for a single reel picture, twelv of which will be released at intervals o two weeks by the Edison Studios, it i planned. The artist appears in each pic ture, seated at the easel in his studi roughing out a sketch of a model wh stands before him. The model asks th subject of her pose, and Mr. Flagg pro ceeds to tell her in what is said to be new manner in pictures. Then is shown the humorist's conception of his mode punctuated by Flagg titles which are ex pected to be as humorous as the scene themselves.

The productions will be handled as Per fection Pictures by the George Kleine Sys tem, it is announced.

Essanay Completes Eleven Sceni Productions

Essanay, it was announced last week, ha completed the production of eleven scenic under the general caption of "The Won ders of Nature, Science and Industry," which is said to be among the most remark able ever put out both from the view shown and from the photography. Thes pictures are 1,000 feet in length and ar released each week through General Film beginning November 24.

Essanay, it is announced, has aimed t get away from the long distance shots o the ordinary scenics and has secured som highly interesting close-ups and intimat touches, while at the same time giving comprehensive panoramic view of the sec tions touched upon.

The first picture is said to be of peculia interest as it shows five of the best know writers in the country, Maximillian Foste Jack Lait, Hughie Fullerton, Grantlan Rice and Bill McGeehan, fishing fo salmon in New Brunswick.

Louise Huff Is to Be Presented Again in Paramount Features, with Jack Pickford Once More Playing Opposite Her

Training Camp Abroad Shown in Mutual Weekly

A very appropriate opening scene for No. 151 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which was released November 18, shows a Gaumont cameraman starting on a special tour of the U. S. Army Camps. This is, of course, only one of the many Gaumont staff photographers who are making an accurate picture record of the life and work of our soldiers at home and abroad.

A fire which consumed a hugh war plant in New York is included in the scenes in this release. Other scenes serve to keep audiences posted as to what is happening in France and the United States.

Scenes in California are also presented in this issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly.

Exhibitors Find Jewel Features Money-Makers

Good Reports Reach Home Office of Receptions of "Pay Me" and "Come Through"—One Manager Lets Exchange Put Film Over

THAT exhibitors throughout the country fast recognizing the worth of Jewel Productions, and are realizing that Jewel, Inc., is making every effort to co-operate with them to obtain the highest efficiency in advertising and publicity, is the gist of an announcement from the Jewel offices last week, after developments in regard to various of its pictures had been watched and results noted.

As an example of the confidence shown by exhibitors, Jewel cites the action of O. T. Berger, manager of the Page theatre in Medford, Oregon. Mr. Berger recently bought the Page, and was unfamiliar with its management and operation, according to Jewel. Hearing of the success of "Pay Me," he went to the Jewel offices in Portland, booked the feature and gave over his entire publicity campaign to the exchange to handle, it is said. His only restriction was the limit of expenditure. Results are said to have fully justified Mr. Berger's confidence, and packed houses made the feature's run a profitable one.

Adolph A. Miller, manager of the Knickerbocker theatre in Columbus, Ohio, is named as another exhibitor who has taken the trail as a Jewel booster. In a letter to the home office he states that "Come Through" is a money-maker. "I believe," he continued, "that every exhibitor in the country will profit by showing this picture to his patrons, not only in the friends he will make, but in the actual profit his increased receipts will return."

When a moving picture feature, playing at low prices can take in $105 in one day, in a town of 1900 persons, it must be "some feature," yet that is what the Jewel production, "Sirens of the Sea" is said to have done in Hawarden, Iowa.

L. Scriven, manager of the Lyric theatre there is said to be so pleased with the success of the production that he contemplates booking it for a return date.

L-Ko Names Comedies for Release in December

"A Hero for a Minute," Featuring Bobby Dunn, Leads Off on December 5, Followed by Three Others That Promise Much Fun

THE trip to the West Coast that involved consultations between President Julius Stern and Director General J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko, has developed matters of progress in that series of merry-makers, showing thus early in the December releases. Plans for the future carry further advancements to keep L-Kos at the head of the procession. Four comedies are ready for December, to reach exhibitors through Universal Exchanges on the following distribution dates: December 5, "Hero for a Minute," featuring Bobby Dunn, late of Keystone's forces, and Katheryn Young, L-Ko's comedy vampire. Robert Kerr directed this J. G. Blystone offering.

December 12, "Deep Sea and Desperate Deeds," starring Myrtle Sterling and featuring Al Forbes at the head of her supporting company. This is also a Blystone production, directed by Vin Moore.

December 19, "Shot in the Excitement," which pictures the philanderings of a raspberry Romeo, will have Dave Morris as the star in a special L-Ko directed by Craig Hutchinson. Over this subject Julius Stern becomes especially optimistic.

December 26—L-Ko's Christmas present to exhibitors is the first of a series of special comedies involving Max Swayne, the heavy-moustached "Ambrose" of screen comedy repute, who will offer "Ambrose's Ice Love." This one was directed by W. Frederick, who will produce further "Ambrose" frolics as L-Kos.

Farnum's New Bluebird is Pronounced Perfect

Feature from Late Richard Harding Davis' Novel Scheduled for Release January 7—Murray Feature Nears Finish

DURING the past week Franklyn Farnum's next Bluebird release was shown to executives in the New York headquarters and passed upon for schedule January 7 as embodying every element that makes for good photoplaying. The late Richard Harding Davis wrote the story. Mystery and adventure, with an engaging love story, provide the features. Joseph De Grasse made the production, Mr. Farnum's support including Edith Johnson, his leading lady; Al W. Filson, especially engaged; Lon Chaney, Sam De Grasse and other selections from Universal's stock forces.

"The Eternal Columbine," written by H. Sheridan Bickers, and produced by Robert Leonard as Mae Murray's third Bluebird offering, is nearing completion at Universal City, along with "Broadway Love," the Ida May Park production, in which Dorothy Phillips will appear, late in January. H. Carey Wonderly wrote "Broadway Love," reflecting a new side-light on the famous thoroughfare, with most of its fashions, foibles and frivolities.

Further preparations for the Bluebird program include "The Catamount," which is being filmed by Joseph De Grasse, with Franklyn Farnum the star, and Edith Johnson, leading lady, from a story by R. N Bradbury and F. H. Clark. There will be a Rupert Julian presentation of "The Highest Card," written and scenarioized by Elliot J. Clawson, in which Ruth Clifford will star with her leading man, Monroe Salisbury, prominently featured.

Violet Mersereau's appearance in "The Girl by the Roadside" has been announced as the final Bluebird for 1917. This presentation will be made December 31, to complete the holiday fortnightly begun by Mae Murray, in "Face Value" December 24.

Hammons Gives Opinion of Educational Films

Vice-President and General Manager of Educational Films Corporation Thinks Brevity of Subjects Is Success Keynote

IN an announcement last week giving his opinion of educational films in general and Educational Films in particular, E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, commented as follows: "I consider one of the chief reasons for what success we have achieved in the educational field the brevity of our subjects. Do I mean to infer by that that I feel they have won out because there is so little of them? I do. This sounds sensational, but it is the truth. I have a warm spot in my heart for those educational picture boosters who feel that the educational film of "feature" length will become as popular and common as the dramatic "feature" film, but I do not share their optimism. I am of the belief that the educational film of the future, like that of the present, will be best because brief. I think that one reel will be the average maximum length in 1927, as it is today. I think that two reels will be the exceptional maximum length ten years from now, as it is today.

"Of course, you will point to the war films and say: 'They're educational and they're feature length!' But they are in a special class. Naturally the things they show will hold an audience for their entire length. That is due to the state of mind of the public.

"The general educational output will always be strengthened by pruning. The day of the frequent educational "big film"—if big means length—will never come. I am jealous of the length of the dramas, all right, but I am not losing time worrying that educationals will ever rival them in size."

E. W. Hammons, Vice-President and General Manager of Educational Films Corporation

Army Tractors Caper in New Bray Pictographs

In the Ninety-fourth Release of This Subject Through Paramount Tropic Straw Weavers Are Also Shown—More Hints to Housewives

THE success of the tractor in modern warfare, which prompted the U. S. army officials to investigate the claims of manufacturers concerning the huge machines, has been seized upon by Paramount-Bray as a corking good idea for scenes in the 94th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen. In this reel many shots were taken of the tractors while being put through their capers for the experts to decide whether they were up to requirements. Many of the big engines went through evolutions that were said to be startling, and as remarkable as the stunts of the British tanks.

On the reel with the tractors are also other subjects which vary enough to make the release very well balanced. In Florida and elsewhere where the palmetto palm flourishes, there is a unique industry that is shown in the Pictographs. Annually, hundreds of thousands of hats are made from the leaves of the palmetto palm and shipped all over the world.

Uncle Sam's fifth Hint to Housewives, tells how to preserve fresh eggs. These "hints" have attracted much favorable comment and the Bray Studios, Inc., have decided, therefore, to release another of the subjects. The methods of keeping eggs fresh, shown on the screen in this release, are the approved ones and should be understood by all housewives. The complete details are given in pictured form.

Bobby Bumps' many friends will no doubt be glad to know that the 94th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs will again present one of the adventures of this creation of Earl Hurd, together with Fido, the pup, whose birthday is celebrated in the humorous cartoon comedy.

Universal Completes Roster of Cartoonists

Names Thirty-nine Wielders of the Sketching Pen Who Will Contribute Drawings to Current Events—All Well Known

UNIVERSAL Current Events, which recently inaugurated the policy of reproducing newspaper cartoons on the screen, announced this week that it has completed its roster of cartoonists whose work is to be exclusively presented in motion picture houses through the medium of Universal Current Events.

The list, which covers the choice territory of the United States, includes thirty-nine well-known cartoonists, as follows:

W. A. Rogers, New York Herald; W. C. Morris, New York Evening Mail; Robert Carter, Philadelphia Press; Charles Henry Sykes, Philadelphia Evening Ledger; R. K. Chamberlain, Philadelphia Evening Telegraph; F. T. Richards, Philadelphia North American; John L. De Mar, Philadelphia Record; Fred Morgan, Philadelphia Inquirer; Nelson Harding, Brooklyn, N. Y., Eagle; Ted Brown, Chicago Daily News; "Cy" Hungerford, Pittsburgh Sun; Bert Link, Pittsburgh Press; Elmer Donnell, St. Louis Globe-Democrat; Claude Shafer, Cincinnati Post; W. A. Ireland, Columbus Evening Dispatch; Harry J. Westerman, Ohio State Journal; Harry Keys, Columbus Citizen; J. H. Donahey, Cleveland Plain Dealer; James Lavery, Cleveland Press; Fred O. Seibel, Albany Knickerbocker Press; Wm. A. McKenna, Albany Evening Journal; W. K. Patrick, New Orleans Times-Picayune; Luke Pease, Newark Evening News; Alfred W. Brewerton, Atlanta Journal; Lewis C. Gregg, Atlanta Constitution; "Cad" Brand, Milwaukee Sentinel; Gaar Williams, Indianapolis News; Cornelius J. Kennedy ("Ken"), Buffalo Evening News; R. O. Evans, Baltimore American; G. R. Spencer, Omaha World-Herald; J. P. Alley, Memphis Commercial Appeal; Paul B. Fung, Seattle Post-Intelligencer; John F. Knott, Dallas News; James F. Lynch, Denver Rocky Mountain News; Paul A. Plaschke, Louisville Times; McKee Barclay, Baltimore Sun; Walter Blackman, Birmingham Age-Herald; A. J. Taylor, Los Angeles Times; Roy Aymond, New Orleans Daily States.

Universal Releases Well Balanced News Reel

Universal Current Events, No. 27, released Nov. 17, is a very good example of a well balanced reel of its kind, and, while the war exerts considerable influence in framing the feature, other points of interest are not overlooked.

The reel begins with "Patriotic Fervor Puts Pep in Election Contests," and shows how the cares of war-making are shelved for one day while several little domestic matters are decided here and there. It then proceeds to "Londoner Defies Raids with Back-yard Bomb-proof," and continues with "Another Strong Arm for America's Big Push," showing an Oregon regiment starting for its training point; "Uncle Sam's Army Mules of Steel Replace the Live-and-Kicking Kind," "Houdini Escapes Again While Hung in Mid-Air," "Big Explosion of Bronze Powder Takes Heavy Toll," "Italy's King Sees French Front as German Guns Roar," a cartoon from a Chicago daily paper, one from a Louisville paper and a third from a Philadelphia paper.

Patriotic Fervor Reflected in Animated Weekly

The patriotic fervor that is sweeping the country is said to be vividly reflected in the Universal Animated Weekly No. 98. There are many new highlights to the situation and all are portrayed in this latest issue.

Naturally, the first question is whether the men are fit to take up their duties in the defense of the nation as time, the main essential, has been very short. This point is covered in the first part of the weekly, "Glimpses of Our National Army in the Making," which shows the rookies in the various camps being trained into husky nephews of Uncle Sam.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

NEW HORIZONS

A pretty humdrum place, the town you live in, isn't it? If you had a comfortable bank balance, wouldn't you be tempted to chuck the job and set out for somewhere else,—most anywhere as long as it was different?

Before the blight of war fell on Europe, the lands across the sea were the goal of everyone who could afford a steamer ticket, from the school teacher who spent the savings of years in a six weeks' trip, to the Pittsburgh millionaire who left a golden trail from Stockholm to Salamanca.

Of course some people don't see much fun in tramping round hot cities, even beautiful foreign cities, in summer time. These spend their vacations where the trout lurk and the campfires rise.

Well, Europe is not for pleasure seekers these days. The storied castles of Spain can be seen only in pictured representations. And winter and hard work hold the nature lovers to home or desk and duty.

If you are an exhibitor always alert to meet unexpressed demands, and even to create a new demand, let your screen be the Magic Carpet that, with the beautiful scenics put out each week, transports your patrons to wonderlands and playlands far away from the prosy round of life.

C. DeL. B.

A TREASURE SPOT OF BELGIUM

A scenic, so beautiful and so singularly appealing at this time that though not a recent release it was run at the Rialto theatre a fortnight ago, is "The Waterways of Bruges" (Pathe Exchange, Inc.). Bruges is as much a city of canals as Venice. Lining the banks are quaint houses of red brick, thick shrubbery and overhanging trees. Arched bridges repeat their graceful curves in the tranquil waters. As charming as paintings by old Flemish masters are the various "Quais," where in the peaceful days before the war entranced visitors loved to watch the little boats and silently gliding swans. The writer herself was such a visitor some years ago. To her this exquisite film, so faithfully reproducing in every tint the beloved little city, afforded the keenest pleasure. It cannot fail to give artistic delight even to those for whom Bruges is now, alas, but another victim of German greed.

BOOSTING THE PICTURE IN JAPAN

The publicity man is always with us, even when we take a "Trip Through Japan" (Educational Films Corporation) by way of the Golden Gate and the Hawaiian Islands and find ourselves in busy Yokohama. In this enterprising city "the exhibitor" does not content himself with placarding the front of his house to announce the attractions within. He sends out a procession of strangely garbed gentlemen, bearing banners and standards, to parade the streets.

This is just one of many quaint scenes in the film. Very attractive are the young folk, and the fat baby who occupies the position of honor in the group. The making of barrels by hand and the endless chain of humans who pass coal into a steamer in an amazingly short time give an idea of the cheapness of labor in that distant land. Moonlight on the bay, and a drenching storm at sea add beauty and variety to a pleasant picture.

UNFAMILIAR AGRICULTURE

The two subjects which stand out most prominently in Selig World Library No. 23 (General Film Company) are "Hop Fields of Kent" and "Rice Culture in Java," both interesting and picturesque. In the first, close-ups of the hop blossoms introduce the spectator to a plant widely known but in actual appearance entirely unfamiliar. The hop picking is done by women and children of the London slums, queer slatterns and pathetic mites that might have come straight from the pages of Dickens.

The rice picture is carefully taken, with panoramas showing extensive terraced swamps where the rice grows and excellent close-ups of plowing, with men and cattle knee-deep in mud. Women and children harvest the ripe grain, which is threshed out by the women in heavy stone mortars. A strange contrast to the monster machines that help us gather in our great harvests.

A MAN'S SIZE DOG

Everyone who has seen Robert Bruce's pictures, taken in the mountains of Oregon and Washington, knows the great dog who ranges with him in the wilds. In the latest scenic release of the Educational Films Corporation, "Me and My Dog," "Me" plays second fiddle, and even the magnificent mountains and lakes are but backgrounds to this splendid beast, powerful as a panther, yet a tender, worshipping friend of the man who echoes the prayer, "Make me worthy of my dog."

Aside from its sympathetic interest the film is noteworthy for the great beauty of the tableaus, where the man and his companion, silhouetted against the sky, seem cast in bronze by a master sculptor.

FISHERMEN'S LUCK

If each succeeding number of Essanay's new series, "Wonders of Nature and Science" (General Film Company), is as lively as "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," the exhibitor will have a very desirable short subject to add seasoning to his program. Up in Canada the salmon are not caught in an acre-wide net by the ton but on the end of a line, and only after a struggle lasting sometimes two hours. That, at any rate, was the experience of Hugh Fullerton, Grantland Rice, Jack Lait and other notables in the realms of sport, who exchanged fountain pens and typewriters for the canoe paddle and the stout rod and reel. Fullerton was perhaps the hero of the day, for his catch proved a "whale," but honors were shared by "Bill" McGeehan, who in the absence of a guide with a gaff, landed and secured his fish with a lively bit of football strategy.

Needless to say, Flap Jack Joe, who sends them sailing into the air, is a welcome sight at the close of the day.

ICE AND FLAMES

The second issue of the Argus Pictorial (Pathe Exchange, Inc.) is, in point of dramatic interest, a great improvement over the first. How the State of New York saves its great forests from destruction is shown in lively fashion. The watcher on the tower scanning the horizon with his telescope, discovers smoke and instantly sends the alarm over the telephone. How this is received by the Fire Warden, and the method of clearing underbrush and splitting stumps to check the fire, are shown in a series of spirited pictures.

Just why fishermen choose the winter as a suitable season for eel catching we cannot say—perhaps because people who esteem eels as food will eat them all the year round. At any rate, eels are located in their snug bed beneath several inches of ice and by means of a fork thrust through a hole are brought wriggling to the surface. An animated drawing adds to our knowledge of what happens beneath the ice sheet.

Professor Thatcher of the Department of Fine Arts of Columbia University continues his interesting lessons in stencilling. Animated Clay Figures, by Helena Smith Dayton, add the comedy note.

WRESTLERS

Bernarr Macfadden, of national repute, enters the screen world with a Physical Culture Magazine, the first number of which has just been released by the General Film Company. Illustrations of gymnastics and deep breathing exercises by girls, and dancing out of doors by Miss Margaret Crawford and her pupils, are followed by an exciting wrestling match between two experts in which a variety of holds are illustrated and the seemingly impossible achieved. The camera is close enough to the actors to afford excellent views of the positions assumed.

MOVING DAY FOR Y. M. C. A.

"Pick up your house and walk," said someone at a training camp when the boys criticised the location of the very popular Y. M. C. A. "Hut." So a hundred or so of the dissatisfied ones (Universal Animated Weekly No. 98) put their shoulders to the timber, hoist the edifice off the ground, and move it to a more accessible spot. Then the motor trucks, just to show that if houses can move motors can swim, plung wheel-deep across a stream, covering their occupants with clouds of spray.

Marines may acquire sea legs, but it doesn't prevent their having very active land legs. Men of the Marine Corps demonstrate how they erect a wireless outfit and have it in working order within seventy-five seconds.

A picture of President Wilson addressing the American Federation of Labor at its recent convention shows him speaking with earnest force.

Hy Mayer gives point to the President's appeal by the ardent patriotism of his cartoon.

Scenes of India in Selig World Library

The current issue of the Selig World Library, a General Film release, includes a wide variety of subjects which, it is asserted, make it one of the most valuable issues produced. Among the subjects are "The Ole Swimmin' Hole," at Delhi, India; "The Fuel Markets of India," "The Source of Rubber," "Your Thanksgiving Day," "No Cows and Chickens on this Farm," and "Knit a Bit."

Breese and Hanlon in Thomas-Raver New Production

HARRY RAVER, who is working with Augustus Thomas, the playwright, on the script for his most recent work in the productions field, announces that the interior scenes are practically completed and that work on exteriors will be commenced this week. The story is the work of Mr. Thomas and is in the nature of a mystery drama. The title has not been announced.

Edmund Breese, the well-known character actor and Alma Hanlon are interpreting the principal roles. The supporting cast will be announced soon. Miss Hanlon appeared in the principal feminine role in Mr. Raver's last production for the independent market, "The Public Defender." She has been seen in many of the popular feature pictures of the current year.

It is stated that Miss Hanlon's part in the forthcoming Thomas-Raver production of Mr. Thomas's own story, is one that affords her every opportunity to display her dramatic talents.

"Zeppelin" Through Consolidated in the South

Method of Distribution Is Such That Feature Is Immediately Available to All Exhibitors—Simple, but Revolutionary

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed, it was announced last week, whereby "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," and all of the special productions released by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, will be booked to Southern exhibitors through the offices of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

The method of distribution decided upon by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is such that "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" is immediately available to all exhibitors, it is announced. Established exchanges in every territory, it is said, are accepting booking for all of the U. S. pictures, both from theatres holding franchises in the organization and from exhibitors doing open booking.

The Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges represent the U. S. Exhibitors in New York, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago and St. Louis. Foursquare is also preparing to handle the output in offices to be opened in the West. Frank Gersten, Inc., has New Jersey. The Globe Feature Film Company: New England, and the Consolidated the South.

"The system is simple and at the same time revolutionary," said Frank Hall at the Broadway theatre during the trade showing of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid." "Its simplicity was proven by the speed with which it was put into operation. Three weeks ago we announced our first picture and started arrangements for its release. To-day we are booking it in nearly every part of the country. Our exchange affiliations once made and our representatives in their 'trenches' what was to keep us from going 'Over-the-top'? Our franchises are proving to be popular and while a franchise is not necessary in order that an exhibitor may book our pictures, the whole proposition was worked out from the exhibitors' standpoint and it is natural that they should wish to take advantage of a franchise-fixed-maximum-price, especially when they know that they will also profit by receiving pictures for less than their franchise price in each case where the cost of production makes it possible. We realize that we must buy productions that are above the regular program standard of merit and that they must also have a very special advertising value to get across in these times of keen competition.

Lewis J. Selznick Closes Contract with Loew

Select Star Series of Pictures Booked in Loew Houses in Greater New York and New Rochelle—Young, Talmadge and Alice Brady Included

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of the Select Pictures Corporation, announces that he has contracted with Marcus Loew for runs in all Marcus Loew houses throughout Greater New York and New Rochelle for the select star series of pictures produced by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, by the Norma Talmadge Film Company, and pictures starring respectively Alice Brady and Constance Talmadge. They will be shown in the various houses of the Marcus Loew circuit in this district for runs of seventy consecutive days each.

The stars whose pictures are affected by this contract have already completed one or more of their offerings in the Select Star Series of pictures. Clara Kimball Young's first picture is "Magda," directed by Emile Chautard; and "Shirley Kaye," her latest, directed by Joseph Kaufman. Norma Talmadge's first Select Picture is "The Moth," directed by Edward José; her second picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," directed by Charles Miller. Constance Talmadge's first star picture, "Scandal," is a current release, and was directed by Charles Giblyn. The new picture which Miss Talmadge has just finished for Select, "The Honeymoon," was also directed by Mr. Giblyn. Alice Brady has completed one of her Select Pictures, "Her Silent Sacrifice." Edward José directed. Miss Brady is now at work on her second, "The Lifted Cross," which is being directed by Edward José. Paul West made the adaptation from Charlotte Bronte's story, "Jane Eyre."

Uno Buys Japan Territory for Moss Productions

It is announced that U. Uno, representative film importer of Japan, has contracted with B. S. Moss to take over the rights for Japan, for "One Day," sequel to Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," and the "To Boots and Saddle" adapted from Eugene Walter's play of that name.

Garson Buys "The Cold Deck" for Michigan, from Triangle

Harry I. Garson, of Harry I. Garson Productions, Detroit, anounces that he has purchased "The Cold Deck," featuring William S. Hart, from the Triangle Film Corporation, for the State of Michigan. Mr. Garson is manager of Clara Kimball Young and has been actively engaged in the independent field, especially in the middle western territory.

Weisfeld Says There Is Need for Children's Program

M. J. Weisfeld, general manager of Wholesome Films Corporation, who has personally visited hundreds of exhibitors throughout the country, has some interesting observations to make concerning the necessity, as he says, for children's programs in the theatres. He says:

"I found a strong demand for children's programs, but a shortage of pictures adaptable to them. I do not mean by children's programs, just the so-called 'kiddie' pictures. The young of our nation have a broader appreciation of motion picture essentials than their elders permit them to have of any other sort of paid amusement. The result is that children demand a little bit more than the 'kiddie' pictures, so called.

"The picture to suit this demand must be clean in story, action and production, yet not so adult as to be 'over the heads' of children, nor too youthful in plot not to interest their elders.

"One exhibitor whom I interviewed gave me an excellent illustration. He said, 'The whole children's program demand is the old story of the circus over again. The circus, primarily for children, is an adult amusement as well, and it always will be. My father always took me to every circus that came to our town.

"'Why did he do it? I'll tell you. There were two reasons. He wanted me to see the circus and just as important, he wanted to see it himself. Often he would talk about it long after the activities of youth had chased the circus from off my reflective horizon. That's the answer to children's programs.

"'Get good, clean pictures that will entertain them and also their elders, and you solve a big problem for the producer, as well as for we exhibitors, and the public.'"

Mr. Weisfeld announces that Wholesome Films Corporation will offer exhibitors a complete children's program, including a novelty reel, comedy, scenic and dramatic feature.

"A complete children's program which will afford varied entertainment with plenty of drama in the feature, good, clean humor in the comedy and something decidedly unique in the novelty reel," he said.

Peggy Hyland's Contract with Mayfair Only Myth

Peggy Hyland's personal representative, Adele Whitely Fletcher, last week made an announcement in which it was denied there was any truth in a recently published statement to the effect that Miss Hyland had signed a ten-year contract with the Mayfair Film Corporation, with which company she has been associated since Spring and whose first picture under that banner is called "Persuasive Peggy."

It is declared Miss Hyland has no contract with Mayfair.

Fun-Art Films to Show First Comedy Release

Fun-Art Films, Inc., announces that the first two-reel comedy production, "A Rag A Bone and A Hank of Hair," written by Vincent Bryan, and featuring Ray and Gordon Dooley, vaudeville stars, will be shown to the trade, this week. The place of showing and date will be announced in due time. Mr. Bryan, responsible for the script and direction of this comedy production, is responsible for many of Charlie Chaplin's successes. He is also a song writer of note. Ray and Gordon Dooley are favorite vaudeville entertainers. This will be their first appearance in pictures.

Toronto Company Reports Good Bookings in Canada

States Rights Features reports from its Toronto office, Canada, that it has booked "Sirens of the Sea," "Man Without a Country" and "The Co-respondent" for consecutive runs of one week in the four leading first-run houses in Toronto. A good business in the independent field is reported.

Blystone Completing Fifth Century Comedy with Alice Howell

J. G. Blystone, director general of Century Comedies announces that he is now working on Alice Howell's fifth production, "The Village Blacksmith." This he announces, will be completed soon and he and Miss Howell will commence the sixth production which is titled "School Days." "School Days," "Neptune's Naughty Daughter," "Automatics" and "Her Bareback Career," are the Century Comedies, featuring Miss Howell, now on the market.

Julius Stern announces that he has met with good success in the marketing of these comedies and states that the four above named, which are now placed in nearly every territory, are proving strong box-office attractions.

Billy West's Latest Production "Old King Sol"

"King Solomon," the title of the King-Bee Comedy, featuring Billy West, now under production, has been changed to "Old King Sol." This change was made by Nat I. Spitzer, sales manager of King-Bee after receipt of a letter from a London company, stating that it had the world rights to a picture under the title, "King Solomon." "Old King Sol" will be the first five-reel production made by King-Bee with Billy West featured.

Ohio Board Passes "Lust of Ages" Without Change

The Ogden Pictures Corporation announces that the Ohio Board of Censors has passed "The Lust of the Ages," featuring Lillian Walker, without change. Leon Netter, of Masterpiece Attractions, Cleveland, who has the Ohio rights to this production, presented the picture for review of the Board.

A Typical W. S. Hart Scene in "The Two-Gun Man," Which W. H. Productions is Distributing

Hart Officials Complain of Film Pirates

Special Two-Reel Hart Features Which This Company Controls, Are Being Duplicated by Film Pirates, Official Says

OFFICIALS of the W. H. Hart Productions Company, who control the exclusive rights to a number of special two-reel productions featuring William S. Hart, now offered on the independent market, are on the trail of film pirates, who, it is stated, are duping some of the special two-reel Hart features which this company controls. An official of the company commenting upon this said:

"The industry has long been troubled with the activities of men of this type and it is to be hoped that they will be dealt with in a most summary manner. They are gradually being eliminated, as was illustrated recently in the case of "Joan the Woman" and the Chaplin pictures. However, there still seems to be some who have not profited by this warning and who still continue to try 'to put one over.'

"We have good evidence as to who the parties are in this latest outrage and they will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. The unfortunate part of the whole affair lies in the fact that these crooks are being aided by the industry itself, that is to say, certain of the exchanges and exhibitors—not the reputable ones of course—will purchase and book these duped prints and use them. Often an exhibitor will get stuck with one of these prints and show it, laboring under the delusion that it is genuine. The result is that he has a print of inferior quality and if it happened often would naturally ruin his business. The fact that this duping has recently become such a menace, should put every exhibitor upon his guard, for it is through their agency and that of the exchanges that we can hope to blot out this illicit trade once and for all. Fortunately, the reputable exhibitors and exchanges will not have anything to do with duped film and exchanges that handle these subjects are practically placed in the same category as the dupers themselves. They certainly come into bad repute with every decent distributor and in the end will find themselves in a most awkward position. The industry is waking up and really going after these parasites and the time is not far off when we shall be entirely free of them. There is now a plan on foot whereby the reputable producers and distributors will cooperate in a policy to eliminate business dealings with any exchanges making it a business of handling duped films.

Princeton Students to See Rapf's Late Production

Harry Rapf announces that his late production "The Struggle Everlasting," featuring Florence Reed, will be shown for the review of the Princeton College students before it is shown to the trade. The author, Edwin Milton Royle, is graduated from Princeton. Many of the scenes in this production were taken about the Princeton campus. The story is based on the struggle of a college student after leaving the seat of knowledge. One of the scenes shows the Princeton students who have entered the aviation school and the activities at this school.

Randolph Sells Interest in All Star Features

D. C. Randolph, one of the pioneer distributors in the Southern States, has sold his interest in the All Star Features Company, of Jacksonville, Fla., and announced last week that he will assume the management of the recently organized Exhibitors' Booking Association, with headquarters in Jacksonville.

Betty Lee, a Worthy Model for Any Sculptor, Is the Goddess of Love in "The Triumph of Venus," Captain Hesser's Mythological Spectacle

Large Offices Leased for Hesser Enterprises

CAPT. EDWIN BOWER HESSER announces that he has leased a floor suite in the Candler Building, New York, and the offices of the two enterprises with which he is connected will be located here. They are the Victory Film Manufacturing Company and the Hesser Publicity Bureau. The Hesser Publicity Bureau will retain its offices on Forty-seventh street, as studio room for its art department.

The change was made necessary, it was announced, by the increase in business in both the publicity end and because Capt. Hesser has entered other branches of the amusement field. The Victory Manufacturing Company will handle the five-reel drama, "The Triumph of Venus," starring Betty Lee. This production will be offered on the independent market. The executive work connected with the exploitation of this production will be handled from the new offices.

Capt. Hesser states that in "The Triumph of Venus" he has an independent feature which is especially suited to the times. Commenting on this production, he said:

"Public amusements should, more than ever, be of a bright and cheerful nature, and of a kind that will take people's minds off war and its horrors. The war drama has its place but I feel that a revival of the classic, with all its beauties and charm, will be appreciated. 'The Triumph of Venus' is a story of antiquity. The classic spirit is preserved throughout, and the fascinating tale unfolded of the Olympic deities has not only beauty and novelty but a strong human interest as well. Five months were spent in production, and the correctness of every detail of the costuming and incidentals are authentic. There is never at any time the slightest suggestiveness. The production is artistic from every standpoint, and opens up to filmdom that world of mythology from which poets and artists have received inspiration for centuries and which still may profitably be drawn upon.

Oro's First Release, "Loyalty," Shown to Trade

"LOYALTY," the initial release of the newly organized Oro Pictures, Inc., was shown to the trade at the Broadway theatre last Friday. Special music, arranged by S. M. Berg, accompanied the showing. The production was shown to the reviewsrs some weeks ago and they were of the opinion that "Loyalty" would be well received by the trade. The audience which attended the showing last week was composed of exhibitors and independent buyers and they pronounced the Oro release one of merit.

"Loyalty" tells of the experiences of an actress who comes from the West to New York. She attains fame in the profession and marries a man who is addicted to the drug habit. She loses her reputation but determines to cure her husband of the habit. Her loyalty to her husband wins his respect and he, after a fight, wins out in the fight with drug.

Betty Brice is the featured player. Murdock McQuarrie is in chief support. Humility" is the second release of the Oro Pictures. Miss Brice is featured in this production also. The third release is "When Destiny Rules." Grace Davison is featured. Melbourne MacDowell is in support. Dolly Dare has been engaged by Oro to appear in a picture now under production at the Los Angeles studio.

New Company Organizes to Handle Short Features

JACK H. GLAUBER and Nat Nathanson announce that they have organized the Associated Film Service, with offices at 145 West 45th street, New York, for the purpose of handling one and two-reel features in the New York state territory. Mr. Glauber is president of the organization and Mr. Nathanson is general manager.

Mr. Glauber is a prominent film man of many years eperience. He has been associated with many of the large distributing companies. He commenced with the firm of Kessel & Bauman. He connected later with Great Eastern Film Company, Mutual Film Corporation and Greene Features Film Company. Mr. Nathanson was formerly general manager of the Federal Feature Film Company.

Negotiations are now under way whereby the new organization announce that they will gain control of a number of short features. Mr. Glauber announces that the company is ready now to take care of exhibitors with some good short features at reasonable prices.

Capitalize All Star, Goldwyn Urges

In its promotion hints on Madge Kennedy's second picture "Newly Married" Goldwyn is calling especial attention to the popularity that the noted stage star achieved in her initial screen effort and the fact that she became known almost over night to the millions of picture fans who had not seen her in any of her stage productions.

Goldwyn urges the exhibitors to take advantage of this popularity, especially by lavish use of pictures of the star in lobby displays and in the newspaper advertising.

Giles Company Takes Over Trimount Interests

It was announced last week that on November 1 the interests of the Trimount Theatres, Inc., which, as a Massachusetts corporation, controlled the Princess and Gorman theatres in Farmingham, Mass., and the Orpheum and Gardner theatres in Gardner, Mass., were taken over by the George A. Giles Company, a new Massachusetts corporation with a capitalization of $1,000,000.

Mr. Giles, treasurer of the old company, is also treasurer and general manager of the new corporation, which is already making plans for more extensive operations.

St. Louis May Exclude Youngsters at Some Shows

The Board of Aldermen of St. Louis has under consideration the adoption of a motion picture ordinance intended to prohibit the admission of young people under sixteen years of age to exhibitions of motion pictures which depict abduction, elopements of married persons, mock marriages, white slavery, murders, robberies, the interiors of questionable resorts and others of like calibre.

Orrin G. Cooks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, has pointed out to officials in St. Louis that such an ordinance would "exclude from the screen such famous stories as George Eliot's "Adam Bede," Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," "The Silence of Dean Maitland," "Tess of the Storm Country," Hall Caine's "The Manx-Man," because they depict seduction; Ibsen's "Doll's House," which deals with the elopement of married persons; Dicken's "Oliver Twist"; some of Scott's Tales; Shakespeare's "Macbeth," "Hamlet," and "Julius Caesar"; many Indian and frontier tales where courts of justice have not been established; war stories; the shooting of men by the police and countless historic and classical stories.

Many other films were named.

Exhibitors Affiliated With New Organization

Allied Exchanges, Inc., Newly Formed State Rights Organization, Ready for Business—In the Market for Big Features—Franchises Acquired

THE Allied Exchanges, Inc., a newly formed organization, announces its advent into the field of independent activities. Its membership is composed of prominent exhibitors and state rights operators and has been organized for the purpose of purchasing and distributing independent productions. At a meeting held last week, at Hotel Astor, the following officers were elected: Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger, first vice-president; J. L. Friedman, second vice-president; Lynn S. Card, treasurer; David L. Lowrie, secretary, and A. J. Cobe, general manager. The election of a president of the new organization has been postponed until the meeting to be held at Hotel Astor, November 19, at which time final arrangements will be made for the launching of the organization.

A purchasing board of seven members will pass upon all productions submitted for the consideration of the organization. The five members who have been selected for this committee are: Messrs. Friedman, Nixon-Nirdlinger, Crandall, Lowrie and Jackson. The other two members will be elected at the next meeting.

A member of the purchasing committee, speaking for the organization said in commenting upon the policy of the company:

"It is not the object of the organization to have regular releases. The Allied Exchanges, Inc., will release only when it has something big to offer. There may be a release every month, and it may happen that there will be one only every three months. The number of releases and the regularity in which they are released depends entirely upon the number of features that meet with the approval of the purchasing committee. Most of the members of this organization are exhibitors and the releases will be run first at their theatres where this is possible."

Chadwick Now in Full Control of Ivan, Inc.

Ivan Abramson Severs Connections with Ivan Company—I. E. Chadwick, Former General Manager, Buys Abramson's Interests

IVAN ABRAMSON, who was director general of the Ivan Film Productions for some time, has severed his connections with this company, it is announced. I. B. Chadwick, who has been general manager of the company for the past two years, has with his associates, purchased Mr. Abramson's interests. Mr. Chadwick announces that Mr. Abramson will, in all probability be engaged to direct some of the future productions of the company but his interests will be those of a director, only. He says that he will endeavor to meet the demands of the market with a sufficient number of high-class productions and will at the same time endeavor to place the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., in the front ranks of the industry.

The latest addition to the directorial staff of the Ivan Film Productions is F. J. Grandon. Edmund Lawrence, who directed "Married in Name Only" and is now at the studio, working on "Life Against Honor," will continue in directorial capacity, and negotiations with another director are now pending.

"Life Against Honor," Leah Baird's Late Ivan Picture

"Life Against Honor" is the latest Ivan production in which Leah Baird is featured. Edmund Lawrence directed.

Sharpshooters

By H. J. Shepard

IN order to truly eliminate an evil, we must uproot it—strike at its source. There is a great field for the reformer in the motion picture industry, and, if he chooses to specialize, he could find no more fitting sphere for his efforts than the independent market. There, among certain sharpshooters of the industry, he could lay bare the underhanded and unreliable methods of a number of men engaged in that trade.

The independent producer making a picture, unless it is so exceptional as to be able to stand up under criticism, finds himself laboring under an extremely difficult handicap. As is usually the case, he is unacquainted with the methods of distribution, and consequently he is fair game. In a number of instances, recently, independent producers have come to New York with fairly good productions, and have been obliged to sacrifice their pictures at a loss. This has come about through the combination of their ignorance and the methods of the men with whom they are forced to deal.

When the unsuspecting producer arrives in town, he comes in contact with a certain group of this type, who immediately proceed to knock and hammer his picture, and to spread derogatory reports concerning it throughout the entire trade, making the disposal of it impossible. The producer becomes more and more discouraged. He can get no results, and finally these highbinders bring him to the point where he is willing to sell his picture for a song, and betake himself to a more kindly commercial climate.

Distorted Advertising

The next step of the buyers of the negative—after their victim's departure—is to boost the picture through the medium of distorted advertising in order to obtain the disposal of the picture to the various state rights buyers. After the picture has been sufficiently talked about through this method, and the owners get a nibble from a buyer on their proposition, there are several varied schemes of commercial roguery, which are brought into play.

One of these is called "creating competition." This is accomplished by the owners, whose various "friends" in the territory in question, wire in offers on that territory, which are shown to the legitimate buyer. These "friends" of course have no idea of buying the picture for they have no money. In fact, they are probably not even engaged in the state rights trade. However, the buyer has no knowledge of this, and naturally receives a false idea of the value of the picture; therefore, he boosts his offer.

Another clever little trick is that of juggling options. Mr. A. owns a certain picture. Mr. B., a territorial buyer comes to make him an offer on it. "I am very sorry, Mr. B.," says Mr A., "but I have just given Mr. C. an option on that particular territory. Perhaps I can get him to release it in your favor." This naturally stimulates Mr. B.'s desire for the picture. When he came in, he probably had no intention of making a definite offer on it, but he gets the idea that it is being rapidly sold out and that he had better get in on the proposition as soon as possible. He eagerly consents to Mr. A.'s offer to try to influence Mr. C., and the latter, after some unnecessary hesitation, decides to withdraw from the field. Mr. B. then obtains the rights to the picture, which may be no good at all, for his territory, and discovers only when it is too late that he has been let in on a losing proposition. Mr. C., of course, is only just another convenient friend of Mr. A.

Stage Money

Still another method, is turning over the negative to another organization, and publishing the fact that it has been sold for a big price. No money, however, has actually passed. Now the average territorial buyer on reading or hearing such a report, naturally assumes that the picture must be good to have been turned over in its entirety, and consequently will frequently rush in to take a chance. This last is one of the commonest tricks in the trade, and one against which the wise buyer is ever on the guard. There are others too numerous to mention, but the above gives a sufficient indication of the conditions in this particular branch of the industry.

There are also quite a number of men in town, who cleverly play the game form both ends. Unfortunately, for those with whom they deal, their cleverness is only matched by their lack of principle. These men are the representatives of clints,—territorial buyers—in the West. A distributor may have a very bad picture. He comes to one of these "representatives" and makes him a present—in the way of a few dollars. It is all just between friends, of course. The latter in return recommends the picture to his client. Thus the deal is consummated and the territorial buyer is stuck. The representative, however, as is easily seen, draws his profit from both ends of the transaction—his commission from his client, and his "present" from the distributor.

The Ham Director

From the production angle of the independent field, there is one great evil which is being gradually eliminated; soon we hope it will have entirely disappeared. This is the ham actor-director, or in many cases, the wise, unprincipled promoter. Through some influence, this type of person secures an "angel" to back him with a sum of from fifteen thousand up, to make a picture, and having spent the entire amount, upon the completion of his release, turns out a piece of junk.

Here are a few ways that the money was spent—and wasted: inflated salaries; the engaging of people not required; unnecessary sets, automobiles, retakes, spoiled negative, special studio hire, special trips, bad weather conditions. Often the director feels that a sea trip will do him good, or failing that, at least a trip from the Coast to New York. In such a case the continuity of the story is sure to demand whatever is required. There are more ways than one of killing a cat. After the last layer of this cake of heedless extravagance is complete, a frosting is added in the way of some inconsistent and futile advertising.

Then we have the result: the initial investment wasted,—often the entre amount lost. What chance has the "angel" got? Not even a run for his money! He's just one of those who are born every minute for the profit and edification of the wise ones. He is thus initiated into the ranks of wisdom, but—the process has been expensive.

Of course, the producer may be perfectly straight, and be a natural ham without real abilitay. This type would be in their element clerking in a bank. Such a man often gets a good story but lacks the genius to put it over. Or, he makes a good picture, but spends so much money in the process, that he can never hope to get any satisfactory returns on the investment. It is for this reason that many independent producers, spend their own money —and by trying to spend it carefully—run into failure.

Few Capable Ones

There are a few capable directors in the independent field who work upon a percentage basis, and they are doing more than anyone else to eliminate the mushroom producer. The majority of these turn out good, strong productions, which bring excellent results to their backers. Men like these are coming to be better known throughout the state righs trade, and in consequence they are beginning to set a standard of production in that field. There is always a ready market for good releases made by reliable directors and in addition to the number of dependable independent distributors there are several new motion picture exhibitors' leagues which are excellent mediums for state rights distribution.

However the day of the sharpshooter of the industry is on the wane, and out of the chaos of commercial immorality is emerging an era of efficiency and decency, an era of real business. The good director is crowding the poor one to the wall, and the latter's productions are coming to be a drug on the market. It is simply a question now of having everybody in the trade "get wise" to him, and to give him a wide berth. The underhanded methods of the distributors are gradually being weeded out, for the state rights buyers are coming to realize the true value of territories and of different types of productions. In most cases they are thoroughly familiar with local sales conditions of their individual territories. Hence, they are capable of making a close estimate on the possible returns upon any picture that they may take over, so they are not apt to pay too much for territorial rights. It is still only necessary to reach those who have not yet come into contact with the ingeniously crooked methods of the sharpshooters' fraternity, and put them upon their guard. It is only in this way that the present evils may be eliminated.

Commissioner Rules on Exported Positives

Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Says Exported Positives Will Be Taxed But Not Negatives—Lawyer Interprets Bill for Exporters

COMMISSIONER DANIEL C. ROPER of Internal Revenue has given his decision on the export tax to be levied on export films, a subject treated in this department by the export editor in the issue of November 3.

The Piedmont Picture Corporation, prominent exporters, inquired specifically regarding the department's disposition on the subject of export tax and were accorded the following reply:

Replying to your letter of the 27th ultimo, you are advised that the department has ruled that, as the tax applies upon positive moving picture films upon sale or lease thereof and the exportation of such films in a subsequent act, such films may not be withdrawn from the place of manufacture for export without payment of tax. Your attention, however, is invited to the fact that there is no tax imposed upon moving picture negatives, i. e., blank films that have been exposed and developed. The tax is imposed upon the blank before exposure and upon the positive print made from the exposed and developed film.

Respectfully,
(Signed) DANIEL C. ROPER,
Commissioner.

In further reference to the export tax on films, Mr. Joseph P. Bickerton, a New York counsellor at law, has prepared the following interpretation. In his letter to the editor Mr. Bickerton takes exception to the Export Editor's interpretation of the law, claiming that the tobacco case mentioned therein was subject to special exemption according to the legislative act itself. Mr. Bickerton claims that the film tax is not an export tax; that no mention of exports is made in any of the provisions. Mr. Bickerton's report follows:

MEMORANDUM RE LIABILITY TO TAXATION UNDER FEDERAL WAR TAX FILM MANUFACTURED UNDER CONTRACT FOR EXPORT.

The War Revenue Act of 1917, approved by the President October 3, 1917, and which, in so far as it taxes motion film footage, went into effect October 4, 1917, subjects such footage to taxation as follows:

TITLE VI.—WAR EXCISE TAXES.
Section 600. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid
(c) Upon all moving picture films (which have not been exposed) sold by the manufacturer or importer, a tax equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per cent. per linear foot; and
(d) Upon all positive moving picture films (containing a picture ready for projection) sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax equivalent to one-half of 1 per cent. per linear foot;

It has been suggested, and the question has arisen, that the said section, in so far as is would tax footage which is intended for export, and which is manufactured under contract for export, is violative of Article 1, Section 9, Subsection 5, of the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

"No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

The tax imposed by the Act is not a tax on exports within the prohibition of the Constitution.

The provisions of the constitution, prohibiting taxation on exports, are limited to apply to those cases, only, where a tax is levied on the export rather than on the thing. Where the tax is levied generally upon a class of things, or upon the creation of a class of things, the fact that some of them may be exported does not make it a tax upon exports, and this though such goods be manufactured under contract for export. The practical effect of holding otherwise would be to give a bonus to exporters over and above the return enjoyed by those dealing within the country. The question has arisen before and been carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Cornell v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court, stating the facts as follows:

"Plaintiffs in error were manufacturers of filled cheese, entered into contracts for its manufacture and export, and under such contracts manufactured and exported 1,580,479 pounds of filled cheese. They were required by defendant in error, as collector, to purchase and affix stamps to the exported packages of filled cheese. They protested against such required purchase—on the ground that such taxation was prohibited by Section 9, Article I of the Constitution of the United States,"

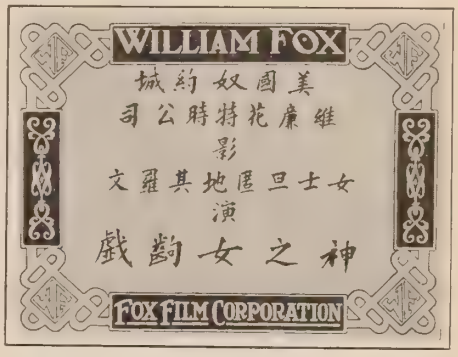
"The contention is that inasmuch as this filled cheese was manufactured under contract for export, and was in fact exported, the tax of 1 per cent. per pound prescribed by Section 9, Article 1, of the Constitution, which reads: 'No tax or duty shall be laid on any articles exported from any State.'



"Subjecting filled cheese manufactured for the purpose of export to the same tax as all other filled cheese is casting no tax or duty on articles exported, but is only a tax or duty on the manufacturing of articles in order to prepare them for export. While that which is asked in this case is the return of a manufacturing tax, there is nothing in the constitutional provision to distinguish between manufacturing and other taxes, and if the plaintiff's contention be sustained as to a manufacturing tax, it would follow that the Government was bound to refund all prior taxes imposed on articles exported. A farmer may raise cattle with the purpose of exportation, and, in fact, export them. Can it be that he is entitled to a return of all property taxes which have been cast upon those cattle? The true construction of the constitutional provision is that no burden by way of tax or duty can be cast upon the exportation of articles, and does not mean that articles exported are relieved from the prior ordinary burdens of taxation which rest upon all property similarly situated. The exemption attaches to the export, and not to the article before its exportation," and the tax was held proper and fixed accordingly.

And in Turpin v. Burgess, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835, the court said:

"The prohibition in both cases has reference to the imposition of duties on goods by reason or because of their exportation, or intended exportation, or while they are being exported. That would be laying a tax or duty on exports, or on articles exported, within the meaning of the Constitution. But a general tax, laid on all property alike, and not levied on goods in course of exportation, is not within the constitutional prohibition."

These cases are determinative of the point under consideration.

Panama Regulates Her Signs

The city council of Panama has issued a decree that in future no signs or advertisements will be permitted in public places unless the owners sign a contract with the municipality for their display. Commercial signs in front of places of business are excepted from this decree. They pay $1 a month, or if paid in advance $10 yearly.

All signs displayed in public places must be stamped, showing compliance with the provisions of this decree, and must be in Spanish, although a foreign language may be placed immediately under the official language of the country.

Violations of this decree are punishable with a fine of $10 for the first offense, and $20 in case there is a repetition.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Industry in Chicago Forges Ahead, Despite Taxes

Despite the taxes on music, on film and on admissions; despite the war, high prices and the general tendency to retrench wherever possible, Chicago has just gone through some of the most memorable weeks in its history, so far as the launching of numerous big playhouse projects is concerned.

Two weeks ago the Central Park opened on West Twelfth street and was loudly praised for its beauty. Since that opening a whole new constellation of large and beautiful houses have appeared with their winking electric displays and luxurious appointments to attract Chicago's moving picture public.

On November 7 the Madison Square theatre at Madison, near Cicero avenue, threw open its doors to a public who for some time had been watching the external construction and development of this palatial shrine of the cinema. This project was promoted by the West End Amusement Company, which controls the Crawford and the Virginia, and which together with the Crawford Trust is sponsor for the venture. The coterie of men in the companies includes William E. Heaney, James B. Heaney, William F. Merle, J. D. Murphy, H. J. Paul and John Armstrong. The Madison Square has 2,000 seats, all on one floor. The Exhibitors' Supply Company furnished the three Simplex machines which are responsible for the perfect projection, and they also supplied the double dissolvers, spotlight and Martin Rotary Converter. Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley" christened the gold screen of the Madison Square and since its opening the house has produced results which, if continued, will soon confirm the excellent judgment used in its building.

Following, the next night, on the heels of the opening of the Madison Square, the Chicago public was initiated into the mystery surrounding the interior of the Crystal on North avenue, near California. This is a half million dollar structure erected on the site of the old Crystal theatre. Schaefer Brothers Theatre Company tore down the old structure, two four-story buildings, bought adjacent property and raised this new Phoenix from the ashes of the old.

November 10 wasn't content to usher in just one theatre but marked the opening of two. The Adelphi, an Ascher house at Clark and Estes avenue, and the Broadway Strand, a Marx & Goodman house, at West Twelfth and Paulina, both threw open their portals to the public on that night.

The Adelphi is a 1500-seat house in Rogers Park. The Broadway Strand is larger, having a seating capacity of 2,100 on the main and mezzanine floors. Two of its unique features are a gymnasium for the employes and a big playroom for the children. It has a symphony orchestra of fifteen pieces which is supplemented by a massive pipe organ built by Kimball & Co.

Exchanges in Loop Face Removal to Distant Parts

That all of the film exchanges now located within the loop section of Chicago are to be finally forced to move to the outer section of the city is a foregone conclusion. However, as a result of a meeting of the sub-committee of the City Council on Wednesday, November 14, the time for forcing the removal has been extended because of the present abnormal conditions resulting from the war.

Attorneys representing the film exchanges conferred with several of the aldermen on the committee at Wednesday's meeting and the latter made it plain that film exchanges would have to finally move from the center of the city. Representatives of the exchanges pleaded that because of the practical impossibility of having a suitable building to house all of these exchanges erected outside the loop, because of the present conditions within the neighborhood circles, it could not be thought of for at least a year. The various difficulties to be met with because of lack of labor and high cost of materials, was cited, and the councilmen, while determined in their statements that the exchanges must move, agreed that there should be a longer limit of time granted. To set this time there will be a meeting held Wednesday, November 21.

The move to force the exchanges from the loop, because of their presenting a dangerous fire hazard, started several months ago. The agitation followed upon the heels of a rather disastrous and dangerous fire that broke out in the Pathe Exchange in the Consumers Building, which was preceded by another bad blaze in the Standard Film Company's exchange in the College Building.

The greater portion of the exchanges in the city, and in fact all of the big ones, are gathered within three buildings in the heart of the loop section. They are in the Consumers Building, the Mallers Building and the College Building. According to the tentative plans, a large, modern fireproof structure especially adapted for the exchanges is to be built in one of the outer reaches of the Northern or Southern section of the city.

Mutual Releases "Tobacco" Film in Chicago

A fifteen-hundred-foot special motion picture of "Our Boys at Camp Grant" has been made by a Chicago daily paper to be presented in the Chicago theatres for the benefit of a tobacco fund started to supply smokes to the soldiers in France.

The picture was released November 19, through the Chicago exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation, which is rendering free service in the handling of the film as a contribution to the patriotic fund. All of the proceeds go to the fund.

Wholesome Corporation Screens Another Fairy Tale

Explaining that the Wholesome Films Corporation had committed itself to a strong policy of children's pictures, M. J. Weisfeldt, of that concern, declared that his latest play, "Little Red Riding Hood," which is now in the process of making, will in all probability surpass "Cinderella," which he says is undergoing extraordinary success.

"I didn't know we had such a popular thing in 'Cinderella' until exhibitors began to tell me how much they liked it and asked to have their bookings extended. At the present time here in Chicago, Aschers, Lubliner & Trinz and Schoenstadt & Sons are featuring 'Cinderella' in their circuits.

"Our children pictures are going over the top so strong that we have decided to focus our attention and efforts on them so that exhibitors can inaugurate a children's night instead of a serial night if they so desire.

"There is a big movement afoot for pictures for children and when we saw the way 'Cinderella' was going we decided that another child picture would be a good follow-up. 'Little Red Riding Hood' I expect will be ready for release during the holiday season."

William Fox Gives Special Showing of "Cleopatra"

A regular grand opera audience, with all the prestige and distinction of a first night gathering, turned out at the invitation of William Fox to see a special showing of Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" at Orchestra Hall, Chicago. This production played to one of the finest audiences that ever gathered for the purpose of witnessing a picture.

As the automobiles rolled up to Orchestra Hall last Wednesday afternoon many of the most successful men and women of the city from Mayor Thompson's wife down, got out of their machines and devoted two hours of their time viewing the tremendous Fox production. And judging from the applause that followed the showing there were many present who intended to fill out the blanks given them as they entered by C. W. Eckhardt, head of the local Fox offices, upon which they were asked to write down their opinions as to the artistic excellence and historical accuracy of the film.

It is the intention of the Fox officials to gather a little thunder from some of the best people in Chicago to use against Major Funkhouser before submitting "Cleopatra" to the reckless shears of the Chicago censor. C. W. Eckhardt, in sending out the invitations, picked art societies, literature classes, archeological and historical societies, and people whose artistic sense and knowledge of history and literature would be authoritative and hard even for Major Funkhouser to overlook.

Leaks in the Loop

The Vitagraph Company has inaugurated a profit-participating scheme that has every employee of the concern on his toes all the time. The home office declares what it shall consider one hundred per cent business for each exchange and then as an incentive to each office it agrees to give fifteen per cent of the amount reached over one hundred per cent to the employees. H. J. Bayley, manager of the Chicago Vitagraph office, says that everyone connected with the local exchange is determined to do his bit to boost business over the one hundred per cent mark in order to have a melon to cut.

Frank Flaherty, manager of the Hoffman Foursquare exchange, spent last week in Minneapolis with the idea of establishing a branch office up there. He left with the intention of engaging a man with headquarters in the twin cities, even if he didn't establish a branch office.

Edward Tiden, leading man in "Upstairs and Down," playing at the Cort theatre, will enact the role of the sixth of the "Men I Might Have Married," which is being filmed at the Essanay studio, with Mary MacLane as the star.

A member of the Tell Taylor music publishing house was rather put out recently when he found exhibitors refusing to play the music of his concern because they thought it was a member of the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. He wished it understood that the firm he represented was no longer affiliated with the organization, having withdrawn.

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, left for New York last week to put on a trade showing of the New York Rialto of the latest Commonwealth film featuring Charlotte. This picture has just been finished, and Mr. Spanuth is very sanguine as to the market he expects to find for it.

G. J. Wegner is the new manager of the Austin Theatre at 5619 West Madison street and his friends are expecting him to do big things with his new project.

Luther W. Thompson, recently of the Pittsburgh Paramount office, is now in the local exchange in charge of a newly formed screen examination department. Mr. Thompson is in good hands for he is under the protecting wing of Doc Hill.

Del Goodman has earned the title of "representative de luxe" of the local Pathe office. Among other things he wears a rock that nearly blinds one and a fur coat that is very plutocratic. He says when he gets his stick and goes out to call on some exhibitor on business they think he's a Pathe actor out to address the audience.

Herbert Levy, of the Universal Film Company, has been given the reins of authority in the shipping department of that concern. Henceforth the work of directing, inspecting and patching the films that come in and go out of the Universal exchange will be under his supervision.

Cresson Smith and Max Levy of the Metro exchange have found a new vice that is now consuming their undivided interest. They have discovered the tremendous money-making possibilities of betting on the races. Only last week, the first time they tried this naughty pastime—they lost. Max Levy tried to alibi himself by saying that if he hadn't bet on Fruitcake he'd have won, but at that he got his just deserts.

Watterson Rothacker, after spending ten days at Excelsior Springs, Missouri, left last week for a two weeks' stay in New York. While riding, hunting and resting at the Missouri resort Mr. Rothacker enjoyed the company of Elliott Dexter, husband of Marie Doro, who was also down South recuperating a bit.

Charles C. Pyle, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, spent last week on a business trip that took him to New York and Philadelphia.

H. J. Bayley of the Vitagraph exchange declares that exhibitors are already inquiring about the new Vitagraph serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," which is scheduled to follow "The Fighting Trail." The latter, he reports, has enjoyed phenomenal success, and so far hasn't been cancelled by a single exhibitor although the tenth chapter is now booking.

H. J. Aldous, secretary and treasurer of the Rothacker Film Company, spent the past week on a duck shooting trip in southern Illinois. Mr. Aldous is getting his trigger finger in good working condition so that he can lay low any of the Kaiser's airplanes should they drift away from the war zone and commence their playful tactics around Diversey Boulevard.

H. W. Willard, formerly of Triangle and later of Lubliner & Trinz, now connected with Fox in Boston, will soon be back in this city again as a salesman for Metro.

R. C. Cropper, head of the Standard Film Company, announces that the William S. Hart reissues are proving very good cards for exhibitors and that "The Deemster" is enjoying large bookings.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Company, was in conference last week with officials of the local exchange. It was the first time in two years Mr. Powers had been in Chicago as his duties usually confine him closely to New York.

Minnie Nieman, Famous Players operator, when last seen was grooming a new relief operator to take the place of Mabel Sullivan, Famous favorite, who is so busy in the contract department she hasn't time to say "hello" more than once or twice in a day.

The Central Park Theatre put on a special showing of Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman God Forgot," which played at the new house the first three days of last week. There was a prologue of classical dancing and operatic singing to enhance one of the scenes of the play.

The management of the Adelphi theatre, the big Ascher house on Clark and Estes avenues, which opened last week, stood 'em out for the first performances, showing Emily Stevens in "Outwitted." This is the third Ascher house to be opened this year with a Metro picture.

H. J. Bayley states that "Within the Law" opens at the Orpheum theatre November 20 for an indefinite run. Aschur Brothers' circuit of houses will get it next. Manager Bayley declares he is writing all over the country to see if he can scrape up a few more prints of the film. He has twelve now but is still short.

George Kleine, well known picture magnate of this city, left last week for New York on a business trip. He will be gone a week. George K. Spoor, Essanay head, is also in New York.

Goldwyn is moving its offices from 110 South State street to the College Building, where executive offices are being furnished on the third floor and a shipping room and poster department are being arranged on the fifth. Alfred Hamburger, who formerly occupied the quarters on the third floor taken over by Goldwyn, has moved his executive offices to the fourteenth floor of the North American Building.

M. J. Mintz, manager of Unity Photoplays, is making a tour of the state that is proving so successful that Frank Zambreno, president of the concern, is considering the advisability of keeping him on the road all the time. So far he has placed contracts in every town he has visited.

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, who stopped off in Chicago for a few days to see some of the local exhibitors, started on his way back to New York last week. Accompanied by B. P. Schulburg, general manager of Paramount, Mr. Abrams has been making a four months' tour of the country to study film conditions.

F. M. McMillan of the Safety Projection Company, has returned from a trip to Duluth where his company is planning the production of a new portable film shooter.

Arthur E. Curtis, former managing editor of Motography, who recently went into the educational film field, has sent out his first circulars to churches, schools, and institutions interested in pictures of an educational nature and announces that he is now in a position to furnish travel pictures, religious and industrial films and picturized literary works.

H. P. Morgan, Indiana salesman for Hoffman Foursquare Pictures, was accepted for the aviation corps last week and ordered to report for duty. Rex O. Lawhead, Hoffman sales manager, who at present is holding down the reins of authority in the local office while Frank Flaherty is in Minneapolis, jumped into the breach and bombarded some of the Hoosier exhibitors with his heaviest artillery.

The heads of several patriotic organizations were given a private showing last week of the special Jewel feature, "The Man Without a Country." The State Council of Defense, the National Security League, the Military Training Association, the Navy League and the Boy Scouts were among the various societies represented.

Bruce Godshaw, new manager of the Lane Court theatre, one of the Ascher houses, upon taking over the reins of the establishment immediately inaugurated a few little innovations of his own. He announces Friday as "sweetheart night" and promises to give the kiddies candy on Saturday, while vaudeville is the added attraction for Sundays.

The local Vitagraph exchange now has a get-together meeting every Wednesday at which the employees see the new releases for the week. H. J. Bayley says stenographers are invited to bring their sweethearts and make a regular family affair of the showing, for he feels that they can write better about a picture if they have seen it and are really interested in the affairs of the company.

Frank Zambreno, president of Unity Photoplays Company, announces the purchase of the rights for Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin of two new pictures, "The Marriage Bond" and "Who's Your Neighbor?" both of which he states will have a downtown showing as soon as pending arrangements can be completed. An effort is being made to stage "The Marriage Bond," featuring Nat Goodwin, while that actor is still here playing in "Why Marry?"

Rothapfel Visits Windy City While on Vacation

Among the film men who visited Chicago last week was S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the New York Rialto, who stopped off for a day on his way to the Coast. Mr. Rothapfel was en route west to meet Doug Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin, with whom he expects to spend his vacation hunting and fishing. The New York showman glad-handed a number of his Chicago friends and explained what he thought was the trouble with many houses that were not paying as well as they ought to.

"A great many exhibitors," said Mr. Rothapfel, "could add a great deal more art to their picture presentations. I think more attention to music would increase the popularity of many a house whose owners get through counting box office receipts too soon every night. I don't know that they could all do what I have done at the Rialto. They probably couldn't. But they could at least get the artistic atmosphere in many cases and improve their music a good deal.

"Another place where exhibitors are apt to fall down," Mr. Rothapfel confided, "is in not making the house the thing. Advertising the house rather than the particular brand of picture being shown is much the better way of advertising and the sooner exhibitors find this out the better."

Illinois Women Favor Censorship of Pictures

At the convention of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, held last week at the Sinai Temple, Chicago, the women's organizations unconditionally pledged themselves to state censorship of moving pictures.

Mrs. Guy M. Blanchard, one of the speakers at the meeting, said: "There should be a motion picture chairman in every club no matter how small. It is not so bad in Chicago as it is in the small towns, but we are in constant danger. The next time you go to the movies watch the audience instead of the pictures and get in the epressions of their faces the effect of stance, vampire scenes and sensual pictures."

WHAT EXHIBITORS ARE DOING

Baltimore Theatre Inaugurates Combination Policy

There has been a change of policy at the McHenry theatre, Baltimore, Maryland, in order to give South Baltimoreans their first vaudeville entertainment. At the same time exclusive first showings of Paramount and Artcraft pictures in this section of Baltimore will be continued.

Residents of this section heretofore have been forced to go North of Baltimore street for vaudeville, but with the new policy at the McHenry it means that the highest class of variety acts will be brought right to the doors of the people of this section of Baltimore. Booking arrangements have been made by which all of the standard vaudeville numbers that are playing the principal theatres in the country will be shown here.

Three feature numbers will be shown each week, the entire bill being changed every Monday and Thursday. G. Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger is the chief agent for the selection of the best acts and not only will individual stars appear but as many of the big feature acts as are available. Five shows will be given daily, the first beginning at 2.15 p. m. and the last at about 9.30 in the evening. There will be no change in prices.

Pennsylvania Theatre Shows "Tanks" to Big Profit

As a result of the excellent drawing power of the Pathe Special, "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," the Victoria theatre of Harrisburg, Pa., turned over to the Harrisburg Patriot-Evening News' Soldiers Christmas Fund, a check for $401.35, representing 20 per cent. of their receipts of two days only. This showing was a matter of gratification with both the newspaper people and the theatre.

Hartlove, of Baltimore, Tries Novel Presentation

A novel innovation in the showing of motion pictures was arranged by James J. Hartlove, manager of the Crescent theatre, Baltimore. This novelty was conducted in conjunction with the presentation of "Damaged Goods." A portion of the play—that showing the suicide of one of the characters—is not in the film, but it was enacted on the stage at the Crescent.

The picture led up to the story of the suicide and then the curtain was raised and actors and actresses representing the screen characters appeared. The scenes showed the doctor of the play and one of the leading men with other characters of the screen story. After the scene was enacted the curtain dropped and the picture continued on the screen.

A scene of the play was arranged in one of the large windows of a South Baltimore merchant, while a number of other merchants contributed to exploiting the feature.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

WE greet you this week with the announcement that the Cinema Camera Club Ball held at the Plaza, a week ago Saturday night, was, to coin a phrase, a complete success. This leads up to the question: Was any motion picture ball ever anything else but a complete success? The which, however, we refuse to answer on advice of counsel.

FROM our secluded observation spot in a corner of the ball room we observed that no static flew until 2 a. m.

SUBSEQUENTLY it entered a lot of people's visions and some few got quite out of focus. But, after all, when one attends a ball, one isn't obliged to observe business ethics.

A GROUP gathered about John Boyle and Rial Schellinger, the cinematographers of "Cleopatra," demanding first hand news from the front. The gentleman in question declined to discuss the matter, claiming that the ladies might overhear.

FROM the November issue of the Cinema News, distributed at the ball, we lift the following:

THE CAMERAMAN'S PRAYER
By R. E. Sibley.

Give us this day our daily sunshine, light sets and less static.

Lead us not into double exposures, but endow us with less buckles and more alibis.

Forgive us for all retakes, and help us to keep our feet warm, our heads cool, the shutter open, and the titles straight.

Deliver us from the hot, stuffy dark room, and all American-made dyes.

Take from us all dark and evil, make up, and the Ford touring car.

Cover us not with fog and clouds of dust, and help us to pile up much footage.

Anoint our film, but not with oil or scratches.

Give us this day a solid tripod, a steady hand, and a full magazine.

Watch over us while we iris in and out, and in the end grant us a slow gentle fade, for thine is the plot and the scenario.

Ahem!

LARRY REID allows that if he were a film magnate he'd have this guy Bolsheviki, who has lots of pieces in the papers about himself, in pictures by this time.

OUR idea of a job for a well-trained soldier is to attempt an approach to the Rialto theatre on Sunday night.

LEANDER RICHARDSON has written Arthur James, with the idea of stilling his greatly press agented hunt seeking the answer to the query: "Who Is June?" "Who could, would or should be June but Miss June Elvidge, the fairest, sweetest, loveliest, most wondrously bewitching girl in the world, whose artistry as expressed under the searching and truthful eye of the camera betrays no flaw, no atomic imperfection, no flicker for so much as the billionth part of an instant," wrote Leander, in part, thereby enlightening the searching Arthur on a long bothersome question.

IN one issue of Essanay's series "The Wonders of Nature, Science and Industry," Grantland Rice, Maximilian Foster, Hugh Fullerton, William McGeehan and Jack Lait, all newspaper and magazine writers of note, are seen engaged in catching salmon in the waters of New Brunswick, and H. G., who sends in this interesting item, heads it "Wonders of Which?"

Oh Look What Jack Went and Done!

"TO increase the efficiency of the news standard of the Animated Weekly and Current Events (Universal), Jack Cohn introduced the psychometric test to secure a scientific measurement of the relative values of the subjects chosen. This creation of modern science was connected with the pulses of a special board of men and two thousand feet of news scenes were shown them and the results being indicated by the movement of the needle on the dial, were charted. The chart sheets were taken to a laboratory which makes a specialty of grading the inherent selling power of an article through its effect upon the beholder. . . . It is confidently expected that the experiment will be of great value in the selection of further subjects for Universal's news reels."

GRAHAM BAKER, of Vitagraph, once played bridge with Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt. Perhaps the publicity department has left out the most important part of this story, the results of the game, because Mr. Baker furnishes the answer himself by being in the motion picture business.

Alfred Is With Us and Talks of a Parroturtle

ALFRED GRAESCHEL, accompanied by his famous turtles, arrived in New York last week from San Francisco. Mr. Graeschel, who has made a specialty of training turtles for the past five years, announces that he has the greatest collection of talented tortoises ever seen. One of them, he claims, can climb up a three-foot rope. Another, he states, always walks backwards to keep the dust out of his eyes. Mr. Graeschel is now conferring with Louis Loeb, well known in film circles, for a series of motion pictures presenting the accomplishments of his pets. When seen recently Mr. Loeb parted with the information that his friend is anticipating the greatest achievement of his life, namely the crossing of a turtle with a parrot, thus obtaining a tortoise that can speak.

It seems such a little thing, so inconsequential in the production of a five reel or greater length picture, but it is the little things that are these days attracting the attention of the particular picture fan. That is the relation of the full scene to the closeup.

The closeup is generally used to bring out a certain significant point that the greater range included in the full set is unable to bring out. And so a switch from the one to the other should be absolutely continuous. But time and again have we noticed that the player expresses, in the full scene, the very emotion that he must as a consequence repeat in the closeup.

So here is a slight degree of repetition, not at all serious to be sure, but just prominent enough to be noticeable. It would certainly work to the good of the picture if the action was halted in the full set before the emotion in question was expressed and then the camera moved for the close scene. And there are a number of other ways that might be adopted in order to make the action as continuous as is humanly possible between two such scenes.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

MONTAGU LOVE, star of World-Pictures Brady-Made, served as auctioneer at a smokes-for-soldiers affair recently, and when he could not get a bid for a basket of fruit, started things off by offering $5 himself. This woke everybody up, and the basket was finally auctioned off to Love for $40.

CHARLES EMERSON COOK was authority for the announcement last week that Mabel Ballin was asked by Mary Garden to help the latter apply the make-up necessary for appearing before the screen in Goldwyn's "Thais."

EVA TANGUAY, it is said, wore a speedometer on her person one day while making scenes for her first picture, "The Wild Girl," for Lewis J. Selznick, and it registered seven miles when the whistle blew at night. Miss Tanguay thereby won a bet from a crank who asserted there was no action in picture-making.

FOR Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Lifted Cross," one of the most elaborate interiors ever devised for a screen play was built in the studio in Fifty-fourth street.

DIRECTOR CHARLES J. BRABIN, of Metro, staged a real fox hunt on Long Island recently for scenes in "Red, White and Blue Blood," with Bushman and Bayne. Those who took part in the chase during the two days on location were, besides the stars, Adella Barker, Arthur Housman, Wm. H. Tooker, Cecil Fletcher, Duncan McRae, Jack Raymond, T. Tomamato and Edna Hume.

EMMY WEHLEN, a Metro star, has gone South for a vacation before starting work on her next feature. The star's most recent Metro wonderplay is "The Outsider."

THOUGH the story suggests otherwise, the character of Gaston Olaf, which Harold Lockwood is playing in his new picture, "The Avenging Trail," now in the making under direction of Francis Ford —Fred J. Balshofer supervising—is said to be a thoroughly American type.

JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG, the artist, is appearing in a series of pictures featuring types of attractive American girls, from stories of his own writing. The productions are being made at the Edison Studios, for release under the series title, "Girls You Know."

THE reappearance of Jean, the Vitagraph dog star, in the second starring subject of Madame Petrova, is expected to elicit a hail of delight from many who remember the canine performer in stunts while with Florence Turner.

PROPERTY men at the Famous Players Studio in New York recently constructed two gigantic bats for a scene in a new feature of which Pauline Frederick is the star. They were so genuine looking that Harry Lee almost decided to take them to the Museum of Natural History.

HELENE CHADWICK has completed the filming of "Nalauhka," under the direction of George Fitzmaurice at the Pathe-Solax Studio. She had but one day's pause before starting her next picture—and on that day she had three photographers snapping photographs of her

BEVERLY BAYNE has written a booklet called "The Soldier In Her Kitchen," following the general idea of food conservation. Miss Bayne is said to have a housewife's delight in trying a new receipt.

T. E. LETENDRE, publicity representative for various film stars, who recently returned from a business trip to Boston, Indianapolis and Chicago, is back at his office in the Times Building, after being laid up with a sprained foot.

BABY IVY WARD, Metro's three-year-old emotional actress, has been in motion pictures since she was six months old. She has appeared with Bushman and Bayne, Ethel Barrymore and Mabel Taliaferro.

GEORGE WALSH, the athletic motion picture star, was last week under the doctor's care because of his effort to save Regina Quinn, his leading woman, from a fire in one of the William Fox Studios at Fort Lee. At the time of the accident Walsh did not realize he had injured himself seriously, and went back to work. Later he was overcome.

PRACTICALLY all the exterior scenes in "The Heart of a Lion," William Farnum's forthcoming Standard Picture, were taken near his home in Sag Harbor, L. I.

LUELLA PARSONS, photoplay editor of a Chicago daily, spent an entire day recently visiting the William Fox Studios in New Jersey, and chatting with the Fox stars who are at work there. Miss Parsons went first to the Lincoln Studios, where she met Theda Bara, who is under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Walter Sanford, Fox press agent, did the introducing.

MADGE KENNEDY and her Goldwyn company, for proper atmosphere and exteriors in "Oh, Mary, Be Careful," went to Georgia in search of peach blossoms.

MAE MARSH and Mabel Normand, Goldwyn stars, were twin attractions at the recent Army and Navy Bazaar in Grand Central Palace, New York. They posed for the making of a special film so that the crowd could see the actual process of the making of a photoplay. Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, accompanied the stars to the Bazaar.

WHEN ARTHUR MOMAX, cartoonist, recently visited the Famous Players Studio in New York, where Paramount productions are under way, and expressed to William J. Scully, assistant to Director Robert G. Vignola, a desire to try his hand in the films, his wish was granted. He annexed a dress suit and went in with the extras. The picture stars Pauline Frederick, and will reach the screen after the holidays.

MONTAGU LOVE has been booked by Manager Thomas D. Soriero, of the Park theatre, Boston, for a personal appearance there shortly. He will also visit Lowell, New Bedford and Providence while on the trip.

WALLACE Reid will come to New York shortly, for the first time in six years, to film a production at the Studios of Paramount in the East. Kenneth McGaffey, in charge of publicity for Famous Players-Lasky, on the West Coast, will make the trip with Reid, and will return to the Coast after looking New York over.

GEORGES ARCHAINBAUD is staging a feature picture at the Peerless Studio in West Fort Lee with French, German and Belgian soldiers in it. The director served under the French flag and knows soldiers when he sees them. Montagu Love is star of the picture being made.

ETHEL BARRYMORE, her director, Frank Reicher, and a company of Metro players have deserted the Eastern Studios for the time being, having gone to Savannah, Ga., for exterior scenes for the forthcoming Metro feature, "An American Widow."

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

STATE rights subjects now being made at the Paralta Studio, are to be released under the trade name of Selexart, it was made known last week. At this time three pictures for this brand are being made. Howard Hickman is being starred in one at present known as "Aristocracy," which is being directed by Eliot Howe. The film story is based on heredity. Rhea Mitchell is working under the direction of Wallace Worsley in a story titled "On the Level," which is also for this brand. Reginald Barker is making an Alaskan story starring Clara Williams, which at present is known as "Carmen of the Klondike." Edward Coxen is playing opposite Miss Williams. The story for this photoplay is by Monte Katterjohn, who also prepared the scenario and is author of the Dorothy Dalton film of this nature, titled "The Flame of the Yukon."

Dorothy Dalton Subject Rushed

Producing activity at the Thomas H. Ince Studios was last week centered on the Dorothy Dalton subject, as it has been decided to release the second picture in which she appeared third, and so it was necessary for Director R. William Neill to complete "Flare-up Sal," so that prints could be delivered to exchanges four or five weeks earlier than at first planned. The cause of the change is that "Love Letters," Miss Dalton's second release, gave her much of the same style of role as that played in her first Paramount-Ince subject, "The Price Mark." In "Flare-up Sal," a story of California in the early fifties, William Conklin and Thurston Hall are principals of the supporting company. Following the completion of "Flare-up Sal," Director Neill, Miss Dalton and company will leave for Honolulu, where exteriors for the next subject will be made, the story and scenario having been completed and are now ready for production.

Earl Rodney has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince as leading man to play opposite Enid Bennett in her first Paramount release, now in the making under the direction of Jerry Storm. Rodney was formerly with the Mack Sennett-Keystone organization, where he played juveniles, and more recently was with Triangle-Keystone.

Irvin Willat, a Thomas H. Ince director, is now in charge of a mystery company. He is engaged in the making of a subject which no one about the studio, save Ince and the laboratory men knows anything about—even the publicity department is in the dark. For the past week Willat and players have been busy at San Pedro, where Los Angeles harbor is located, and it is hinted that a subject is being made for the government.

William S. Hart and company arrived home recently from a three weeks' camp at Hessen, in Chatsworth Park, where all exteriors for the Western railroad story, "The Blood Hound," were filmed. It will take a few days to make the remaining scenes of the play at the Hart Studio in Hollywood, and then work will be started on the next subject, being written now by John G. Hawks, who prepared the stories and scenarios for several of the Western actor's most successful photoplays.

The studio of the Charley Chaplin Film Company in Hollywood is rapidly nearing a state where it will be possible for Chaplin to begin the filming of his first comedy for the First National Exhibitors' Association. Syd. Chaplin, John Jasper, and Carl Robinson are principals of the business organization now at work at the new plant, and it is expected the first shooting will be done during the coming week.

"Smiling" Billy Mason, Who Puts Some of the Sunshine in Christie Films

New Pickford Film Finished

The Artcraft subject, "Stella Maris," adapted from the William J. Locke story, which is the next starring vehicle for Mary Pickford, has been completed by Director Marshall Neilan. Conway Tearle is Miss Pickford's leading man, and the principal character role is taken by Herbert Standing. Following the making of the last scenes for this film, Miss Pickford, accompanied by President Adolf Zukor, his son, Eugene, Miss Frances Marion, scenario writer for Miss Pickford, and Paul Dowling of the Lasky publicity department, went to San Diego.

Rollin S. Sturgeon has been added to the directorial forces of the Morosco-Pallas Studio, and is now at work on the filming of a story which will have Vivian Martin as star. At the same studio, Director William D. Taylor is making the final scenes for a subject with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff.

Cablegrams from George Melford, who with Sessue Hayakawa has gone to the Hawaiian Islands, brings the report that the company secured some excellent effects aboard ship, and plans for invading several semi-savage islands were made. By this week Melford and troop should be en route back to the United States, as transportation plans provide they would spend but ten days on the island.

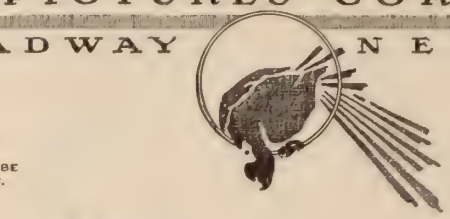
Wallace Reid has been granted a vacation to go east about the first of December, and plans are now being made for stops in cities where there are Paramount-Artcraft exchanges, and for Mr. Reid to make personal appearances at the theatres. Kenneth McGaffey, in charge of publicity at the Lasky Studio, will accompany Mr. Reid and manage the personal appearance tour.

Le Saint Directs Mix Feature

The Tom Mix Fox unit begun work this week when Edward J. LeSaint, one of the best known directors of the West Coast colony, was engaged as director to make the Western subjects in which Mix is to be starred. The first to be filmed is "Cupid's Checkerboard," adapted from George Scarsborough's novel of the same name. Scarsborough, it will be remembered, is author of "The Lure." This is a story that opens in the Middle West, and has many scenes laid in the Rocky Mountains. Wanda Petit, who came to the Coast several weeks ago and has appeared in one subject, "This Is The Life," has been named as leading woman for Mix.

Frank Lloyd has selected Genevieve Blynn, G. Raymond Nye and Joseph Manning as principal supports for Jewel Carmen in the Alaskan story he has just begun the filming of for Fox.

Bertram Bracken is at work on a new Gladys Brockwell subject which deals with the experiences of an American woman who was in Berlin at the time the United States broke with Germany. It will be of the nature of a patriotic appeal to Americans, with Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby, Colin Chase and Willard Louis in the important parts.



Another of the Fox child pictures has been completed for release. This is "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," which has George Stone and Gertrude Messenger as the principals. One of the most important sets for this was of a Persian nature, and is distinctly new and attractive, as well as very expensive. S. A. and C. M. Franklin are now working with their scenario writer, Bernard McConville, in the preparation of stories which will be taken up shortly.

Triangle Starts Nine Subjects

Within the next few days nine Triangle companies will begin the filming of new subjects, scenarios now being in preparation for the several directors of the Culver City studios who have been waiting for continuity. The big staff under Julian Johnson, editor and chief, and Frank Beresford, scenario editor, have been extremely busy recently. Jack Cunningham is writing an original titled "Evidence" which is of the nature of a mystery story.

E. Mason Hopper will next direct a story titled "Mr. Butterfly," now being made, which is a reversal of the story of "Madam Butterfly," by John Luther Long. The cast for this will be named within a few days.

Hayden Talbot is writing continuity for an American life story, "The Girl Nobody Knew," which is an adaptation from his stage play "Oh Gee!" Belle Bennett will be starred in this, and the subject will probably be made by Director Walter Edwards. "Oh Gee!" was one of Oliver Morosco's most successful plays. Edwards was leading man in the original stage production.

At Hartville ranch, Cliff Smith and Western Triangle actor Roy Stewart are working on "The Law's Outlaw." The screen version for this story was written by Alvin W. Neitz and is an adaptation from the story of the same name by Ethel and James Dorrance. Fritzi Ridgeway is to continue as leading woman for this production, and Edward Brady will take the part of heavy.

Within a few days the photoplay, "Betty Takes a Hand," which has Olive Thomas and Charles Gunn in the leading roles, will be completed, and Director Jack Dillon will film "Limousine Life" which has been prepared. This is from a magazine story of the same name.

Texas Guinan has returned from New York where she recently went to replenish her wardrobe, and is to play lead in a western story, "The Gun Woman." This has not been assigned to any director, but filming, it is understood, will be started within the next few days.

Having completed "Because of the Woman," the first seven-reel subject to be produced by Triangle, Jack Conway is now preparing to begin the filming of "Real Folks." This is one of the prize stories secured by the Triangle in the Photoplay Magazine contest, and the screen adaptation has been arranged by Catherine Carr, a recent addition to the Triangle scenario staff who was formerly with Lasky.

Lynn Reynolds, who has achieved success by combining travelogue and story, is shortly to take up the making of a photoplay that will be laid in the several oil districts in and about Los Angeles. Reynolds is now completing the scenes for "The Gown of Destiny," which is spoken of as a war drama. In the filming of this attention was given to the small details to get them exactly accurate. Director Reynolds had the assistance of an American soldier, Frank Dudley, who served with the French on the west front, and was discharged after seeing the battle of the Marne because of inhaling poisonous gases at Ypres. Dudley brought with him to America, a number of souvenirs he secured on the battle line, including costumes of German, French and English soldiers. These were duplicated for this film. His new story was written by Wilbur Hall, contributor of the Saturday Evening Post.

Universal Activity Wanes

Universal City has taken on the appearance of a different place. The number of companies working there has been reduced to nine engaged in making five-reel subjects, and three on serials. This is smaller than the number at any time in the past three years or more.

Ida May Park has completed the filming of "Broadway Love," starring Dorothy Phillips, and Allen Holubar will next direct this actress with the same supporting company which includes William Stowell, Lon Chaney, William Burress and others.

The subject now holding the attention of Mae Murray, directed by Robt. Leonard, has been titled "The Eternal Columbine," which consists of five reels written by H. S. Bickers. Kenneth Harlan has been chosen to play opposite Miss Murray, and Albert Roscoe, Joe Girard and Paul Weigel are principals of the photoplay. During the past week the Leonard company has been working in the mountains securing the exteriors for this film. On one occasion Miss Murray fell off a cliff, and was caught by the hair by Director Leonard.

Ella Hall and Emory Johnson have completed their work as co-stars in "Green Magic," written by Waldemar Young, and directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. Gretchen Lederer, Harry Holden and E. A. Warren are in this company.

Eliot J. Clawson has written another semi-western subject for Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford which has been titled "The Highest Card." The company under the direction of Rupert Julian are now at Seven Oaks, California, working on this subject.

Director Stuart Paton has begun the filming of "The Green Seal" which stars Carmel Meyer. Harry Carter, Ashton Dearholt, Frank Deshom, Frank Tokanaga, Alfred Allen and Betty Schade are appearing in the film.

"Back To the Right Trail" is a new five-reel western drama in which Harry Carey is appearing under the direction of Jack Ford. It is adapted from the Fredrick R. Bechdolt story, who formerly contributed to Kalem. Molly Malone is to be the leading woman, and the big cast of western characters includes Vester Pegg, Helen Wright, Martha Mattox, L. M. Wells, John Cook and H. Tembrooke.

A new serial company is to be organized within the next few days. This will be directed by Jacques Jaccard who is now preparing scenario and story.

"The Bull's Eye" Company, in charge of James W. Horne, is now working on the fourth episode, and Director Harry Harvey of "The Mystery Ship" serial which has Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, is at work on the tenth episode.

Keystone Postpones Moving

The Keystone-Triangle organization has become so accustomed and delighted with its surroundings at the 4500 Sunset boulevard studio, that it has weekly delayed pilgrimage to the new plant at Culver City, the latest reports being to the effect that moving day will not occur now for at least two weeks. The present plant has been equipped with lighting devices, and if necessary they can work there throughout the entire winter.

Billy Franey and Milburn Moranti, formerly members of the Joker Company at Universal City, were recently added to the Keystone organization, and this week Gale Henry becomes a member of the same troop. These three have played together continously for almost three years, and they will be in the same films with Keystone.

New Faces at American

There are a number of new faces at the American at Santa Barbara, Studio Manager J. R. Crone having made a number of special engagements for productions now in the making. Jack Mower is to again play opposite Marguerita Fischer in "Molly Go Get 'Em," now being filmed by Director Lloyd Ingraham. Hal Clements is to play an important character part, and True Boardman takes the role of a French crook. Other new players for the American in this subject are Margaret Allen, Alfred Ferguson and Emma Kluge.

The Mary Miles Minter Company is at work on "Mlle. Tiptoe," which is a screen play prepared by Elizabeth Mahoney from the Arthur Barthelet story. Filming of this by Director Henry King is now under way.

The William Russell Company has left the Santa Barbara studio for two or three weeks, which will be spent at Oxnard, California, where a number of big Aztex sets have been completed for the film play "In Bad." Around these settings will be staged several big fights for possession of the hidden treasure.

Metro Companies Busy

Both Metro companies are continuing on subjects recently begun. "The Tiger Cat," adapted from the novel by the same name by H. P. Keeler, has kept the Viola Dana Company at the studio working on interiors for this Western production which has Clifford Bruce, who has appeared opposite Miss Dana for the past several releases, as her leading man. Mabel Van Buren has been engaged for an important part, as has also Clifford Mack. Director John Collins is in charge of the filming of this.

Additional eastern battle front scenes were made by Director Tod Browning for the Edith Storey subject, "The Legion of Death," in which several hundred extras were used. These scenes represent the first battle in which the Russians took part in the present world war.

William Parker, author, has been engaged by B. A. Rolfe, and is now preparing the continuity from the story, "Weaver of Dreams," by Myrtle Reed; which is to be the next subject for Viola Dana. Mr. Parker has been identified with several Western companies, including Fox, Triangle, American and Universal, and has a number of popular subjects to his credit.

Sennett Comedy Named

"The Kitchen Lady," is the name selected for the Sennett-Paramount comedy now being filmed by Director Eddie Cline with a cast including Louise Fazenda, Glen Cavender and Slim Somerville, together with Eva Thatcher and Alice Maison. Cavender in this comedy takes the part of a bear trainer but he was not as successful in this class of work as the finished film will show, and as the result of one encounter with Bruno he received a number of painful wounds on the arm.

The picture which has had the attention of Director Clarence G. Badger for the past two weeks has been titled "His Hidden Purpose." Chester Conklin is the featured player of this and the supporting players are Marie Prevost, Neal Burns and Gene Rogers.

While Clarence Sovern was riding a horse down a hill at full speed for scenes in the Sheriff Nell Sennett comedy William Campbell is directing, with Polly Moran in the featured part, the horse fell, and Sovern was badly injured. He has been in a local hospital for several days and it is feared he is internally injured. Ben Turpin plays a most important part in this celluloid capsule of laughs.

Mena Picture Ready by Christmas

The board of directors of the Mena Film company met last week at the Mena plant in Hollywood to discuss production of "By Super-Strategy," the multiple-reel feature now being staged by Director Howard Gaye. Those attending were John E. Kuehn, New York city; Dr. L. W. Jones, Chicago, and Foreign Director Robert R. Hollister, Dayton, Ohio. The film, it is stated now, will be released about Christmas.

Paralta Stars Hard at Work

Several changes have been made at the Paralta Studios, partially due to the return of J. Warren Kerrigan, who recently met with an accident in which bones of one leg were broken. Mr. Kerrigan is now sufficiently recovered to resume work and Oscar Apfel is continuing with the production in which Kerrigan is starred, "The Turn of a Card." This is now almost finished so far as the filming of scenes is concerned.

Oscar Apfel was originally selected to direct Henry Walthal, but upon the return of Kerrigan, Rex Ingram was engaged. The first Walthal subject is "His Robe of Honor," adapted from the story of the same name by E. S. and J. F. Dorrance. The scenario is by Julian Lamothe, late staff writer for the American at Santa Barbara. Mary Charleson is playing opposite Mr. Walthal in this subject.

Reginald Barker, whose latest work was directing Bessie Barriscale in "Madam Who," is now working with the scenario department and technical staff in preparing for the filming of a subject which will offer Clara Williams as star.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Rise of Jennie Cushing"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ELSIE FERGUSON'S second appearance on the picture screen occurring in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," an adaptation of the novel by Mary S. Watts, results in a second distinct triumph for her. Again have the art of the director and the appreciation of the fine points of the book evinced by the adaptor aided her in attaining her success, but good production, good preparation and all it is Miss Ferguson's performance that dominates. It is the same skill that was unanimously acclaimed as without parallel in "Outcast," the play that has made "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," the picture.

The depth, the delicate shadings, the beauty of personality and of feature that she brings to the role of Jennie Cushing are unified, a rare treat. She manages to express in the mute eloquence demanded, but so seldom obtained, by the secreen, the deepest emotions by the mere movement of her eyes, the turn of her head, or the compression of her lips. Hers is indeed an art that brings subtlety, the lack of which is so often condemned by the artists who object to the motion picture, to the realms of the silent drama.

The adaptation of the book devised by Charles Maigne is replete with opportunities for the star. Mr. Maigne's system of scenario construction is singular in comparison with that of other scribes of the screen. He shapes his story so that the action is always progressing. Of burdensome detail there is none, of colorful detail there is aplenty. But smoothly and swiftly he works from one high light of his plot to the next, obliterating by his evident knowledge of his art any decrease in interest after a single crisis.

As for Maurice Tourneur, his work is so well known that mention of its perfection is superfluous. He handles individual scenes with a fine sense of their dramatic effect and the atmosphere he injects into his work is realistic to the last degree. To cite the episode in which Jennie and Meigs are glimpsed in Europe, working at the latter's painting in first one town and then the next, is to give a fair idea of the manner in which Mr. Tourneur has treated his whole work. This series of scenes depicts the two travelers in a blissful state of happiness. Though unmarried, the attitude they take toward one another combines the atmosphere of true love and friendship that is beautiful in its effect. It is action calling for the most unaffected performances and the most artistic of staging and Mr. Tourneur has presented the man and woman before a background of exquisite taste.

Supporting Miss Ferguson in the opposite part is Elliott Dexter, who does probably the best work of his career as the artist. Fania Marinoff, Frank Goldsmith and Edith McAlpin are others.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jennie (Elsie Ferguson), granddaughter of a disorderly woman (Mae Bates) and without a name, is placed in a reformatory to spend the early days of her girlhood, and is as a result forever branded with a suggestion of infamy. When eighteen she is put in charge of a kindly old farmer and his wife. For appearances sake she adopts the name of Cushing. After a time Jennie, ambitious, learns the intricacies of the profession of ladies' maids and secures employment in this capacity with Edith Gerrard (Sallie Delatore), a society girl. She accompanies her mistress on her visits to the studio of Donelson Meigs (Elliott Dexter), an artist at work on Edith's portrait. He asks her to pose for a Madonna, and the upshot of it is that they two fall in love. Meigs urges her to marry him, but she, realizing the gap between their social positions and the shadow that her early career will cast upon her, refuses. Instead she aserts her willingness to come to him body and soul but not in name. He accepts and together they travel the continent of Europe, he on his commissions and she as his helpmate. They live in a perfect atmosphere of combined love and platonic friendship until they meet Meigs's aunt (Isabel Vernon), a conventional old maid who believes altogether in "family." She relates to her nephew the facts of Jennie's past. Astounded he returns to their hotel to find her gone. A note informs him that she has anticipated his aunt's mission. For two years Meigs searches for her, during which time Jennie, discovering herself an outcast, devotes herself to the care of homeless children. At length his long search is rewarded. In repentance he asks her to marry him, but she, still believing in their different stations in life, bids him go with her heart breaking. But he returns and the foolish prejudice of society is swept away —the man and woman united.

Through an oversight the name of Charles Miller, director of "The Secret of the Storm Country" (Select) was omitted from the review which appeared in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Liberal credit is due Mr. Miller for his fine work in handling the production of this picture.

"Draft 258"

(Metro—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

THIS big seven-reel production, directed by William Christy Cabanne for Metro as a sequel to "The Slacker," surpasses even that successful picture in intensity, force and patriotic appeal. Built upon the problem of the draft, and showing the difference of opinion that entered nearly every American home as the numbers started coming from the great bowl in Washington, "Draft 258" presents a succession of patriotic wallops that will make any American audience sit up with pride over the entry of the United States in the world war.

This spectacular successor to "The Slacker" will probably outdo even the latter as a box office asset, for it deals in a broad and faithful way with one of the greatest events in American history, weaves in and out the story of the part a young girl played in one locality, and bares the workings of German intrigue and the eagerness of German agents to enlist the conscientious objector and pacifist as a tool to be used against the United States.

It is a picture that spreads the doctrine of Americanism and offers an appeal that will go a long way toward convincing skeptics, pacifists and socialists of the necessity of America's being in the war—and with that granted—of the necessity of the draft. Mabel Taliaferro heads an excellent cast, and as the girl fired with patriotism and the spirit of Joan of Arc, she makes slackers ashamed of themselves and finally even gets her brother, a conscientious objector, to enlist. The play is given an excellent production and ought to prove one of the big successes of the season.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Alden (Mabel Taliaferro) lives with her mother (Sue Balfour) and two brothers, Matthew, a soap box orator (Earle Brunswick), and George (Eugene Borden). She and Matthew and John Graham, her sweetheart (Walter Miller), all work together in a department store. Mary is intensely patriotic, and, when the draft comes, tries to get her younger brother to enlist. Matthew, however, preaches pacifism to him, and finally decides to harangue the crowds on the folly of the United States going to war.

German agents hear Matthew talk and decide to use him. He is introduced to Amiel Van Bierman, a wealthy banker, and one of the higher-ups of the Kaiser in this country, who is spreading German propaganda. Van Bierman gets Matthew to address a so-called peace meeting, and the latter lets his sister, Mary, have the floor to make a speech. She turns a withering verbal fire upon the audience, who are forced to listen at the point of her younger brother's revolver. Eugene has been prevailed upon by his sister, and instead of regretting the fact that he pulled No. 258 in the draft, he considers it an act of Providence to be so honored.

Van Bierman and his agents slip up behind Eugene, overpower him, and pack Mary Alden away to their headquarters in an auto, where they lock her in a room. Matthew is admitted to a special meeting of the higher-ups, who feel that they can trust him, and he sees the tool they are making of him and he revolts. He is knocked down and gagged. In the meantime Eugene, who followed the spies, slipped off to a nearby army camp and came back with a battalion of soldiers, who capture the nest of German agents, free Matthew, who later enlists, and get Mary out of the clutches of Van Bierman. And as she recovers from her fright she finds she has been rescued by her own khaki clad lover, John Graham.

"The Hidden Hand"

(Pathe—First and Second Episodes)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS a writer of detective stories, both for the animated screen and the printed page, Arthur B. Reeves has long since given demonstration of an ability sufficient to place him in a class with the top-notchers at the very least and, at a slightly less moderate estimate, in a class occupied solely by himself. So the absorbing elements of mystery present in the opening episodes of "The Hidden Hand," made interestingly intricate by surprising innovations and from time to time slightly cleared by convincing analysis may well be expected to run the full length of the serial.

The initial number, comprised of two reels, brings to light a murder mystery, and although it is not so difficult to guess the party who committed or promoted the crime, the finger of suspicion points to any number of comparatively innocent persons probably implicated. The case is taken up by a prominent secret service agent and things promise to be exceedingly lively for him as the serial waxes older. Indeed, as far as that is concerned, they are exceedingly lively for him in the four reels of the first two episodes, but a reviewer is ever at a loss to prevent himself from assuming a prophetic attitude with opening serial numbers, particularly when the action gets under way as brilliantly as it does in "The Hidden Hand."

The serial introduces a four-star cast, two of which have had thorough experience in this line heretofore, and two of which give promise of becoming just as popular as the most idolized of Pathe's serial stars. Sheldon Lewis and Arline Pretty are the first two and Doris Kenyon and Mahlon Hamilton the second. Mr. Lewis is probably the most popular of serial villains. Miss Kenyon is a fascinating heroine, Miss Pretty disturbingly mysterious and Mr. Hamilton a good appearing detective with a nasty appearing double.

Then, least we forget, there is—???????—The Hidden Hand! Who is the Hidden Hand? Well, we should say for a first guess, Sheldon Lewis again, but far be it from us to betray secrets. The idea is that the other members of the cast don't know that Mr. Lewis, presuming of course, that it is he, is doubling up on them. Therein lies a clever trick of scenario writing that scores heavily in the serial's favor. This person wears the most horrible looking gauntlet conceivable. It is of leather, bound with brass and covered with knobs and long nails from one of which oozes a poisonous gas! Also this Hidden Hand person is proficient in plastic surgery. He is able to change the contour of any face, molding it into an exact counterpart of any other he may select. If these attributes fail to constitute a perfect mystic-villain, then we know of none that will.

Charles A. Logue collaborated with Mr. Reeves on the scenarios and James Vincent is directing. Properties, photography, lighting, etc., are altogether suitable and well—they're off!

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"The Gaunlet of Death," the first episode, relates of the birth of a girl in the Russian Empire. Her father is the Grand Duke. A mad monk informs the Czar that after eighteen years her beauty will result in the ruin of his kingdom. Whitney, an American millionaire, is given the child to care for.

Eighteen years later he is mysteriously murdered, and the Grand Duke come to claim his daughter, fatally wounded. Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon) supposedly the girl in question is horror struck. Suspicion points to Dr. Scarley (Sheldon Lewis), her fiance, to Verda Crane (Arline Pretty), Whitney's ward, to Abner, his brother, and to a villainous brute (Mahlon Hamilton), double of Jack Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton), a detective. The cause for the murder seems to have been to procure a certain jeweled box left in Whitney's possession by the Czar, the key to which is a locket worn by Doris. The box contains the finger prints of the baby, which will serve to identify the girl. The box falls into the clutches of the Hidden Hand after the murder. He and his henchman attempt to procure the locket. The double of the detective makes it easy for the Hidden Hand to enter. This mysterious character is about to poison Doris with the fumes from his gauntlet when the first episode closes.

"Counterfeit Faces," the second episode, brings Ramsey to the rescue of Doris. The Hidden Hand escapes from the house, and Ramsey pursues. He loses track of his prey, but suddenly comes upon Dr. Scarley. His suspicions are aroused. Verda is captured by the Hidden Hand, and told that she is the late Whitney's real daughter. Verda resolves to assist the monster in his scheme for a share of the fortune it will undoubtedly bring her. She admits the Hidden Hand to her room that night. He pours liquid air down the radiator pipe, which settles in the heater in Doris' room. In the explosion that follows both she and her enemy are knocked unconscious. When their senses are restored Doris attempts escape, but is overtaken by the Hidden Hand, and carried to his lair. Here he takes the locket from her neck and inserts it in the box as the episode closes.

"The Little Princess"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MARY PICKFORD in curls and short dresses, some few snatches of her engaging comedy, a few less of pathos and a beautiful production are the principal if not the only ingredients of "The Little Princess," an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's story. When a star has attained such prominence as has Miss Pickford, one weak picture can not easily injure her reputation and so "The Little Princess," though it is undeniably weak, is not uneradicable. The facts of the case are that it was written for children in the first place and that its present appeal includes few others but children. The main reason being that it is pretty alone; failing in dramatic quality and disappointing because of a constant slight suggestion of surprise which is never realized.

There will be those whose appreciation of Mary Pickford, whose memories of Mrs. Burnett's book, will surmount the lack of plot material in the picture version. They will be mightily pleased by Sara's unaffected sweetness as brought out by the star, by her childish pranks, her wholesome philosophy, her experiences with Becky, the slavey, but when the last foot of film has slipped through the machine, they will hardly be unable to express, perhaps only to themselves, a feeling that Miss Pickford chose an extraordinarily slim vehicle in "The Little Princess."

Frances Marion, who has prepared a number of the star's scenarios, made the adaptation of the book. Handicapped by the lack of picture material her talent has not been allowed its full scope but what she has done she has done well. Marshall Neilan endowed it with a rich production. The story of Ali Baba and the Forty thieves, ever so slightly tinged with a note of burlesque with which a child would naturally color it as related by Sara to her companions, is in itself a miniature extravaganza. This interpolation, however, with Miss Pickford assuming the role of a slave girl, has little if anything in common with the career of Sara. The atmosphere of refinement that all of Mr. Neilan's pictures include is by no means lacking here. Settings and photographic effects are all that could be desired.

Zasu Pitts as Becky has a part in heavy contrast to Miss Pickford's and handles it with a real sense of its value. Norman Kerry as Sara's father, in the few times he appears, never is able to strike a paternal attitude. The support, including some score of children is adequate.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sara Crewe (Mary Pickford) is put in a fashionable London boarding school by her father (Norman Kerry), a wealthy English army officer. Little Sara is virtually the life of the school. While she is celebrating her birthday word is received that Captain Crewe has died in India from the shock caused by the loss of his fortune through the supposed deceit of his partner. The matron immediately reduces Sara to the rank of slavey and she is obliged to work hand in hand with Becky (Zasu Pitts) a girl who has never known what money is. Into the house next door moves a man with an Indian servant. From his attic window the servant watches Sara and Becky in their barely furnished room. He reports to his employer and at Thanksgiving the two girls discover a spread laid for them by the Englishman, who has entered their room over the roof. The matron discovers them over the repast and scolds them. The Englishman enters and explains. He lets it be known that he was the late Captain Crewe's partner, that the report that he double crossed the officer was a mistake, and that he has long been searching for Sara, who is after all fabulously wealthy again. So Sara and Becky move into the house next door, where at Christman time they hold a royal reception for the poor children, while the spirit of Captain Crewe looks on.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"BURIED ALIVE," the twelfth episode of this serial introduces an adventure separate and apart from the main plot as have its immediate predecessors. Perry Mason and his associates plan to confine Ilma in an insane asylum in order to prevent her from searching further for the seven pearls. Their plan is an intricate one and finally they succeed in imprisoning her. One of the inmates of the asylum, however, shows her a way out of the building. She secrets herself in a cave until nightfall when she believes she may make her escape. But Mason and his aide are right outside to catch her when she emerges and when the episode closes she is once more in their power.

"Over Here"

(World—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"OVER HERE" is a two-reel pictorial review of the activities in connection with the erection of the Government cantonments at Camp Pike, the site occupying 3,000 acres of land near Little Rock, Arkansas. The pictures were taken under the supervision of a representatve body of citizens of Little Rock and are released on the World program. "Over Here" will be a worthy addition to any and all exhibitors' programs. It is timely, instructive and presents a pictorial review of activities in which we are all interested—the work of Uncle Sam in housing and instructing the young men who are the protectors of freedom.

The work that has been accomplished in bringing into being this city of soldiers can be described only with the descriptive, marvelous. In fifty-two days—from June to July of the current year—a city has been made from a wilderness. The camera reveals, in the first scenes, a sweeping panorama of a vast wilderness on the outskirts of Arkansas' capital city. Then an army of workmen are introduced and at the expiration of less than two months, miles of railroad are laid, hundreds of buildings are erected, drainage systems are laid, macadamized roads are built, warehouses capable of housing millions of dollars worth of food and supplies are erected, and a modern, sanitary settlement with accommodations for more than 40,000 soldiers is the result—all this accomplished in fifty-two days.

"Over Here" takes you from the beginning of this work to the end and every detail in the erection of this modern city is shown. Intimate views of Secretary of War Baker; Major John R. Farchyce, constructing engineer and the brains behind this work; the citizens of Little Rock who raised the money to purchase this tract of land and presented it to the Government, and the vast army of workmen who accomplished these wonders in construction—all are shown in this worth-while picture which the exhibitor of every neighborhood can book and be assured that he will have presented a picture that every patron has enjoyed.

"Her Hour"

(World Film—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE shop girl who loses her position because of her virtue.

Who is bereaved of mother and brother at one blow.

Whose confidence is betrayed by her next employer.

Who marries without disclosing her past.

Whose momentary happiness is destroyed by her husband's discovery of it.

Who plans to ruin the life of the man who ruined hers.

Who is prevented from so doing because of her love for her daughter.

And who dies disowning her, that she may be happy with the man she loves.

These are the principal events in "Her Hour," a melodrama from the pen of Raymond L. Schrock, directed by George Cowl and starring the stately Kitty Gordon. It is a story of a conventional type offering a sympathetically written central character—the woman betrayed because of man's treachery. It appeals to a certain extent; it would have to a greater extent had Miss Gordon put more warmth, more feeling, more depth into her part.

But it is filled with the sort of situations that Mr. Brady selects to offer his public, which seem to be pleasing his public and which are therefore quite right and proper. There are a number of times when Mr. Schrock has gained a point by merely introducing it and not developing up to it, but this is by no means confined to "Her Hour" alone among World pictures.

Prominent in the supporting cast are Eric Mayne, George MacQuarrie and Lillian Cook, all rendering effective support to Miss Gordon. The production is adequate without being pretentious.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Though she has been betrayed by Trent (Eric Mayne), Rita Castle (Kitty Gordon) marries Christie (George MacQuarrie), leading a happy existence until he discovers her past relations. A cast off again, Rita becomes a prominent lobbyist. Trent is nominated on a reform ticket for district attorney. Rita tells him she will expose his true character on the eve of election. Trent's campaign manager, Clement (Frank Beamish), prevents this by informing Rita that it will ruin the happiness and future of her daughter, Alicia (Lillian Cook), who has been brought up in ignorance of her mother's life. Alicia, using her mother's assumed name, has become engaged to Christie's son, Dick (Edward Burns). Trent carries the election. During the night Clement breaks into Rita's house and attacks Alicia. Rita, returning home, shoots and kills him. Trent tells her he will prosecute to the full extent of the law, but quickly changes his mind when Rita informs him that Alicia is his daughter. Rita, suddenly suffering from heart failure, declares that Alicia is the daughter of old friends of hers and dies, happy in the knowledge that the girl will be happy with Dick.

"The Grell Mystery"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

PAUL SCARDON'S latest work for Vitagraph and the screen is a mystery drama from the script by Frank Froest. Mystery inculcated with strong, dramatic effects is the essential ingredient of entertainment and this is faithfully presented in pantomime by a good cast, headed by Earle Williams. The melodramatic touch, usually associated with mystery drama, has been used sparingly by Director Scardon with the result that he has produced for screen presentation a form of entertainment that will receive a hearty welcome in any neighborhood and can be booked with assurance of success by any and all exhibitors. Careful attention has been given to detail in production; the suspense has been maintained to the climax without resort to the unnatural in plot development; the characters are presented faithfully by a competent cast and each scene is a link in a chain of mystery that is unraveled with dramatic artistry rather than the bold outbursts of imagination, usually resulting from an author's over-anxiety to develop mystery.

"The Grell Mystery" is a good box-office attraction, containing, as it does, a variety of elements which are essential to the entertainment of a varied audience. It is not a mystery drama that has to be confined to the downtown houses. The party who arrives in a limousine, the family circle and the tenement dwellers—all will find in this Vitagraph production, entertainment. The author has laid his plot with care and the director has, with equal care, followed these plans. The result is, a good picture with entertainment for all.

Earle Williams is the featured player on the program but it is a question whether his audiences will accept this assertion after viewing the picture. Denton Vane, in a dual role, although not as much in evidence as Mr. Williams, is deserving of especial credit for his work in the character roles. Mr. Williams has proved by his past performances in mystery drama, that he can present the part of a detective or central office man with true appreciation for the subtle instincts of the secret service. In the role of Heldon Foyle, his late endeavor in the mystery drama, Mr. Williams leaves no room for disappointment although he is not given the opportunity to display the cleverness of which he is capable in the enactment of similar roles. Miriam Miles, who has the principal feminine role, is convincing but never prominent in the scenes of action. Jean Dumar presents a semi-important part with promise of doing better when the opportunity presents itself. Mabel Trunnelle is deserving of more prominence than the role of Lola offers. Bernard Siegel is a fine type and impersonates the minor "heavy" with realism evident in every action. Robert Gaillard does a "bit" well."

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eileen Meredith (Miriam Miles) is in love with Robert Grell (Denton Vane). Robert has a double, Harry Goldenberg (also Denton Vane). Goldenberg has a record for blackmail. Lola (Mabel Trunnelle) is the wife of Goldenberg and tries to protect Grell from her husband. Goldenberg goes to Grell's home to collect blackmail money. Lola follows and stabs Goldenberg to death. Grell flees and the body of Goldberg is taken for that of Grell. Immediately after the stabbing, Helen Meredith enters the Grell home and sees the dagger. She picks it up and leaves finger prints on the handle, from which clue Heldon Foyle (Earle Williams), detective, arrives at the conclusion that she is the murderer, but refuses to be convinced without further investigation. Suspicion falls upon another, Ivan (Bernard Siegel), who was Grell's servant. He confesses after Lola, whose past has been learned, tells all. Grell, who is in hiding, is found in his home, seeking money. Lola's confession clears him and he and Eileen are united. Heldon marries Helen.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Twentieth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE final episode of "The Fatal Ring" closes in Arabia with the members of the Sacred Order of the Violet God and Richard Carslake and his band safely out of the way.

On the boat bound for Arabia, Carslake succeeds in stealing the diamond and its setting from the High Priestess. Later while traveling across the desert to the temple he is overtaken by the members of the Order. In a fight he succeeds in overcoming all of them except the Priestess. Reaching the temple he secures a wonderful liquid possessing the power of dissolving any matter that comes within its rays. When the Priestess arrives he turns these rays on her with the consequence that she quickly dissolves.

Pearl and Tom arrive soon after. Pearl secures the retort containing the liquid and permits its rays to play upon Carslake. He meets the same fate as the Priestess. The lovers, realizing its deadly power dispose of the liquid and securing the fatal ring set out for home.

"The Man from Montana"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MAN FROM MONTANA," presenting Neal Hart in the title role is a picture contrasting an honest West with a crooked East to an effect that is always interesting and sometimes humorous.

Harvey Gates, author of the picture, has supplied plenty of action to round out the five reels. The experiences which Duke, the man from Montana, has with the two swindlers are many and varied and complications arise thick and fast. A love interest is supplied through Duke and an innocent tool of the swindlers which balances the action to a nicety.

The spectator is also treated to some conventional yet effective comedy, supplied by the group of Western miners and cowboys who arrive in the east clad in their native garb to become initiated into the ways of bellhops, hotel elevators, wine dinners and the crowded streets.

Neal Hart makes a likable figure of the star part and Vivian Rich is an appealing heroine. George Berrell, as Duke's partner, creates an eccentric old character that will create a generous measure of quiet comedy.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Swindled of their mine by a pair of Eastern crooks, Duke Farley (Neal Hart) and Dad Petzel (George Berrell), start to work over again and soon strike pay dirt a second time. Duke sets out for the city, bent on revenge on the swindlers. Warren Summers (E. J. Piel) and his wife (Betty Lamb), the pair in question, employ Meta Cooper (Vivian Rich), as an innocent tool in their various enterprises. They learn of his arrival, and plan to relieve him of his latest roll. Through Meta they manage to catch Duke violating the Mann White Slave Act, although both Meta and Duke are innocent. They demand a large sum for their silence. Duke enraged, and fully aware that Meta is not in sympathy with the Summers marries her. When the blackmailers see themselves thus tricked, they have Duke shanghaied, and all seems well. But on the same ship are Petzel and the rest of the boys who have come East in search of Duke. They turn the ship's nose back to port, and Duke is finally reunited with Meta, while Mr. and Mrs. Summers are put forever to route.

"Shame"

(John W. Noble-Duplex Films, Inc.—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"SHAME" is one of those pictures that bears a "message." It wants to know just why a girl who has led a blameless life should be branded as an outcast because of the sins of her parents. Society in so doing is all wrong. The girl in question should be accepted on her own merits it argues. And it puts forward by way of Zena Keefe's fine characterization of the girl and some sound arguments in the subtleties logical proof of its original premise. It doesn't attempt to legitimatize illegal marriage contracts, excuse prostitution or preach any reversal in conventions that would result in a worse state of affairs. It merely states that the sins of the parents should be confined to the parents themselves and not visited upon the children.

As to qualities of motion pictorial construction "Shame" is both strong and weak. It would be difficult to find a more well-balanced, absorbing episode than that of Mary's parents, which, however, is little more than a prologue. Getting down to the modern story which sets forth the career of the innocent daughter, it must be confessed first of all that it is too long. There is a little too much of the hunchback and his violin to gain the desired response of sympathy in the spectator, while the affair between the society girl and the cabaret dancer is quite obviously introduced for contrast and not well welded with the main line of action.

The brightest spot in "Shame" is Zeena Keefe. Her performance, first as the mother and then as the daughter, is noe of the deepest, most sincere that has ever been contributed to the screen. She registers her points clearly, with a fine show of emotion that is suppressed enough never to be tiresome and significant enough to create a wonderful appeal. Niles Welch as the young doctor and Paul Doucet as the hunchback work well in the roles of next importance. Jack Dunn as the doctor's father, Joyce Fair as the society girl and Lionel Belmore as the heartless farmer contribute a trio of good characterizations.

John W. Noble, who is presenting the picture also directed it. His work in this line is adequate.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary (Zeena Keefe), denied a decent home because of the indiscretion of her parents, is adopted by Peters (Lionel Belmore) and made to slave on his farm. Her only friend is Seppe (Paul Doucet), a deformed boy who is also a social outcast because of the sin of his parents. When Mary can stand Peters' cruelty no longer she flees to the city and after a while secures a position in the hospital run by Dr. Strong (Jack Dunn). His son Donald (Niles Welch) soon falls in love with her. She accepts his proposal of marriage, but their engagement is broken when he learns of her past from Peters, who has come to take her back to the farm. Court proceedings are necessary for Peters to prove his legal right to the girl. In the midst of these Seppe shoots Peters, so that Mary may remain where she will. Donald decides that he will marry Mary despite her lack of name, and after she and Seppe have been liberated on the discovery that Peters is only slightly wounded, he asks her again. But this time Mary elects to go away with Seppe, believing that Donald would be socially ostracised if he entered upon marriage with her.

Dell Boone and Jack Davidson complete the cast.

"Jack and Jill"

(Morosco-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

JACK AND JILL carry this Morosco-Paramount up the hill until a mighty high pinnacle of interest is reached and what's more, they don't fall down. In fact, "Jack and Jill," which by the way, has nothing whatsoever to do with the popular nursery rhyme, is a pleasing, originally treated and entertaining comedy-drama in which the stars, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, score another decided success.

Gardner Hunting prepared the scenario for it from a story by Margaret Turnbull. Jack is more or less of a failure as a prize fighter in New York and Jill hankers for a change of atmosphere while selling chewing gum and cheap candy at the subway kiosks. The authors have transplanted the swaggering youngster of the prize ring to a western ranch along about the middle of the film and here the contrast between his east side city manners and the more unassuming attitude of the group of good-natured cowboys results in a lot of sparkling comedy. In the scenes of New York too, the humor is abundant, particularly when the subtitle writer gets down to prize ring lingo and Bowery slang. On the other hand the frameup arranged by the fight promoter to trap Jack is productive of a generous amount of suspense. This is paralleled in the latter half by the Mexican raid which Jack is largely responsible in checking.

In fact, "Jack and Jill" is a comedy-drama excellently balanced from start to finish with the interest well maintained from the outset. While the two leads are never typically tough, their performances are always refreshingly youthful and thoroughly pleasing. The support includes a number of prize ring, cowboy and Mexican types that have been judiciously selected. William Taylor has given the picture a production that in every department reaches the high standard maintained by the Paramount offerings.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack Ranney (Jack Pickford), the victim of a framed fight, is forced to flee the city, believing he has killed his opponent (Leo Houck). His sweetheart, Mary Dwyer (Louise Huff), known as Jill, discovers the fraud, and collects the purse rightfully due Jack. In the meantime he has arrived at a cowboy town on the Mexican border, where city swaggering and his boast that he has killed a man take little effect. Jill gets track of him, and arrives at the ranch to meet him. In town the boys have faked a Mexican raid to scare Jack, but the scare doesn't work. He learns of Jill's arrival, and streaks it to the ranch house, where he encounters Mexicans bent on a real raid. He protects the women folk until the cowboys arrive, and is thereafter proclaimed a hero.

Don Bailey, J. H. Holland, Hart Hoxie, Col. Lenone and Beatrice Burnham complete the cast.

"For Valour"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE eastern Triangle company has furnished the program with a number of thoroughly human offerings during the last few weeks and 'For Valour," which includes a dominant note of patriotism, can take its place among them. It is taken from a magazine story by I. A. R. Wylie and directed by Albert Parker, a man who can get the most from a plain story without spoiling it by unnecessary theatric effects. "For Valour" like his other pictures produced under the supervising direction of Allan Dwan sounds a realistic note throughout.

Mr. Wylie's story tells of the manner in which 'Melia, a young girl of the poorer quarter of Toronto kindles the spark of patrioism in the breast of her extremely self-centered and snobbish brother. He has treated his story naturally, interestingly and without recourse to the impossible. The latter reel is truly one of the most sympathetic ever seen. The picture of 'Melia lying alone in the prison hospital waiting for news from her brother, his final appearance at her bedside and her knowledge that he has "done his bit" with more than the usual show of bravery, unite to create a series of scenes that will very likely bring tears.

"For Valour" is, indeed, a picture that should prove exceedingly popular in this day. Its patriotic trend, though of Canadian nativity, should prove just as effective in the United States for obvious reasons. And the picture's realism, its fine treatment and its intelligently conceived story do the rest. Winifred Allen and Richard Barthelmess as the sister and brother furnish a brace of good performances, while Mabel Ballin and Henry Weaver contribute sterling support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

'Melia Nobbs (Winifred Allen), daughter of a veteran Canadian soldier (Henry Weaver), keeps a home for him and her brother, Henry (Richard Barthelmess), clerk in a law office in Toronto. Henry, as he advances, becomes ashamed of his shabby home, and finally leaves it altogether, forgetting the many sacrifices his sister has made that he might succeed. He becomes engaged to Alice (Mabel Ballin), stenographer in the office. At the outbreak of the war he evades enlistment on the grounds that there are plenty of others with nothing to do would might as well join the ranks. Looking forward to his marriage with Alice and, realizing his inadequate wage, he is led to gamble with some of the firm's money. He loses and goes to his sister for assistance. 'Melia asks a loan from a burlesque manager for whom she has worked, but his disgusting proposition causes a revulsion of feeling within her. She flees his office, and passing the prima donna's dressing-room sees money lying on the table. This she gives to her brother to clear his debt, but only after a severe lecture on his caddish ways and with the understanding that he enlist in the overseas forces. He keeps his promise, and before leaving tells of his poverty to Alice and begs for forgiveness from his sister. In the trenches he proves himself a hero, and after recovering from wounds is sent home. He discovers 'Melia in the prison hospital, where she has been sent for her theft. She is suffering from a nervous breakdown, but the sight of Henry with his Valour Medal and the Understanding that she has been responsible for the awakening of manhood within him gives her final peace and happiness.

"Please Help Emily"

(Mutual-Empire—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

ANN MURDOCK in "Please Help Emily" gives a portrayal of a harum-scarum, thoughtless girl who is always getting into embarrassing situations and getting others in with her that is delightful. The picture is just a succession of the scrapes into which Emily drags the highly respectable members of two wealthy Long Island families. She starts out by merely knocking the rear wheel off a farmer's buggy in trying to get past him in her racer, but she winds up by getting several families implicated in a grand hotel mixup.

Her childish innocence, naivete, fickleness and inability to see the consequences of her actions make her an adorable character, and Ann Murdock fills the role perfectly. "Please Help Emily" is the kind of picture we need during these war times—a picture full of comedy and humor—that keeps one laughing right from the start and makes trouble take a back seat for a while. This third of the Ann Murdock pictures was directed by Dell Henderson and the cast gives the little heroine good support. The work of Rex McDougall, Ferdinand Gottschalk and Katherine Stewart is particularly worthy of mention.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Emily has many suitors, but two in particular, Richard Trotter (Rex McDougall) and Herbert Threadgold (Ferdinand Gottschalk). Trotter has proved himself to be a good friend of Emily's on many occasions and has aided her to such an extent in getting out of scrapes that she naturally turns to him for protection. Threadgold, on the other hand, is a pest and proposes to her on every occasion. There is a club dance, at which Threadgold is to receive his final answer, but before he arrives Emily goes out with a soldier friend to dance at a cabaret and forgets all about the answer she had promised. She stays out so late she is afraid to go back home, so hurries to Trotter's for assistance and finds that he is still at the club. She goes in and curls up in his bed to get a little sleep.

Finally she is missed at home and the whole place is in an uproar. When comes in she gets him to take her to her aunt's in order that she may have an alibi. He starts out next morning and they stop at a hotel on the way for lunch. In the meantime Threadgold and Emily's cousin stop at the same hotel and Aunt Geraldine accidentally drops in there herself on her way to make a call on Emily's folks.

The police have been notified of Emily's disappearance and she is traced to the hotel with Trotter. The different parties meet just as the police come on the scene and arrest them for kidnapping Emily. The affair, however, is finally cleared up and Trotter accepts the job of taking care of Emily for life.

"We Never Sleep"

(Rolin-Pathe—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS Rolin number features Harold Lloyd and Snubs Pullard as detectives on the trail of a bank robber. They shadow a suspect and his pretty wife all the way to the seashore and capture him only after a great effort, but all their work proves futile as immediately afterwards they receive word that the real robber has been caught. As a result they are chased from the hotel in shame.

This makes an average comedy number—average for Rolin—considerably above it remembering the ordinary product of the day. Lloyd will certainly get a hearty laugh on his introduction and his subsequent activities on board the sleeper and at the beach are responsible for not a little comedy of the typical Lonesome Lake variety.

In addition there are half a dozen pretty girls, without which apparently a comedy cannot be up-to-date, who lend complementary interest to the beach scenes. Bebe Daniels as the wife of the suspect and Bud Jamison as that gentleman himself, complete the quartette of principals.

"The Regenerates"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE REGENERATES" is a somewhat muddled affair dealing with pride of race. It was written by John Lynch, prepared for the screen by Catherine Carr and directed by E. Mason Hopper. Walt Whitman, the familiar character actor of the Triangle western studio has the principal part.

He is seen as an old-time New Yorker, whose family name is to him sacred. It is his fondest wish that his grandson and his granddaughter, first cousins, marry. And thereon hangs the tale. The grandson, his veins thought by the old man full of blue blood, turns out to be utterly worthless—a dope fiend, a cad and what not.

The story as originally written probably convinced and possessed an average amount of force. But in its migration to the screen someone has erred. There are a number of scenes that either because of their very presence or because of their handling quite fail in conviction, while the sub-titles are for the most part altogether too flowery to be in keeping with the action.

Mr. Whitman's performance is the best of all the cast. Alma Reubens has the role of the heroine, which she handles nicely, and Pauline Stark does an emotional bit as the betrayed servant girl. "The Regenerates" possesses some of the elements of popular appeal but it seems to be loosely put together and as a whole is considerably below the accepted standards of the times.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Van Dyun (Walt Whitman), an old New Yorker, rebels when his granddaughter, Catherine (Alma Reubens) displays affection for La Farge (Allan D. Sears), an author. The old gentleman would prefer that she marry her couin, Pell Van Dyun (Darrel Foss), in order that blue blood be mated with blue blood. Pell, however, turns out to be a hopeless drug fiend, besides being secretly married to a servant girl (Pauline Stark). He is killed at length in a quarrel with his servant, Slade (Lewis Durham), over some dope. Afterward his wife dies, leaving a son. Van Dyun, his hopes shattered, refuses to recognize the baby, and so Catherine, who has married La Farge, cares for it. It is only after a number of years that the little boy effects a reunion between Catherine, her husband, and the old man.

John Lince and William Brady appear in congenial character roles.

"Snap Judgment"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

PLAYING the part of a ne'er-do-well scapegrace whose father and sweetheart both give him up as hopeless, and breathing life into the character of a notorious bandit of the plains, William Russell in "Snap Judgment" gives an exhibition as gunman and fighter that ought to add greatly to his already long list of admirers. The story of the play is built around the likeness between Jimmie Page, who gets into a fight on the night of his wedding and went out West, and Arizona Pete, the bad man of Lone Star. Both parts are played by Russell in the picture, although in the story not until the end do Jimmie Page and Arizona Pete come face to face and discover the similarity that has been getting both into more or less hot water.

Those who admire Russell for his fighting ability will see him in action here in practically every reel, fighting thugs, dodging sheriffs, bolting into groups and tossing them about like mannikins. The picture is bristling with action. It moves rapidly, following a story that holds together with good continuity and has a generous sprinkling of laughs. The protography and direction are both all that could be asked and the settings are typically Mutual-American. The cast gives excellent support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jimmie Page (Bill Russell), wild and undependable but lovable withal, gets a late start to a wedding at which he is to play the part of the groom. The taxicab in which he is riding breaks down near an alley and Jimmy steps out to tear his hair but sees an attempted holdup going on and lights into a pair of thugs.

Policemen arrive on the scene and Jimmie is taken to the police station and the wrong sort of a story gets into the papers. In the meantime Jimmie's sweetheart, Marah Manning (Francelia Billington), decides that he is hopeless and sends the preacher, bridesmaids, etc., back home and calls the wedding off. The next day Jimmie bumps into the man he had saved the night before and agrees to go West with him.

As soon as the unfortunate youth plants his foot in Lone Star he is arrested for Arizona Pete. He is let out of jail, however, by Arizona's sweetheart, who thinks she is rescuing her lover, and they escape to the mountains. In the meantime the story of Jimmie's heroism is printed in the papers back home and Marah Manning comes on to give Jimmie her forgiveness. When she starts to Lone Star, however, accompanied by her father, the coach is held up by Arizona and Marah is taken as ransom until Mr. Manning returns with $10,000.

Jimmie, in hiding from the sheriff and his posse, accidentally runs into the cave where Arizona lives and rescues Marah. The posse arrives on the scene in time to see Arizona escape and they realize the mistake in identity.

"A Little Patriot"

(Diando-Pathe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BABY MARIE OSBORNE is the little patriot. Dressed in a uniform she organizes the children of the street, drills them over and over again and eventually is largely responsible for the capture of a German spy. And too she arouses the spark of patriotism in her more or less spineless father and proves the means of a happy reunion between her grandfather and her mother. In between times she salutes the American flag, pictures of President Wilson and makes everyone else do the same. She is not only a little patriot but a big little one.

Withal "A Little Patriot" is essentially a number for those of the same age or thereabouts as Baby Marie. She sets a good example to the younger generation in it and is the center of both amusing and melodramatic action—but always very simple and obvious action. The inevitable colored boy of Baby Marie's pictures is again present and is responsible for a large share of laughs on his own account, sometimes assisted by an equally colored father who has a very funny walk and bearing.

John W. Grey wrote the story and William Bertram directed. The production is quite plain but meets every requirement of the scenario. Herbert Standing, Marian Warner and Jack Connolly render good support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marie Yarbell (Baby Marie Osborne) is responsible for the enlistment of her father (Jack Connelly) in the army. Her mother (Marian Warner) rents one of her rooms to help raise money. The man who takes it proves to be a German spy. He attempts to blow up a laboratory where an inventor is experimenting on an aerial torpedo. Marie seizes the bomb and carries it out to the street. She throws it down but the explosion injures her. Mulhauser (Herbert Standing), who has financed the inventor, takes her home with him, where he learns that she is the child of his own daughter, who had married against his wishes. Marie collects her army of children and makes an attack on the spy, who is attempting to escape. Her mother brings her husband to the rescue. After a hot fight the spy is subdued. Mulhauser forgives his daughter and welcomes her and the rest of the family to his home.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal Mutual Serial—Two Reels Each)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE ninth and tenth episodes of this interesting serial, under the titles of "The Looters" and "The Secret of the Mine,"

are as full of stirring incidents as any of the foregoing and furnish Helen Holmes with ample opportunities for the display of her skill and daring, for which she is now well known to screen patrons. Ever and anon is she called upon to checkmate the intrigue of her wily opponents, and always does she manage to rise superior to their machinations.

These episodes are brimful of interest and all portray actual mining and railroad conditions to minute details, the tenth episode revealing a glimpse of "The Lost Express," which Helen doubtless will take full advantage of in an early reel, providing the malefactors do not again imprison her and jeopardize her life.

No matter where shown, these late episodes will most assuredly be well received, for throughout the whole recital so far the continuity has been unbroken and reflects great credit upon Director J. P. McGowan.

"Sunshine Alley"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

MAE MARSH and Robert Harron give to Mary Rider's version of "Sunshine Alley" a certain dramatic strength which would be found wanting if these two stars were not interpreting the principal roles. Mae Marsh is featured on the program, but not in the estimation of her audiences after Robert Harron is seen in action. Mr. Harron is entitled to equal honors with Miss Marsh and together they give a performance which is worth while. The story reaches dramatic heights, only in spots. It has the one element that always strikes home with the average picture audience, and that is the human note. The author has not made it necessary for those who witness a performance of "Sunshine Alley" to prey upon their imagination for a solution of the plot. She has taken plain people, given them a simple but noble work to perform, and upon this situation has founded plain, natural events in their lives and with them she has contrasted the lives of a class of parasitic individuals, thereby creating antithesis of action and events that together result in a humanely pathetic drama, particularly suited to the Marsh-Harron types.

The late Goldwyn production is not due more favorable criticism than is included in the expression "fair." Miss Marsh and Mr. Harron are more than 50 per cent of the production, speaking in terms of value. Lesser lights in the ranks of screen artists would fail to convince in Mary Rider's screen play for the reason that she has apparently relied upon such artists as the principals to supply the dramatic strength which is lacking. She has written a photoplay that has for its main support pathos and sympathy to be supplied. Without this being supplied her story would fall flat. The story is of the class that will afford more sound entertainment when followed through the pages of a book than when enacted on the screen, providing such artists as the Marsh-Harron combination are not back of it to push. John Noble has two things to be thankful for—his careful direction and the work of Miss Marsh and Mr. Harron. With a light, quivering script to work from, this combination has fashioned for the screen a production that Goldwyn can release to the exhibitor with a feeling that it has done its duty toward both exhibitor and public. The auhor has done its duty toward both exhibitor and public. The author a success. She has made possible enough of the melodramatic element in the drama to insure it a good reception by the patrons of the theatres that cater to the class who insist upon the poster setting forth the "blood-and-thunder" situations. With this class

"GRIP"

¶ The advertising manager is doing his duty today who eliminates waste; who spends every dollar of his advertising money in proven channels—where it counts.

In judging circulation he considers the "grip" a publication has upon its readers. He puts the factor of "grip" above every other consideration.

He knows that his advertising won't influence the reader if the publication doesn't carry influence; it won't "grip" the reader, if the publication doesn't.

He estimates the "grip" of a publication by its "insides." He puts himself in the place of the reader and estimates the publication's business value—the "meat" in its every page; its editorial punch and fearlessness; its service; its enterprise; its brightness—all the qualities that make the reader want to read it continuously.

Then he sensibly decides that any publisher who spends as much money on his publication's "insides" is also (at less effort and expense) pushing desirable circulation for every inch that can possibly be added.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

William E. Raynor, Newly Appointed Manager of Pathe's New York Exchange, and A. S. Abeles, Chosen by Pathe as a Special Representative

Abeles Goes West to Open Pathe Oklahoma Branch

A. S. Abeles for the past three years Manager of Pathe's New York branch, has been appointed special representative by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, and has gone to open a new office in Oklahoma City. His successor as manager at New York is William E. Raynor, who leaves a similar position with Mutual.

Mr. Abeles and Mr. Raynor are two of the best known men in the exchange field. Abeles has been with Pathe about three years, for two of which he has managed the biggest office. Raynor's entrance into the film industry came through George Kleine when he introduced "Quo Vadis" at the Astor theatre in New York. Mr. Raynor promoted the publicity for this attraction.

Wolfberg Manager Organizes Some New Offices

H. E. Stahler, manager of the Pittsburgh office of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, left the Smoky City last week to organize offices in Maryland and Delaware.

The first production to be distributed in these two states by the Wolfberg exchange will be "The Crisis," it is announced, which is in line with the precedent established at the time when the Cleveland and Cincinnati offices were opened by Wolfberg.

During Mr. Stahler's absence from Pittsburgh, J. L. Ellman, who heads the publicity department, will be in charge of the office.

Paramount-Artcraft in New Haven Quarters Shortly

Paramount-Artcraft will occupy new Connecticut state headquarters at New Haven about January 10, it was announced last week.

The new building being erected for them is to contain a prerelease theatre seating forty people, and will be the first of the sort to be built outside of Boston in New England.

John P. Kilfeather, owner of the present Film Exchange building at New Haven, is providing the new Paramount-Artcraft quarters which will be thirty feet on street front and sixty feet deep. Besides office suite and theatre the building is to have four film vaults, rewind room and shipping quarters.

Henry T. Scully, state manager, will increase his staff to twelve when the new building is done. At present he has two salesmen and a booking man, John V. Pavone. Paramount-Artcraft business in Connecticut has increased so much lately that the new quarters are absolutely necessary.

Cleveland Branch Managers Discuss the Tax

A meeting of the branch managers of the Cleveland exchanges was called for Thursday afternoon of last week at the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce. It was the purpose of the managers to have a final discussion of the footage tax, and decide how to meet the present situation of the opposition of the exhibitor to pay it and the refusal of four exchanges to charge it. Results have not been made known.

Here and There

The Barnett Film Attractions, Cleveland, O., which was under the guidance of B. Barnett, has closed its doors and Mr. Barnett, it is said, has gone to Minneapolis. The two features, "Joan, the Woman," and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which the company handled in that territory, have been taken over by Famous Players and Jewel respectively. Both of the features have done very well in Ohio.

James Steele, district manager of the Famous Players company, covering Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Detroit, was in Cleveland recently for the first time in almost three months.

M. A. Lebensberger, secretary and treasurer of the Standard Film Service Company, of Cleveland, O., has donned the khaki and the call of duty has taken him to Chillicothe, O. He is considered one of the most capable men in the industry, and his loss to the organization is keenly felt.

J. W. Fuller is now manager of Pathe's Charlotte, N. C., office, and R. V. Anderson has been appointed manager of the Atlanta office, succeeding George R. Allison, resigned.

H. P. Calloway earned the distinction of leading the entire Pathe sales force for the month of October, according to figures compiled at the home office. F. A. Grady is second and H. I. Goodman is third, and the list of leaders includes C. C. Buchanan, A. H. Toeffler, J. E. Schwartzbine, K. A. Suelka, E. W. Johnson, H. Dickenson, M. Hulling, J. Meyer, J. Sockoloff, B. C. Johnson, R. E. Walker, J. Hill, J. O. Manson, H. V. Catlin and F. J. Cavanaugh.

Burchfield Added to Sales Forces of Wolfberg Attractions

Harris P. Wolfberg, of Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, announces C. Burchfield as the latest addition to his sales forces. Ohio and Pennsylvania will be covered by Mr. Burchfield. He will handle the Wolfberg features in this territory. Mr. Kennedy is the fourteenth member of the sales forces to be engaged during as many weeks.

W. H. Company Promises Co-operation with Trade

Exchange Men and Exhibitors to Be Given Complete Material for Exploitation of Each Picture—"The Bargain" First Hart Release

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY this week announces the organization's prospective method of distributing through the independent exchanges and the methods of exploitation. In its statement the company points out the faults of the past, committed as the result of this method of release, either as the result of misrepresentation in the sale of pictures or the failure of the distributor to treat the exchange man fairly, charging him too high a price for the film.

It points out further that many distributors, after sending the film to the exchanges have left the exchange men to shift for themselves, and consequently the exchange has been unable to aid the exhibitor. This looseness has worked to the detriment of the distributor, because the exhibitor blames the picture for its failure to make money, while the exchange man suffers because he is unable to aid the showman and get the greatest sales possible.

The W. H. Company in announcing its plans, says:

"Our policy is to be co-operation in its broadest sense, as we believe that to be the essential of good, independent distribution. It is our aim to give the exchange expert assistance in the methods of exploitation, and to aid him to build proper contact with his exhibitors. We do not intend to over-sell or under-sell our productions but to work upon a sound and efficient commercial basis. We appreciate that the best method of getting results is to show the exchange how to bring its business up to a greater earning capacity, and this we intend to accomplish by working with each one individually. To this end we are planning a complete exploitation campaign for the exchange-man and the exhibitor, on each of our productions.

"As a sample of our policies concerning the above, let us take our first release featuring William S. Hart, as the 'Two-gun' Man in 'The Bargain.' In the first place we know that this picture is a typical state rights production, containing qualifications which place it in that field. It features a star whose popularity and drawing power are recognized. The story is strong and virile, of sufficient strength in fact to carry itself without the necessary aid of a star's name.

Walthall Prepares to Start New Paralta Play

Returns to Hollywood After Vacation with Brother on Farm in Arizona—"Humdrum Brown" Is Title of Second Feature

Mary Charleson, Who is Appearing with Henry Walthall in Paralta Productions

HENRY B. WALTHALL, it was announced last week, has returned to the Paralta Studios in Hollywood, Cal., after spending two weeks with his brother on his farm in Arizona, and is preparing to begin immediately production work on his second Paralta play, "Humdrum Brown," from the pen of H. B. Daniel.

"His Robe of Honor" which will mark Mr. Walthall's debut as a star in Paralta plays, was completed about two weeks ago. Mr. Walthall considers it the crowning achievement of his career and is said to be anxiously awaiting the comment of the press and public.

Julian Lamothe, who adapted Mr. Walthall's initial Paralta play for the screen, also did the continuity on "Humdrum Brown." The story deals with the career of a man whose existence was of the most prosaic character in a small uninteresting town. Possessing a soul that yearned for the romantic, "Humdrum" did not find the opportunity for gratifying his secret desire until late in life. When events did demand that he show fortitude and courage of the highest order, the quiet, retiring man responded with rare and unexpected nobility.

Rex Ingram who directed Mr. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," will direct "Humdrum Brown." Mr. Ingram has been busy for the last week searching for an effective location for a part of the story. He wanted to secure some town resembling those to be found up in New England. He found such a place in the town of Norwalk, about thirty-five miles out from Los Angeles. While Norwalk is now a bustling community, still there are sections of the place, where the atmosphere and architecture of the streets and houses are very similar to those of a New England town.

Days will be passed on this location by Mr. Walthall and company.

Billie Burke to Appear in "Eve's Daughter"

Grace George's Current Stage Play Has Been Scenarioized by Margaret Turnbull, and James Kirkwood Will Direct Feature

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in an announcement last week, cited that it is seldom that a play which has just been presented on the legitimate stage is being translated to the screen simultaneously with its metropolitan run. This, however, is the case with "Eve's Daughter," which recently concluded a brief run at the Playhouse, New York, with Grace George in the leading role, and which is being produced for Paramount release with Billie Burke in the star part.

James Kirkwood, director of many pictures, including "The Heart of Jennifer," "Saints and Sinners," "The Innocence of Lizette" and "The Gentle Intruder," and who has been in the employ of Biograph, Reliance, Universal, Mutual and Famous Players companies, has been specially engaged to direct the production for Paramount.

Margaret Turnbull has adapted the play, by Alicia Ramsey, for screen purposes. "Eve's Daughter" was presented in three acts, and had its premiere in New York, October 13.

It is believed that the role of Irene will prove admirably adapted to Miss Burke's qualities as an actress; she will be surrounded by a capable company of players and with what is said to be a production of the most sumptuous character. There is said to be much delicious comedy, much dramatic force and withal a play that should appeal to any intelligent audience. It will afford, according to the estimates of those who have read the scenario and seen the play, a role that should enable Billie Burke to repeat her recent screen triumphs in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" and "Arms and the Girl," and which it is confidently expected she will again achieve in "The Land of Promise," soon to be released.

Nazimova's Second Metro Filmed in Arizona

Nazimova has completed work in "God's Message," her initial Metro production, and will soon start her second picture "A Child of the Sun." George D. Baker, who guided the star in her first Metro appearance, will again direct her in the new picture, which will be staged in Arizona.

"A Child of the Sun" is said to be a rugged romance of old Mexico, providing Nazimova with a role of dramatic intensity. The Metro star will be presented as a native Mexican girl, with the blood

Charles Bryant, who played opposite Nazimova in "God's Message," will again support the star in the leading male role in "A Child of the Sun."

Essanay's Productions Bring Glowing Reports

Essanay during the past week received many glowing reports concerning its several features, according to an announcement made this week, as follows: "Gift o' Gab," Essanay comedy-drama, featuring Jack Gardner, has the gift of drawing crowds to the box office, according to the word from exhibitors. The picture has an unusual amount of snappy comedy action and has won almost unanimous approval of audiences.

New heights also have been won by Little Mary McAllister in her latest picture, "The Kill-Joy." Taylor Holmes' third Essanay comedy-drama, "Two-Bit Seats," has exceeded his former offerings, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" and "Fools for Luck" in pulling power, box office men declare, and scores have written the producer asking for more. Demands for bookings also continue for "Young Mother Hubbard," featuring Little Mary McAllister, and for "The Fibbers," with Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli in the leading roles. All of the above are offered for booking at branches of the George Kleine System.

Frederick Bennett Joins Triangle Producing Staff

Frederick Bennett, who collaborated in the stage production of "Very Good Eddie," joined the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff last week. Mr. Bennett holds a unique office especially created for him by Studio Manager S. C. Burr and Production Manager Albert Glassmire. It is Mr. Bennett's duty to take up the scenario where the writer has left off and inject laughs or "gags," as they are called, into the skeleton. This work requires a man with a remarkable sense of comedy situations as well as a thorough knowledge of dramatic construction, and the Triangle-Keystone management is confident that Mr. Bennett will prove a valuable addition to the staff.

This Is Not a Naughty Lady, Merely Julian Eltinge in "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," a Paramount Picture

Vitagraph Promises Innovation in Interior Sets

An innovation in interiors is promised in the "The Eighth Great Grand Parent," a forthcoming Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature. One of the sets is laid in a hotel, and Director William Wolbert of the Hollywood studio, plans to set the camera on the mezzanine floor of a leading Los Angeles hostelry and have Alfred Whitman and Nell Shipman, and the supporting cast, mix with the guests in the lobby so the picture can be taken unknown to the patrons. In this way it is planned to eliminate the stiffness that so often occurs in scenes of this kind.

"Quarantined" Said to Be a Genuine Comedy

"Quarantined," a comedy now being filmed at the Greater Vitagraph Hollywood studio, is said to be so funny that even the hardened directors have been laughing at it in the taking. H. Kernan and Charles Dill, two soldiers of the road, break into a girls' seminary through a mistaken sign, advertising for paper hangers, and find that the place is under quarantine as all the beautiful pupils, one of whom is Carol Rankin, are supposedly ill with diphtheria. Once inside, they attempt a little original experimenting with the pastes, paper and brushes of the paper hangers.

Lockwood Plays Comedy Role in "Square Deceiver"

Since he enrolled under the Metro banner Harold Lockwood has appeared in romantic drama, melodrama and farce, and in his latest Metro wonder-play, "The Square Deceiver," he plays a comedy role.

True, it is said, there are impressive dramatic moments in which Mr. Lockwood figures in "The Square Deceiver," but for the most part his role of Billy Van Dyke is a comedy character, not the broad kind, but of the light and breezy variety.

"The Square Deceiver" is described by Francis Perry Elliott, the author of the novel "Love Me for Myself Alone," from which the photoplay was adapted, as a joyous comedy of youth and love.

The production was made under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer and will be released December 3.

Sheridan-Bickers Writes for Mae Murray Features

H. Sheridan-Bickers, the playright and dramatic critic, has been especially engaged by Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., to write exclusively for Mae Murray. All future Mae Murray productions will be written and edited by Mr. Bickers, whose first story for her, "The Eternal Columbine," is now being made under the direction of Robert Leonard. This is said to be an entirely new idea in motion picture drama, and will feature the Bluebird star in a role of unique emotional variety and power, as well as bringing back her former stage triumphs as a dancer.

Prior to his present engagement by Bluebird, Sheridan-Bickers was staff-writer and title editor for Paralta, and has also been associated with the Ince-Triangle forces and with Lois Weber.

King Baggot Plays Leads in Wharton Seria

Will Be Star's First Appearance on Screen in Over a Year, and Return Is Event of Genuine Interest—Secret Service Role

King Baggot, Who Stars in Wharton's Secret Service Serial

THROUGH the press medium of the Wharton Releasing Corporation, it was made known to the motion picture industry this week that King Baggot, who reached the height of his screen popularity, which began in the early days of pictures, in Universal productions, is to return to the silent drama after a retirement of over a year.

Last week, it is announced, a contract was signed between the Wharton Releasing Corporation and Baggot, whereby the latter is to play the male lead in the new Wharton secret service serial by William J. Flynn, Chief of the U. S. Secret Service. The picture is scheduled to tell the inside of all the alleged diabolical plots which the Imperial German Government planned against the United States.

In regard to his decision to return to the screen, Mr. Baggot said: "What else could I do? I've been a personal friend of Chief Flynn for years. My greatest admiration has always been for the Secret Service. In the days when I was writing my own stories and then playing them I was always happiest when I could get the idea for a good secret service picture. Seriously, I believe that the new serial is to be a wonderful thing. I have seen the first episodes of it and they impressed me so much that I walked along the street, reading them, like a messenger boy with a dime novel."

King Baggot is to play the part of Frederick Grant, president of the Criminology club in the new Wharton serial. He already has held several conferences with Chief Flynn, who is furnishing the facts for the serial, and is familiarizing himself in every way with the part that he is to play.

Kaplan Thinks Revolution Released Russian Art

That the world in general will learn of Russia as she really is, because of the revolution, and that other nations will have the chance to share Russian art, including motion pictures, are the opinion of N. S. Kaplan, representative of the Moscow Art Theatre, who visited America recently to conclude arrangements with the Pathe Exchanges, Inc., for the distribution of the Russian Art Pictures in America.

His beliefs were imparted to the Pathe officials before he returned to Russia.

Metro Films the Russian "Legion of Death"

Picture Said to Be Nearly Completed at Company's Western Studio, Under Direction of Tod Browning, Recently Abroad

"THE LEGION OF DEATH," the battalion of Russian women who are in the fighting ranks of their country, is to be immortalized on the screen, it was announced last week by Metro. Already the picture, according to Metro, is nearing completion at the Metro Western Studio, and it is said exhibitors are awaiting the production anxiously.

The majority of the scenes have been transplanted almost bodily from Russia and from the Eastern battle front, it is said, from which Tod Browning, who is directing the picture, recently returned. Director Browning went abroad unheralded, for the purpose of obtaining an intimate study of the Russian political situation in order that the picture might carry a love story and take it out of the class of war propaganda pictures of which it justly could be classed if it simply carried the historic fighting of the Russian women.

Prior to the release of the picture it is probable that government officials will be consulted as to the best time to present it to the public. This plan will be followed as it is claimed by the producers that the picture will do more than has anything else to bring home to America the realization that this is a war of extermination in which the women of Russia are doing more than their part to overcome the autocratic aims of Germany in her desire to rule the entire world.

Photoplay Magazine Engages Condon

Photoplay Magazine, on Monday of this week, announced that it has appointed Charles R. Condon, formerly of Motography, as manager of its film advertising department.

Constance Talmadge Begins New Select Picture

Will Be Her Third Under That Banner, Following "Scandal" and "The Honeymoon"—"The Cliffs" Is Title of New Production

Constance Talmadge in a Scene from "Scandal," a Selznick Picture Distributed by Select

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, the star whom Lewis J. Selznick presented very successfully in "Scandal," her first feature for Select Pictures, is said to be making screen history with great speed under the tutelage of Charles Giblyn, her director. Work has started, it was announced last week, on Miss Talmadge's third subject for Select, under the title of "The Cliffs."

"Scandal," which is a film version of the serial of the same name by Cosmo Hamilton, had no sooner had its first showing in the first run theatres than Miss Talmadge's director completed her second Select production, "The Honeymoon." "The Honeymoon,' as has been announced, is said to be a swift, clean, high tension comedy of marital mishaps, with scenes at Niagara Falls ever in the background.

"The Honeymoon," which was also directed by Charles Giblyn, received an enthusiastic reception from the Select officers when it was shown to them for the first time. Constance Talmadge's work in this picture is said to have surprised even her most ardent supporters

The new Select production, to be called "The Cliffs," has now been begun by Miss Talmadge, and the company assembled by Director Giblyn. "The Cliffs" is an adaptation by Paul West from the comedy, "The Runaway," by Pierre Veber and Henri de Gorsse. Earle Fox, who supports Miss Talmadge in "The Honeymoon," is likewise her leading man in "The Cliffs."

Miss Talmadge and the entire company have been spending a week at Ausable Chasm, and in and around Marblehead, Mass., filming some of the scenes of the story.

"The Cliffs" will be distributed through the Select Exchanges.

Triangle Enriches Several Who Submit Scripts

Has Recently Examined 7,000 Scenarios of Writers from Various Parts of Country—Two Stories Chosen Already Produced

BOTH from the point of view of results and interest aroused, Triangle considers its recently closed offer of accepting scenarios and ideas from the general public and awarding cash for those selected as best, as the most successful thing of its kind ever attempted During the time concerned in the experiment more than 7,000 manuscripts were examined by Triangle, and these scripts came from all parts of the world.

Aside from the fact that the exhibitor should welcome excellent stories with fresh viewpoints, these plays are considered to have a valuable sales asset in that they were chosen from among so many by J. M. Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine, and H. O. Davis, vice president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation. It is cited further by Triangle that the theatres situated in the different localities from whence the scripts came will have a local angle for advertising.

For the best four stories Triangle showed its appreciation by giving certain cash sums to those who submitted them. Two of these, it is announced, have already been filmed, and others are being shaped for immediate production. Mr. Davis declared last week that no money will be spared in presenting these plays to the best advantage. Olive Thomas, it is made known, will shortly appear in the leading role of "Betty Takes a Hand," the second of the submitted scenarios to be selected by Triangle.

To Mrs. Kate Corbaley, of Los Angeles, Triangle gave $1,000 for the first story chosen, under the title of "Real Folks." She has been writing scenarios for about eighteen months, and has sold several to the Sidney Drews. Katherine Kavanaugh, formerly with Valerie Bergere, wrote the second scenario in the list chosen by Triangle, and was given $500 for it. She has been writing photoplays for one year, and in that time is said to have sold six, two of which, "The Wheel of the Law" and "Peggy Will o' the Wisp," have been produced.

Honorable mention was given by Triangle to the following seven stories, some of which will be bought by Triangle, it is said: "His Brother's Keeper," "The Panther," "Cupid Picks a Lock," "The Doctor," "A Man of Resources," "Tempering Justice" and "The Alien Strain."

George Beban Pictures Under Time-Saving Plan

In order to hasten production work on two forthcoming Paramount pictures starring George Beban, Donald Crisp is completing "Jules of the Strong Heart," while William C. De Mille and his company are filming the incidents in the second Beban production which do not require the actual presence of the star, it is announced.

"Jules of the Strong Heart" is practically finished. As soon as Mr. Beban is through with this picture, he will start work under Mr. De Mille.

"The Auction Block" Directed by Larry Trimble

Through an error made last week in a published announcement from the publicity department of Petrova Pictures, concerning past achievements of Larry Trimble, the director, it was stated that the latter directed "The Barrier," by Rex Beach. The novel by Rex Beach which Trimble directed was "The Auction Block," not "The Barrier."

Trimble is at present directing Madame Petrova in her second starring feature for the Petrova Picture Company.

Katterjohn Signs for Year with Paralta Plays

Monte M. Katterjohn has been placed under contract for a period of one year, and an option taken for his second year's services for Paralta Plays. The new contract with Katterjohn is said to be different from contracts of other scenario writers in that it specifies that he shall receive a salary and percentage on all pictures that he writes. He is to receive a bonus for all original photoplays, and a greater percentage on receipts of original pictures than he does on the receipts of adaptations from other stories, plays or novels.

A number of Katterjohn's stories are now in production at the Paralta plant. One is "Within the Cup," which is being directed by Raymond B. West and will offer Bessie Barriscale as star. Another is an Alaskan story which Katterjohn claims is even better than his recent original photoplay, "The Flame of the Yukon," made by Thomas H. Ince for the Triangle. This photoplay is at present known as "Carmen of The Klondike," and will star Clara Williams under the direction of Reginald Barker. Mr. Katterjohn also prepared the screen version for "Within the Lines," now being produced by Dave Hartford as director with Lewis Stone as star.

Hist.—It's a Mystery!—Those Comedies

A DISPLAY advertisement arrived at this office last week, in which those responsible for its insertion, leave everything to the imagination, in that, the name of the producing concern, its star and its location are hidden in the request to address replies to box number 20002 MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The display advertisement was delivered to the office by a Western Union messenger boy, who, under cross questioning, refused to divulge the address from which the plates were sent.

Shortly after the plates arrived, a masculine voice, over the telephone wires stated that a check was being sent in payment for the advertisement and that as the company had four comedies completed—that these comedies were to be readily shown to propective customers and that the organization was so firmly established that it had under contract an unusual acrobatic comedian, whose work in the four comedies was such as to justify the firm in securing his name to a three-year contract and that the firm had gone to great pains and expense to make these four comedies before announcing or launching its plea to buyers in order that experimentation and uncertainty would be eliminated, no address or details would be given until all announcements were made good.

The four comedies, said the voice, are in shipshape order and have been shown to several of the most exacting exchangemen in the industry with the result that offers were immediately forthcoming and one of them who represents a great chain of theatres said, "No one could have told me I would have sat through eight reels of comedy and laughed at the last act in the last reel."

So thoroughly impressed are we, and everybody we have shown the four completed pictures to, that we have now definitely decided to make twenty-four a year and release them on a franchise basis, and by communicating with us through the MOTION PICTURE NEWS prospective buyers can corroborate every statement we make in our preliminary announcement.

For the benefit of the readers, we will say that we have one of the best screen comedians our experience in the industry has ever brought to our attention, a remarkably prolific director, ample producing facilities, and that we have sufficient original scenarios and ideas to carry us through our first year without the slightest possibility of disappointment.

Triangle Wins in "Happiness" Court Wrangle

Court of Appeals Reverses Order Granted J. Hartley Manners Last June—Dispute Arose Over Title Alone, and Not Story

A COURT decision of unusual interest to the motion picture industry was handed down in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals last week, when Judge Ward reversed an order granted to J. Hartley Manners last June, restraining the Triangle Film Corporation from exhibiting the Enid Bennett feature picture, "Happiness," under that title.

The case originated in a complaint made by the playwright against Triangle and the Rialto Theatre Corporation last May, and the affidavits filed with the complaint showed that in 1914 Manners wrote a playlet called "Happiness," which he presented at the Cort theatre, with Laurette Taylor as star. Later it was announced he intended to present a three-act play of the same piece, and is said to have contended that he had "trademarked" the word "happiness."

In February of this year the New York Motion Picture Corporation filmed a production with Enid Bennett as star, under the title of "Happiness," and which Triangle distributed, the first presentation being made at the Rialto in Brooklyn. The suit by Manners followed closely thereafter, and a temporary injunction was granted.

The dispute was solely as to the title of the play. There was said to be no similarity whatever between the defendant's film and the complainant's one-act sketch in respect to the subject-matter and there was no evidence to show that Triangle was attempting to make the public believe that its photo-play was the same as the complainant's play. The contest being as to the rights of the parties respectively, it was of no importance, said the Court of Appeals in granting relief, that the defendant film corporation could have changed and could now change the title of its photo-play at small expense.

"The Belgian" Shown in Honor of King Albert

Ritz-Carlton Hotel Is Scene of Brilliant Assemblage to View Sidney Olcott's Production—Veracity of Film Lauded

AS a testimonial tendered to His Majesty King Albert of Belgium, on the occasion of his birthday, under the auspices of His Excellency Baron de Cartier of the Belgian Legation, Sidney Olcott's cinema production, "The Belgian," in which Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant are starred, was given its premiere in the Grand Ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel on Friday evening, November 16.

The picture was splendidly received and made a deep impression upon the brilliant audience assembled, among whom were many members of the allied diplomatic corps and New York's prominent society. At the conclusion of the showing of the film Captain C. P. Dugmore of the British army, made a spontaneous address, in which he dwelt on the detail and veracity of the picture, complimenting Mr. Olcott most highly upon the authenticity of the various incidents, as shown upon the screen. Captain Dugmore stated that the entire picture recalled to him vividly the German invasion of Belgium, where he was at the outbreak of the world's conflict.

Following Captain Dugmore, Lieutenant Count d'Ursel, secretary of the Belgian Legation, who has but recently returned from the battlefields of Flanders, in a short speech complimented the producer on the realistic Belgian atmosphere created and stated that had he not been informed that the picture was entirely made in America, he should certainly have accepted it as being taken on his native Flanders coast. Count d'Ursel very warmly thanked Miss Grant for her rendition of the golden-hearted Belgian peasant girl and commended the entire cast as being splendidly representative of their various types.

The Grand Ballroom was crowded. The admission on this occasion being placed at three dollars per seat was a notable compliment not only to Mr. Olcott's creation, but also to the true appreciation of the public of the marked advance in the moving picture art.

A few of the guests present were Brigadier-General W. A. White, Sir Stephenson Kent, Captain Norman Thwaits, Captain W. R. Dugmore, Major Ian Hay Beith, all of the British army; Lieutenant Count d'Ursel, Secretary of the Belgian Legation; Monsieur J. Geo. Van Der Kley, Comte Ferri-Pisani, Lieutenant Comte de Chevigne, naval attaché of the French Embassy; Sidney Olcott, Louis Lazard and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Angier B. Duke, Mr. and Mrs. James Lowell Putnam, Mr. and Mrs. Madison R. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. Elbert H. Gary, Mr. and Mrs. S. Goodman, Mrs. Herbert Shipman, Mrs. Alexander D. B. Pratt, Mrs. Henry P. Perry, Mrs. William Astor Chanler, Mrs. John Wanamaker, Jr., Mrs. William Disston, Madame Mali, Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, Miss Valentine Grant, Mrs. Henry J. Wigham, Mademoiselle Juliette Goudeket, Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas, Miss Elsa Maxwell, Mrs. Cyrill P. W. Dugmore, Mlle. Thamara Swirskaya, Mrs. Cornelius Tangeman, Mrs. Miller Graham.

William Fox Prepares Exhibitors for the Holidays

Six photoplays from the William Fox studios are said to be particularly attractive during the coming holiday season. The sextette consists of "A Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann, which is issued for general release early in December; "The Babes in the Woods," Jane and Katherine Lee as "Troublemakers," "Treasure Island," "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

provided for the balance and major portion of the production offers dramatic entertainment which carries assurance of a hearty reception by all others. "Sunshine Alley" has been produced with directorial skill. Mr. Noble has been painstaking and careful as to detail; the cutter has used his scissors with the eye of an artist, and the subtitler has been original in his selection of descriptive phrases, and these have been inserted without leaving the impression that the one who did them was compelled to finish the work that the director should have done.

J. A. Furey, in the supporting cast, does his usual good character work. It is hard to beat Mr. Fury in impersonations of old men parts. Dion Titheradge, in a "heavy" juvenile role, gives promise of better things to come. Ed. See, John Charles, W. T. Carleton, Isabel Berwin and Jack Grey are in minor parts. They give good support.

Ask the Men Who Know

If you have tried a thing under exacting conditions and found it stood the test, then you know what you are talking about.

Read what the operator of the Silver Palace Theatre Co., San Francisco says:

"Gentlemen:—

The Motiograph machines were installed in our booth November 1st, 1915 and have been in constant use 14 hours per day ever since. I have not spent a single cent for new parts or any other repairs during this time and aside from proper oiling and cleaning they have not required the slightest attention or adjustment.

The tention shoes and aperture plates, which are usually the first parts to show wear on any machine, are still in very good condition, the wearing surfaces being perfectly even. It will be some considerable time yet before they will need any new parts or other repairs.

Owing to the very slight tention on the film required to insure perfectly clear and steady projection, we are able to run our picture at a very high rate of speed during the rush hours, with perfect safety and without damage to the film and as our seating capacity is very small, we find it necessary to "speed up" for from three to four hours each night and often in the afternoon. In short, we have found the Motiograph to be satisfactory in every respect.

Sincerely yours,

(SD) A. F. Howell."

Better Pictures Bring Bigger Crowds

You're interested in anything that improves the quality of your show, and draws bigger crowds.

Just note the marked advantages of this Edison Mazda C, over the old arc lamp:

There's a great reduction in operating cost, through decreased current consumption.

The focus is permanent.

The light is of an even intensity—no flicker.

And this means Better Pictures, a Better Show.

Then there is less heat, less wear and tear on machines and film, due to the absence of all carbon ash—carbon and resulting carbon troubles are eliminated.

Health and Efficiency

SOME days ago I was fortunate in being able to discuss operating conditions with one of the best posted men in New York. He brought out conditions as they exist and of which the exhibiting end of our industry should be ashamed.

We are all part of a community which is supposed to be striving for better conditions, which will result in better health and greater ability to shoulder those duties of the community which fall upon our shoulders. We find, however, in a surprising number of operating rooms in New York City conditions which should not be allowed to exist. We find men working under handicaps which are inexcusable but yet which are overlooked by the authorities. Why we do not know, for the proof is there.

It is bad enough when running water is not supplied but when we find the operators in this great city not given the chance to visit the toilet from the beginning of the show till midnight we have reached a stage which is inhuman and which should be punished. Perhaps to some extent it is the operators' fault, as for example, sometime ago a movement was started to improve conditions. As a result of complaints inspectors were sent around to visit some of the worst cases. When they reported it was to the effect that they had found conditions exaggerated and actually passable. This report was brought to the attention of a gathering of operators and those cases which were known to be the worst were called upon to report on the inspectors' visit. The reply was in every case:

"Well, do you think I was going to tell him what I was forced to do in order to hold my job? No, I told him my conditions were satisfactory."

OF course, if the operators themselves are not strong enough or men enough to state facts as they are they cannot expect improvements, and those who are willing to start investigations will never accomplish anything.

Old houses cannot be changed but the new houses can be forced to put in running water in or near the operating room with a toilet for the operator. The larger houses, where several men are employed as operators, should install a shower bath, as well as the necessary conveniences which humanity itself demands.

In the old houses which cannot be greatly improved there is no excuse for present-day treatment, for any house seating five hundred or over should be made to have an operator and an assistant, who may be learning the profession, but who could and would be allowed to run the show for the few minutes when the operator was forced to be out temporarily. At the present time the only recourse is to the manager, but if the inspector happens in when the operator is out and the manager is in the booth it means the summoning of the operator to the Bureau and the recalling of his license. This is not only unfair but it is absolutely unjust.

The supper hour is another problem which should not continue as it is. A time should be set between five and six or between six and seven when the operators should be allowed to go out and eat like any other human being. If the house manager does not wish to close he can call in a relief operator, of which there are many who make it a business of going around filling in this way, or the assistant can be allowed to run things during this dull hour when there is usually but a handful of patrons in the house, if any.

AS it is at present, we find the one operator all grease and grime with a pail on the stool beside him stuffing in sandwiches while he is trying to run the show as it should be run. He can't keep his health working like this. It is impossible, and the only reason it has been tolerated as it has is because we have projection rooms tucked away where they can't be seen and where the patrons are not forced to realize the conditions under which their entertainment is being ground out. This is only another argument for the "Open Booth" as advocated by members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Another hardship which should be prohibited is the use of the operating room as the chief ventilating system for the house. With the window open in the projection room as it should be to carry away the heat from the projector all the rotten air of the house rushes up through the ports and takes the place of the fresh air to which the operator is entitled. It results in the forced closing of the window with the result that the projection room is as unhealthy as any place could possibly be imagined.

This condition has been eliminated in some houses and should be in all houses by the installation in each port of a piece of very fine glass which causes but little loss of light and that little can be sacrificed for the sake of the health of a human being.

These conditions are not only confined to New York. They are so to a greater or less degree all over the country. However, it makes no difference where they are found, they should be corrected and made just as near perfect as the physical characteristics of the individual theatre will allow. The improvements will be immediately reflected in the box office receipts.

E. K. Gillett.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Light Projection with Mazda C Lamps

By R. C. Burrows and J. T. Caldwell.
Engineering Department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., Cleveland, Ohio.

FOR a period of several years the engineering department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Company, has been actively engaged in the study of light projection with Mazda C lamps, and especial attention has been given to development work in the endeavor to produce a lamp and optical system which would successfully project motion pictures in the larger theatres.

Viewed from practical and commercial standpoints, optic projection has many complicated features. Moreover, the principles of light projection, although theoretically the same for arc and incandescent lamps, differ greatly in their application to these two forms of light source. The arc, in the past, the source most widely used for light projection, is commonly, though incorrectly, considered a point source, and light projection with arc lamps has been accomplished with varying degrees of success, due mainly to the high brilliancy of the arc and less to the efficiency with which the light is utilized. With Mazda C lamps the brilliancy is limited to about one-fourth that of a good direct-current arc, and the success with which the light is projected consequently depends upon the efficiency with which the light is utilized; this is of the utmost importance in the use of Mazda lamps for projection purposes

Fig. 1.—20 Ampere, 30 Volt National Mazda C Lamp for Projection Service

The study of an optical projection system may be divided into three parts and each considered individually, and then all considered collectively. They are the source of light (including reflector), the condensing lens, and the projection lens (or objective). They are related as follows: the condensing lens gathers the rays of light from the light source and redirects them through the object (film or slide) to be projected, to the projection lens which in effect enlarges the object on the screen.

In general, the shorter the rear focus of the condensing lens (distance between lens and illuminant) the more light it will gather up and redirect. Limitations are that:

1st—Too short a rear focus will give too great thickness of lens, which

(a) Increases absorption—due to its thickness and internal reflection.

(b) Gives poor definition, due to spherical aberration.

(c) Gives color to edges of screen, due to chromatic aberration.

2nd—Too short a focus will require light rays to strike the lens surface at too great an angle, increasing the surface reflection and causing a loss of light.

3rd—Too short a focus will require too small a bulb which decreases the wattage to a point where too little light on the screen results.

The light source may be considered from four standpoints: brilliancy, size, construction and wattage.

1. Brilliancy, limited by

(a) Life of filament: the higher the temperature, the shorter the life and the greater the candlepower emitted per unit area of filament.

(b) Diameter of filament: in general, the greater the diameter of filament the higher the operating temperature for the same life.

2. Size of source. With condensing lenses and projection lens given there is an area of source larger than which the efficiency of utilization decreases. It should be understood that a larger source size can be used but that portion falling outside the dimensions determined by the character of the optical system is used much more inefficiently than that falling inside the dimensions.

3. The construction or form of the source governs the distribution of light which in turn limits the amount of light utilized by the condensing lens.

4. Wattage. The wattage is limited by

(a) Size of light source.

(b) Construction of light source.

(c) The diameter of filament.

The purpose of the projection lens (that nearest the screen) is to gather the rays which have passed through the film and redirect them to the screen producing the size of picture desired. The larger the size of this lens, the more light will be projected, but the loss of definition and the high cost of large lenses of this kind limit the size to be used.

During the period of experimental work incandescent lamps varying in wattage from 25 to 2,000 watts, in voltage from 6 to 110 volts, and in current from 4 to 90 amperes, with various filament forms, have been investigated with a view to developing an incandescent lamp for motion picture projection. With the cooperation of theatre managements, the more promising designs have been thoroughly tested under actual service conditions with the result that a Mazda lamp operating at 20 amperes on a voltage of 28-30 volts, has been standardized by the National Lamp Works of General Electric Company for motion picture projection service.

This lamp, which is shown in Fig. 1, is of the Mazda C construction. The filament is wound in the form of four parallel helical coils lying in the same plane, and are arranged with the distances between coils equal to slightly more than one-half the diameter of the coils. The lamp is designed for operation on circuits regulated for current rather than for voltage. It is made for operation with the tip end of the bulb uppermost, has a maximum overall length of 10 inches, and light-center length (distance from the extremity of the base to the center of the light source) of 4¾ inches. The bulb is tubular and of such length that the fine particles given off by the filament are carried upward by the hot gas and deposited on a portion of the bulb well out of the zone of useful light. The rated average life is 100 hours.

No doubt the most radical change in lamp design which resulted from this research work is the use of the so-called "monoplane" type of lamp filament, which is so arranged that all of the coils are in one plane. This is not an entirely new development, since

For any showing of standard film for any purpose not requiring an image of more than twelve feet in width, and a throw of more than 100 feet.

THE PIONEER MAZDA LAMP PROJECTOR

In the Animatograph, incandescent lamps give more light on the screen, than in any other existing projector. The patented optical system, improved intermittent, and shutter, designed for use with Mazda lamps, save a large percentage of the light wasted in all other machines.

Motion Pictures Whenever and Wherever You Want Them

The Model 2 Victor Animatograph is a standard film projector, with standard slide attachment. Lamps and lenses are interchangeable, to conform to requirements of size of picture and distance of throw.

For quality of image—steadiness, lack of flicker, illumination—no machine of any size or type, is superior to the Animatograph. This is guaranteed.

TO OPERATORS.—Private exhibitions are becoming popular everywhere. There's good money in running them. It is a one man job to carry, set up, and run the Animatograph. Lamp socket attachment saves time and wiring trouble. Write for other information.

NOTE.—Eighteen months ago we announced to the trade that incandescent lamps were soon to be practical for motion picture projection. Much ridicule was heaped upon us. Now we tell you that a 40-pound machine equals the image quality of the best heavy machines. We will prove this, too, if you are interested.

some Mazda lamps, for example, the 2.0-ampere 12-16 volt automobile headlight and the 15-ampere 400 candlepower street series lamps have "monoplane" filaments. This construction allows most of the filament to come within the focus area of the lens system, to a much greater extent than that used in the regular stereopticon lamps, in which the area occupied by the filament is much greater, and the coils cannot all be in proper focus. Both constructions are shown in Fig. 2. Fig. 3 shows how with the monoplane construction images from the filament can be made to fall at points between the filament coils, if the lamp and reflector are properly focused. The light source thus becomes a solid plane of light; in the drawing, the black circles denote the filament coils, and the white circles the filament images falling between the coils. This can be accomplished by the use of a spherical mirror, as indicated in the sketch, so placed that the filament is at the center of the radius of curvature of the mirror. It is evident that to secure this effect with the stereopticon lamp filament would be impractical, if not impossible.

Another characteristic feature of the new filament construction, which is of great importance, is the light distribution in a horizontal plane. This distribution is shown in Fig. 4. As has already been pointed out, since the utilization of light is of great importance, the advantages of a distribution such as that shown for the motion picture lamp, are evident from the sketch of Fig. 4. The light from the monoplane construction falls largely within angles at which the light can be utilized by the lens and reflector system.

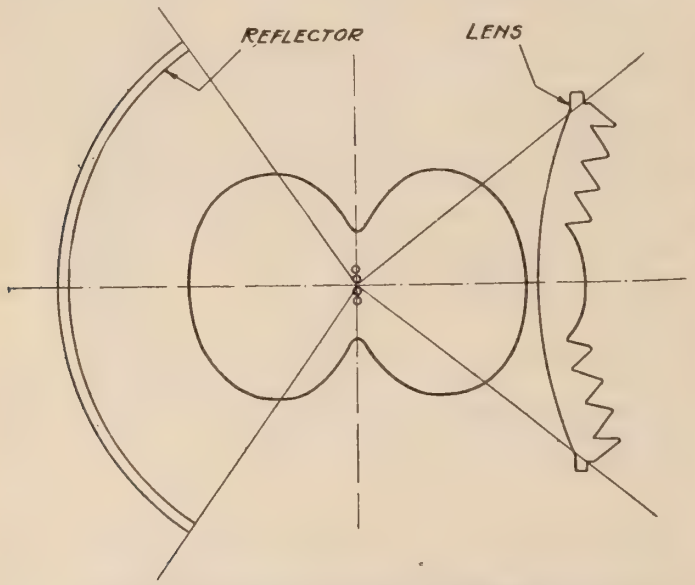

Fig. 4.—Characteristic Light Distribution in Horizontal Plane for 4-Coil Type of Filament Construction

It must not be construed that the use of the monoplane filament construction is best adapted for all types of lamps for projection service. There are cases where in order to obtain the size of source necessary some other type of construction must be used.

It will be readily seen that if a large bulb were to be used to enclose the filament, advantage could not be taken of the short focus condensing lens, consequently, it is necessary to use a bulb of as small a diameter as possible. The size of bulb, that is, the area, is determined mainly by the wattage of the lamp. If the bulb can be made long and small in diameter, in other words, tubular, the necessary area can be obtained with the advantage of the small diameter.

In obtaining concentration of filament, it is necessary to get as high a wattage and filament brilliancy as possible for the size of light source previously determined. This can be most easily accomplished by the use of a large diameter wire, or in other words, through the use of a high-current low-voltage lamp. With such a lamp the high source brilliancy is obtained by operating the filament at a higher temperature than for lower current lamps, and at the same time by the use of high current at low voltage it is practical to concentrate a higher wattage in the same size of source than if the lamp were designed to operate directly on 110-volt circuits. This low-voltage high-current lamp is objectionable from one standpoint, namely, that it cannot be used directly on regular lighting circuits. However, equipment can very readily be obtained for the operation of this lamp on lighting circuits; for alternating current circuits a transformer or compensator similar in appearance to that used with high current street series lamps is the simplest arrangement.

It has been found economical to burn the lamp at a high efficiency. It has also been found that where these lamps are used for longer periods, say daily, such as where they are to replace carbon arcs, the renewal cost on the basis of 100 hours lamp life is comparable to the average cost of carbons, and though the cost of carbons may in certain cases be slightly lower, the reduction in wattage by the use of incandescent lamps with properly designed lens systems is such as to more than overcome this difference.

An article of a general nature such as this necessarily cannot include a discussion of all of the phases of the subject of optical projection with Mazda C lamps. Since it is the purpose of this article to introduce the more important aspects of the subject, more details will appear in future issues of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

A Compensarc for Mazda Projection Lamps

SUCCESSFUL Mazda lamp projection, considered both from business and engineering standpoints, depends on close regulation of the current passing through the lamps, for close regulation of the current gives the most satisfactory light and by preventing undue strains on the lamp filament, due to excessive currents, adds materially to the length of life of the lamps.

The importance of having a device to give this close regulation of the current was early realized. The Compensarc engineers of the General Electric Company therefore worked in conjunction with the engineers of the lamp departments of the same company and developed for this particular purpose the Type I Compensarc.

The Type I Compensarc is a self contained device requiring no auxiliary attachments and is rated 750 watts, 110/120 volts A-C primary and 20/30 volts secondary. The working parts consist of compensator, starting switch, rheostat and ammeter. The starting switch, rheostat handle and ammeter all appear on the front of the steel cabinet which houses the compensator rheostat and other working parts. The steel cabinet is arranged for wall mounting at a point where the controls will be convenient to the projection machine operator. The starting switch at starting the lamp automatically puts some resistance in the lamp circuit, so that excessive rush of current through the cold filament is prevented. The ammeter indicates at all times the current passing through the lamp and the finer adjustments of current are controlled at the will of the operator by means of the adjustable rheostat. The operator can therefore easily adjust the rheostat to compensate for the slight variations in the commercial line voltage and thereby conserve the life of the lamps.

Victoria, B. C., Operators Endorse Anti-Misframe League

MR. MARVIN H. THOREAU, Royal Victoria theatre, Victoria, B. C., sends in the applications of seven Victoria operators, for membership in the National Anti-Misframe League, stating that four of the new League members belong to Local 348 of Vancouver, and the other three to Local 168 of Victoria. According to Mr. Thoreau, there is but one other operator in Victoria who has not applied for membership in the N. A. M. L.

We believe it will be no trouble to induce this lone exception to indorse the policies of the League, and that the progressive operator League members of Victoria will shortly see to it that their city is solid for progress in projection and improvement in the condition of the films they use.

No Bother with a National MAZDA Lamp

When you turn on a MAZDA lamp at home you don't think of it again until it burns out or you turn it out. Your projector light need give you scarcely more trouble than that! If it's a NATIONAL MAZDA, you focus it once—then pay it no attention for 100 hours. When it burns out you swing another NATIONAL MAZDA into place—and instantly go ahead for another 100 hours.

What does it cost? Renewals cost no more than your present carbon renewals. Cuts two-thirds from the cost of your current. Saves the heat-breakage of lenses and cracking of carbon jaws, and prevents much of your present repair expense. The savings pay for the new equipment in three to six months.

Does it improve the screen illumination? It does. The light is steady, flickerless and uniform over all the screen. No phantoms or shadows. You get BETTER PICTURES—at a saving in cost—and with great improvement in the conditions in the booth. THE WAY TO BETTER LIGHT

The Measurement of Absorption Spectra

TO the active experimenter on color photography the spectroscopic examination of color-filters is a subject closely allied to the estimation of the color-sensitiveness of photographic emulsions, for the correct adjustment of color-filters to color-sensitive emulsions is an absolute requirement in a scientifically worked out color process, and such adjustment can only be effected with the aid of quantitative data concerning the spectral characteristics of emulsion and filters. We have shown in the preceding article how the color-sensitiveness of plates and films may be ascertained, and it will now prove instructive to outline the methods of securing quantitative information about the spectrum transmissions of colored solutions and such other media as are used for color-filters by experimenters and workers on color photography.

It is well known that most all colors are the result of selective absorption, and since, in general, it may be stated that a given color results from the fact that its complementary colors have been absorbed from the light which makes this color visible, it is at once apparent that in defining and analyzing a color the portions of the spectrum which have been absorbed, or extinguished, in its production, are a logical subject of investigation. As photographic color-filters are naturally composed of light transmitting media, we leave out of consideration the production of color in opaque bodies by selective absorption, and will confine our attention to transparent absorbing media, such, for instance, as colored solutions, colored glass and colored gelatine. Upon examining a transparent colored medium, a piece of colored glass for instance, with a spectroscope it is seen that some portions of the spectrum are not transmitted by the medium in question. The colors which are not transmitted are represented in the resulting spectrum by black bands, showing that certain portions of the incident light have been filtered out in passing through the colored glass, and hence the origin of the term light-filter or color-filter. The extent of the spectrum which is transmitted by a filter or other transparent colored medium under examination is known as an absorption spectrum because the dark bands crossing it at one or more places show the spectral regions or colors which have been absorbed, or in other words, are not transmitted, by the filter.

When the dark bands of an absorption spectrum are examined it is seen that the edges of some bands are very sharply defined while the edges of other bands shade off gradually, or a band may have one sharp edge and one edge which shows a gradually decreasing absorption. Baly points out ("Spectroscopy," page 500) that all absorption bands may be resolved into their component spectral lines, and that a sharp edge to an absorption band is caused by the spectrum lines being very close together at that end of the band. The end of an absorption band which shows the sharpest or most abrupt edge is known as the "head" of the band, and may be either toward the red or the blue end of the spectrum, but it happens in the case of the Isocyanine series of color sensitizing dyes, and also in the case of some dyes used in filter making, that the heads of the absorption bands are almost all toward the red end of the spectrum. Another point of importance in the study of absorption spectra is the accurate location of the position of maximum absorption in an absorption band, and as this is not always at the middle of the band, as might be supposed, it is advisable to study absorption spectra with apparatus which will give the absorptions at various wave-lengths in the form of a curve, instead of trying to estimate the transmission by examination of the apparent intensity at various parts of the band by the use of an ordinary spectroscope.

The two most practical methods of securing accurate data on the absorption spectra of dyestuffs, or other colored solutions, and the various transparent media used as photographic color-filters, are the use of a spectrophotometer or the photographing of the absorption spectra upon suitably sensitized plates through the instrumentation of a diffraction spectograph such as was figured and described in the preceding article.

The most accurate method of recording absorption spectra is by measurement with the spectrophotometer, but this is also the slowest and most tedious method and is limited in extent to the visible spectrum, while with a spectrograph the infra-red and ultra-violet spectral regions may be photographically recorded.

As the spectrophotometer is such an important instrument in physical, chemical and physiological research it will be well to outline the principle upon which these instruments work before considering their application to the subject in hand. Briefly, a spectrophotometer is a spectroscope provided with two collimator-tubes and two slits, and with the eyepiece of the observing telescope provided with a pinhole ocular, or a narrow slit, which allows very narrow portions of the spectrum to be isolated. In front of the slit of one of the collimators is placed the color-filter or solution whose absorption is to be measured, while the standard or comparison light source is placed before the slit of the other collimator. The light beams from the two collimators now fall upon a prism and are dispersed into spectra, which, by special adjustment of the apparatus may be made to appear close together, one above the other. In this most elementary style of spectrophotometer the absorptions are measured by equating the luminosity of the comparison spectrum to that of the absorption spectrum of the substance being measured by closing the slit of the comparison collimator, but it has been found that adjusting the intensity of the spectrum used for comparison purposes by altering the slit width is subject to considerable error, and requires exacting computations and the employment of correction factors to compensate this defect.

This fact has led to the perfection of polarization photometers and spectrophotometers which are a practical improvement over slit-width adjustments, and the polarizing principle of equating the luminosities of a comparison and an absorption spectrum may be shortly stated as follows: In the tube of the comparison collimator is mounted a Nichol prism which polarizes the comparison beam, and in the observing telescope is mounted an analyzing Nichol which may be rotated about its own axis. Now, as is well known, the light transmitted through crossed Nichols is proportional to $\text{Cos}^2\,\theta$, where θ is the angle between them, and thus the intensity of the comparison spectrum can be reduced to the intensity of the absorption spectrum by rotation of the analyzing Nichol, and the opacities as observed at various wave-lengths throughout the spectrum are read from a scale over which moves a pointer attached to the analyzing Nichol. It should be mentioned here that a spectrophotometer must be provided with a movable telescope or some other means of passing along the spectrum, as only a very narrow slice of the spectrum is visible at a time through the ocular slit.

Since, in spectrophotometry, we measure the opacity (relation of the light intensity incident on the absorbing media to the intensity of the light transmitted at every few wave-lengths) it will be apparent that we can express these opacities numerically as opacity logarithms or densities—as in H. and D. sensitometry—but in spectrophotometry these values are called "extinction coefficients," following Bunsen and Roscoe's terminology of 1857.

There have been various highly accurate forms of spectrophotometer evolved in recent years, but a very suitable type for work upon absorption spectra is the Hüfner instrument, which was illustrated and briefly described in our recent article "Sensitometry" (Camera Dept., November 10, pages 3328-3329). For convenience we again reproduce the illustration of the Hüfner spectrophotometer. The Hüfner spectrophotometer, Fig. 1, as was explained in the article cited, does not have two collimator tubes and two separate slits, but has one collimator provided with a slit consisting of two separate halves. The comparison light, which enters the lower half of the slit, is polarized by a Nichol prism D, while the light passing through the medium whose absorption is to be measured enters the upper half of the slit. The two beams are optically brought into close juxtaposition by a Hüfner-Albrecht rhomb, C, and traverse the collimator tube E, falling upon a Hilger constant-deviation prism F. This prism may be rotated by a graduated drum, and the use of a movable observing telescope is thereby obviated, as by rotating the constant-deviation prism succeeding portions of the spectrum are brought within the field of view of the ocular slit with which the telescope, H, is provided.

The prism, F, disperses the two beams from the collimator into two spectra which adjoin one another in the field of view of the telescope eyepiece, I, and the intensity of one of these spectra (the comparison spectrum) may be varied by rotation of an analyzing Nichol so as to match the intensity of the other, or absorption spectrum. The opacities of the media being measured are recorded on the scale, G, which is connected to the analyzer and records its degree of rotation in opacity logarithms or "extinction coefficients."

The colored solution or color-filter whose absorption is being measured is mounted before the slit of the spectrophotometer on the holder, B, which is in the path of the rays from the light source, A. If a colored dye solution is being measured it is placed in a glass cell and mounted before the upper half of the spectroscopic slit, while a solid glass cell of equal thickness is placed before the lower half of the slit, and, likewise, if a glass color-filter is placed before the instrument for measurement of its absorption, a dummy (clear glass and gelatine) filter of like thickness and construction must be placed before the lower half of the slit.

A most important practical consideration connected with the recording of spectrum absorptions as extinction coefficients is the fact that these values are directly proportional to the weight of dye or substance used in preparing the color-filter, and reliable data is thus secured which will permit the exact duplication of any filter after its absorption spectrum has once been recorded in extinction coefficients. This is seen, upon consideration, to be comparable to H. and D. sensitometric methods, where the densities as measured represent the weight of silver per unit area upon exposed and developed photographic plates.

When, now, the spectrum absorptions of a color-filter have been measured on the spectrophotometer, at intervals of every 10 $\mu\mu$, for instance, throughout the visible spectrum, and the readings plotted as opacity logs or extinction coefficients against wavelengths, on squared paper, the result is the spectrophotometric absorption curve of the filter examined, and is the most accurate representation of its absorption spectrum which can be produced.

It is a tedious process, however, to pass through the spectrum in this manner, taking readings at every few wave-lengths, and recourse has therefore been made to photography as a handy means of recording absorption spectra. In this work the Tallent spectrograph may be used for photographing the absorptions of dye solutions. To obtain a photograph which shows the absorption spectrum in the form of a curve approximating in form the spectrophotometric curve of the same solution, it is necessary to place the dye solution in a wedge-shaped glass cell, which therefore represents an increasing thickness of solution (corresponding to decreasing illumination) from one end to the other of the spectrographic slit. The prismatic refracting effect of this dye solution wedge must be compensated by placing in contact with it another wedge-cell of identical shape and size, filled with water or whatever solvent the dye is mixed with.

In the case of photographic color-filters made of glass their absorption curves may be photographed by placing them before the slit of a spectrograph provided with a black glass wedge (described last week), but these results are inaccurate for reasons stated in the preceding article.

If, however, a spectrograph equipped with a Wallace logarithmic rotating sector is used, dye solutions may be placed before the spectrographic slit in ordinary flat glass cells and very close photographic representations of their spectrophotometric absorption curves secured, and the absorption curves of photographic color-filters may also be photographed with a close approximation to the results of spectrophotometric measurement.

The illustration, Fig. 2, shows the absorptions or "cuts" of a set of tricolor filters, photographed on a panchromatic plate in a Wallace Diffraction Spectrograph, with a logarithmic sector wheel rotating before the slit. A. S. C.

Greater Vitagraph Inspects Films Rigorously

IN the interest of better service for the exhibitor, Greater Vitagraph has recently added to its force of inspectors in all of its exchanges and is working on a night and day basis in many cities to keep film in the highest state of perfection at all times.

In the case of the New York Exchange, the company has taken additional space in the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, New York, three thousand square feet of floor space having been leased to accommodate the Vitagraph reel department. Two huge vaults and two additional inspection rooms have been constructed on the tenth floor of the building and the work of moving part of the thousands of reels into the new quarters is almost completed.

During the recent trip of the company's sales executives to the various branches a thorough check was made on film handling in each office and, without exception it was found that the system in force is well-nigh mistake-proof. Every reel of film that goes out of the Vitagraph office is doubly inspected, first when it is handed to an exhibitor and second, when it is returned by him. In order to do this is was necessary to increase the inspection force and every exchange has had added to it one or more inspectors.

The handling of green film has been another important part of Vitagraph service. With the view of prolonging the life of film, Vitagraph installed in each of its branches a Weiss Film Waxing machine and just as soon as a new print arrives from the laboratory, it is run through this machine. This is done for the purpose of hardening the emulsion on the film and serves a double purpose. It not only protects the company, but by reducing the possibility of scratching and preventing the ripping of sprocket holes it guarantees exhibitors that their film will be in first class condition.

Besides its own efforts to keep film in first class condition, the Vitagraph distributing organization, under the personal direction of Walter W. Irwin, general manager, is continually working in co-operation with theatre operators. A "Golden Rule" plan recently put into operation, whereby operators are requested to replace reel bands properly so that the man who gets them next will be spared trouble, is said to be working out very satisfactorily. The men in the projection booth realize that the request is for the benefit of all of them and when a Vitagraph reel shows up they unconsciously recall the admonition about reel bands, with the result that not for many months has the company had any complaint or trouble on this score.

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"My Yokohama Girl," a master melody and dance hall favorite, by Harry Tierney. (Published by Jerome H. Remick.

2—"When the Yanks Come Marching Home." One-step by Jerome and Furth. A worthy song to go with our great hit, "Over There." A wonderful over-night success. You never played a better dance for orchestra. (Published by Jerome Pub. Co., New York City.)

3—"Cartoons Set to Music." Rube Goldberg, the celebrated cartoonist, has set some of his nonsense to music and has succeeded in putting as much comedy in his tunes as he has in his cartoons. The first of this series are the musical settings to "Father Was Right" and "Silly Sonnets." Feist has just issued dance arrangements of these—the first as a one-step and the second as a fox-trot. They ought to prove immensely popular with all dancers. "Father Was Right," one-step, and "Silly Sonnets," fox-trot. (Leo Feist Editions, New York City.)

5—"Dramatic Agitato," by Henry Hough. This is not an ordinary Agitato Movement, but a classic in a class by itself. (Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., 47th St. and 7th Ave., New York City.)

6—"Blue Rose Waltz," composed by the writer of "Missouri Waltz," a wonderful and dreamy Waltz which can be considered a very valuable addition to any musician's library. (Forster Music Pub. Co., Chicago.)

7—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. "A Russian Pansy" is an attractive new intermezzo from the pen of Otto Langey. It has much of the appeal of the familiar "Flower Song" by Gustav Lange, together with the freshness and the interest attached to a new composition. (G. Schirmer Edition, New York City.)

8—"Strike Up the Band, Here Comes a Sailor," by Chas. B. Ward. An inspiring and well-sounding melody; most appropriate for news weeklies. (Published by Harry von Tilzer, New York City.)

9—"Snowflakes Song" and "Christmas Chimes." Two exceptional songs of rare tonal beauty. Two songs which in years to come will attain the same popularity as "Adeste Fidelis" or other famous Christmas songs. (Published by Vanderlost Music Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

10—"Longing for My Dixie Home," by Shannon. A 4/4 Andante Moderato Movement—very melodious and very effective. (Published by the Vandersloot Music Co.)

12—"In a Garden of Shadows and Tears," by A. Manlowe. A very attractive melody of pathetic character. (Vanderlost Pub. Co., Williamsport, Pa.)

13—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's Here," by Theodore Morse. Every musician knows the famous old song hit, "We Won't Come Home Till Morning." "Hail, Hail" is better. (Leo Feist Edition.)

14—"We're After You," by Lloyd. One of those typical up-to-date march songs, most appropriate for cartoons of political character. (Jeff Branen, Ed., 145 W. 45th St., New York City.)

15—"Buy a Liberty Bond for the Baby," Harry von Tilzer's latest hit. As popular as the "Liberty Bonds."

17—"Chasing the Chickens," a great Jazz number. (Published by Forster Music Co., Chicago, Ill.)

18—"A Russian Pansy," by Otto Langey. An attractive and new Intermezzo, melodious and most appropriate for love scenes. (G. Schirmer Edition.)

Stern Has New War Song by a Real Soldier

JOS. W. STERN & CO. has just brought out a new war song called "When the Moon is Shining," by Frederick Rath, a private stationed at Camp Upton. Mr. Stern and his partner, E. B. Marks, are very enthusiastic about the number, which has a mighty good swing to it, and they are preparing an extensive advertising and publicity campaign for the song. Orchestrations are being rushed and should be ready for moving picture musicians about the time this notice appears in print.

Stern is getting a great deal of new business, resulting from the war. Firms in South America that formerly handled German music are now substituting American products, and one house has just ordered an assortment of ten thousand copies from Jos. W. Stern.

Other numbers from the Stern catalog which are still selling big are: "Oriental Nights," which Anatol Friedland says is the best melody he has ever turned out; "Lily of the Valley," "Set Aside Your Tears for Laughter," and "Camouflage." "Good for Nothing Jim," by Jack Mahoney, and "I'm in the Army Now" have just been added to the catalog.

Hamilton S. Gordon's Motion Picture Album

"Gordon's Motion Picture Collection," prepared by Sol. P. Levy, contains appropriate music for every type of motion picture, and is very valuable to those who play for the program releases. The collection has music that will fit any situation, be it a fire, a storm, a wedding, railroad scenes, auto races, etc. With a copy close by no picture musician need worry about the future. There are two volumes and both have been heartily endorsed by the leading motion picture producers.

Five and Ten Cent Stores Feature "Over There"

Many of the windows of the five and ten-cent stores are covered with copies of "Over There," which is good proof that Feist has not let any grass grow under his feet since he acquired the number. While the song has enjoyed a big sale here in the East, the West has scarcely been touched, and by the way the calls are coming in for copies and orchestrations, it would seem that western folks are just beginning to realize that it is the biggest patriotic number that this country has ever seen. Of course, "Over There" does not prevent other songs from selling over the five and ten-cent counters, and among the numbers that made the cash registers ring frequently in three big stores one day last week are: "I Don' Want to Get Well," "My Hawaii, I Hear You Calling Me," "It's a Long Way to Berlin," "Mother, Dixie and You," "Set Aside Your Tears," "Valley Rose," "Missouri Waltz," "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are Tonight,"

"Just as Your Mother Was," "After the War is Over," "The Darktown Strutters' Ball," "There's Some One More Lonesome Than You," "Lily of the Valley," "A-M-E-R-I-C-A," "Somewhere in France Is the Lily," and "It's a long way to the U. S. A." And when all is said and done it is the sales that indicate the popularity of any song.

Echo Music Company's Catalogue Selling Fast

On his last trip through the West, James W. Casey, who is at the head of the Echo, took orders for more than 100,000 copies of "My Hawaii, I Hear You Calling Me," which he purchased some time ago from the manager of a five and ten-cent store for $500. Up to the present time the number has been recorded by seventeen phonograph and music roll companies, and the royalties for the past three months amount to $1,500. This is one Hawaiian song that never fails to please a buyer or a customer. "My Golden West," by James W. Casey, has just been issued by the Echo Company. It is a wonderful number.

Wm. Jerome's New War Hit

In "When the Yanks Come Marching Home," by Jerome and Seymour Furth, the firm appears to have another smashing patriotic hit. Frank Troupe, the general manager, says that it is selling faster than anything they ever had, considering the short time it has been out. With a number of this sort Jerome need not worry about this future prospects as a writer or publisher.

E. M. WICKES.

General Comments

LWOLFE GILBERT and Anatol Friedland have leased three floors of 232 West Forty-sixth street, where they will be ready for business in a few days. The first song to be issued by them is "Are You from Heaven," a ballad, which they have been featuring at the Palace theatre.

P. J. Holwey at 146 West 45th street, has become the Eastern representative for Pace and Handy, the Southern "Blues" specialists. "Beale Street Blues," "Joe Turner Blues," and others of this type are now ready for performers and musicians who have calls for this sort of music.

The Forster Music Co., Inc., has just issued an excellent instrumental number, called "Chasing the Chickens," by Ray Walker. It carries a wonderful swing and is well suited to comedy pictures. When writing for orchestrations address the home office, 509 So. Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The Vandersloot Music Co., Williamsport, Pa., is receiving many calls for its novelty number, "Christmas Chimes," which is very appropriate for Christmas scenes and the coming holidays.

Jos W. Stern & Co., have a special edition of motion picture music that is making many friends among musicians who play for the pictures.

THEATRES WORTH WHILE

Exterior and Side of Lobby, Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J.

Strand at Perth Amboy Notable New Theatre

WITH the opening of the Strand theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., a new standard has been set for a motion picture house in a city of 50,000. The theatre is one that would be a credit to the largest cities, and it is an example of what can be done by careful attention to every detail and getting the most out of every expenditure. While the house itself does not represnt a lavish expenditure, the architect, builder and all concerned saw to it that everything was of the best.

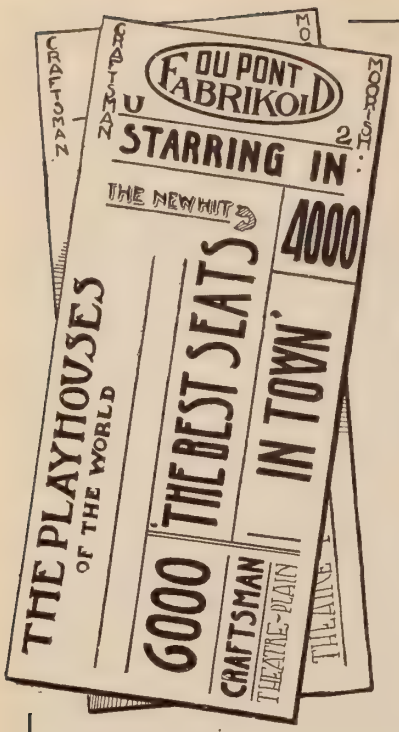
Auditorium Strand Theatre Showing Panels in Side Walls

Connihan and Shannon, who have offices in the Strand theatre building, New York, are the lessees. They already operated the Majestic, a vaudeville house in the same city.

The exterior of the Strand is of white glazed brick and marble. There are two small stores on either side of the handsome lobby, in the center of the front. The interior of the lobby, which is illustrated here, is unusually striking. It is decorated with stucco and paneled, and in each of these panels hangs a picture of one of the stars who will be seen regularly at that house.

Passing into the theatre itself one is immediately struck by the art panels on either side of the auditorium. These are pictures, artistically done and in keeping with the whole of the theatre. There is an elaborate stage setting which will be changed from time to time.

The decorated steel ceiling adds much to the general effect. There are four boxes on either side of the stage and there are 1,300 seats, furnished by the American Seating Company, and of special design.



Stage Setting and Boxes, Strand Theatre

Music is furnished by an excellent orchestra and music will be one of the features of all pictures shown at the Strand. Two Simplex machines are used.

Typhoon cooling system is installed. This is equipped with two eight-foot fans of the reversible type which enable them to drive out the foul air and drive in the fresh. They were especially designed for this house by James H Dailey, C.E.

The Strand occupies a plot, 61 by 166 feet. The height of the ceiling is 28 feet, the stage, 24 by 61, and the lobby, 20 by 45. Joseph Duke Hampton, of New York, is the architect, and it is

Knickerbocker Appeals to High Class Trade

KNICKERBOCKER THEATRE, Euclid avenue and Eighty-third street, Cleveland, Ohio, is setting a high mark for the other houses of that city. Under the management of Emery N. Downs there have been many innovations introduced which have attracted attention all over the country.

The theatre is owned by the Atalas Amusement Company, and is built of brick and concrete, occupying a plot 90 by 170 feet. The theatre seats 1,000, the chairs having been made by the American Seating Co. The interior of the house is finished in pearl gray with panels of burnt orange tapestry effect.

The house has a special ventilating system, fresh air in the summer and heated air in the winter being blown in from the roof. The Knickerbocker uses two Powers' 6-A machines with a throw of 67 feet.

The lobby is 27 by 44 feet, and is equipped with special Menger and Ring frames. In the ticket selling booth there are automatic cash register and ticket selling machine and a Barrett change maker.

One of the special features of the theatre is the splendid ten-piece orchestra. The theatre caters to the fashionable Euclid avenue trade, and to the students of the Case School of Applied Science and Reserve College. The theatre uses Paramount service the first four days of each week, and open bookings for the remaining three days. Ten and fifteen cents is the charge for the matinee, and the evening prices are 15, 25 and 35 cents. Four shows of seven or eight reels are given each day.

Manager Downs is a great believer in advertising, and a number of his displays have been printed in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. He uses the daily papers Sundays and every day of the week. In addition he employs a mailing list, and puts special emphasis on the service that he accords his patrons.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARIZONA

The new Gondolfo theatre at Yuma was opened a week or so ago under most auspicious circumstances. During the course of the evening Judge J. H. Westover, representing the Yuma Chamber of Commerce, paid a high tribute to John Gondolfo, whom he addressed as "Big Chief John Gondolfo," and eulogized the public spirit of the townspeople in aiding Gondolfo in his venture.

CALIFORNIA

Plans have been prepared for the enlargement and practical remodeling of the Rosemont theatre at Huntington Park, a suburb of Los Angeles. The building will be extended 51 feet to the property line in the rear, a new front put in, newly equipped throughout and made modern in every way. Mr. Lewis, who has recently erected the block of new buildings, is the owner and has let the contract to W. A. Alexander, the local contractor. The work will be started at once and rushed to completion.

The new Edison Building, now in course of construction at Third street and Broadway, Los Angeles, is fast nearing completion and the theatre part of it will be remarkable not only for its size but for the construction of the gallery, which is carried on a reinforced concrete arch of a 110-foot span. The seating capacity of the place will be close to 3,000. Sid Grauman, a San Francisco theatrical man, has taken over this part of the property for a term of years. The big Broadway improvement will cost, with all equipment, close to $1,000,000 and is being built by the Stability Building Co., which is composed of some of the leading property owners of downtown Los Angeles. A. C. Martin is the architect and R. H. Arnold has the contract.

The new Mission theatre, erected hardly a year ago in San Francisco and one of the finest in the West, is being enlarged and 1,000 seats will be added, making a total of about 3,000. A formal opening of the reconstructed house was planned for Thursday, November 15.

CANADA

A million dollar vaudeville and moving picture house is being built in Montreal by Marcus Loew, who owns 127 theatres in the United States. This theatre will be the largest in Canada and is to be a palatial structure. Costly Italian marble is to be used in constructing the walls and floors, while silk hangings and beautiful mural decorations will be in evidence, the color scheme to be harmoniously rendered in French gray, rose and gold. A unique and magnificent lobby leads from the main entrance into the rotunda. Here patrons may promenade, or before a homelike fireplace read magazines, provided by the management. Writing tables are also to be provided for the use of the audience. On account of the cantilever principle on which the theatre is being built the use of pillars is obviated and an uninterrupted view of the stage from any seat in the house will be possible. Concealed lighting is used throughout and seven different colored lighting effects can be obtained. Equally luxurious is the accommodations for the artists. A green room is provided for their use behind the stage which is the largest in Canada and shower baths are fitted to every dressing room. The maximum admission price will be 25 cents, with the exception of the boxes. Three shifts of men are working on this building to rush it to completion.

The new Allen theatre, Toronto, opened last Saturday night. The public of Toronto have been looking forward with interest to the opening of this new first run downtown theatre. It will be one of the finest theatres in Toronto, with Ben Cronk as manager.

The Oakwood theatre, Toronto's new uptown modern theatre, opened on November 12. This theatre has been built in one of the finest residential districts in Toronto. The Oakwood has been built with an eye to comfort, exclusiveness and unusual entertainment and will cater to the higher class of moving picture fans.

IDAHO

John Nickey is having plans prepared for the erection of a $6,000 structure of brick and stone for a motion picture house. The building is to be modern and will be 25 x 75 feet and have a seating capacity of about 300. The construction will be under the supervision of Mr. Hodgkins of Post Falls.

ILLINOIS

Plans for the enlargement and remodeling of the Triangle theatre, Evanston, have been drawn up and the alteration work will be commenced by spring. The seating capacity will be increased to 1,000 or 1,200. There are two plans under consideration, one for an addition to extend south of the present building, the other calls for an extension north. No decision has been reached as to which will be followed.

The Bodkin-Keane theatre with the proposed enlargement will be the largest in the city. Its present seating capacity is slightly more than 400. In addition the entire building will be redecorated. Manager B. F. Teetzell has been appointed afternoon manager at the Strand theatre, allowing Manager Bodkin to review every picture that is released for showing in this State. By installing overhead lights in the Strand theatre the interior is light enough to read by and does not interfere with the projection of the picture. The same scheme will be tried at the south end show house.

The Jacobson block, fronting 85 feet on Main street by 144 feet on Madison avenue, Peoria, has been sold by L. W. Allison, trustee, to J. W. McDowell of the Title and Trust Co., acting for a client who as yet is not disclosed. The deed was recorded recently, the consideration being $150,000. A part of the site will, it is stated, be used in the building of a magnificent motion picture theatre, which, it is said, will be the finest theatre of its kind in the Middle West, and even Chicago will have nothing to equal its gorgeousness and artistic embellishment. Plans for the new building have been drawn and now that the transfer is made the contracts will be let very shortly and the work of construction begun. Speculation is rife as to who the new Richmond in the motion picture field really is, but beyond the fact that it is local capital those conversant with the deal decline as yet to announce. This sale will practically clear up the tangled affairs of Attorney Abe Jacobson and to a large, perhaps entire, extent permit him to straighten out the financial entanglement in which he became involved some years ago.

Mrs. Celia Zahr has purchased the Capps Building, on the north side of the public square, Mount Pulaski, and is making arrangements to remodel and there open the Dreamland theatre, which at present is located in the I. O. O. F. room.

INDIANA

The Royal theatre, at Portland, is undergoing extensive repairs. Manager Templeton proposes to make it into one of the niftiest little movie houses in this State. To that end he is adding new opera chairs, new carpets, mattings and sidewalk canopy, besides redecorating the interior, which will put an entirely new face on the play house. The color scheme is a skilful combination of red, gold and green, with pretty paneling. A big, new electric sign will be installed and a new piano has been ordered.

The Majestic theatre, Logansport, formerly the Nelson theatre, which has been undergoing a thorough course of improvement and embellishment, is practically completed and Manager Robinson recently opened the theatre for the inspection of the public and a general reception for the people. A trip through the Majestic theatre will disclose the fact that the whole interior appearance has been revolutionized by the painters, decorators, carpenters, upholsterers and the small army of busy folk who have swarmed over the place during the period of improvement. The house has been painted and decorated from pit to dome by the Becker Wall Paper Co. Walls have been beautifully decorated in harmonious tints, the boxes have been finished in white enamel, floors have been painted, new carpets laid, new lights have been installed, seats reupholstered and varnished, the box office has been changed to the lobby near the entrance door, and fitted with new office equipment, throughout the building there is the smell of freshness that is invigorating.

J. H. S. Ellis has announced his intention of thoroughly remodeling the interior of the Ellis theatre, Rensselaer. Present plans are to remove the entire present balcony and make a new one that will extend from the rear of the present balcony to the front of the building. The main floor will remain as at present and beneath the proposed balcony will be constructed several suites of office rooms. The new balcony will have two stairways leading to it instead of one as now.

IOWA

D. Earl Combs' new theatre on South Main street, Charion, was opened to the public a few days ago, and while the evening was cold and threatening a fine audience was present. The theatre had not been completed, owing to the inability to get workmen and materials and the light fixtures were not in place, but the management took care of the crowd well in spite of handicaps.

MASSACHUSETTS

The Haynes Construction Co., 40 Court street, Boston, has the contract for the erection of a theatre at 213 Hanover street for Tivoli Amusement Co.

MONTANA

A. M. Holter of Helena, Firman Gage and F. A. Schlick of Missoula became the incorporators Saturday of a company capitalized at $125,000 which proposes to build a new, modern moving picture house in Missoula in the near future. Other capital is interested but the investors' names have not been told. The building will be located on a favorable downtown site. It will be constructed in a thoroughly fireproof manner and seat 1,200 people. Accommodations are also planned for five retail stores and for a large hall for general purposes. A modern ventilation system will feature the theatre, which will provide a change of air every ten minutes. The plans are now being prepared by architects.

NEW YORK

Another motion picture theatre is about to be opened in Binghamton. A. W. Newman and Lee M. Cafferty, heading a corporation for the operation of a motion picture house, have secured the Lyric theatre, on Water street, and are remodeling it so as to make it sanitary, comfortable and up-to-date in every way. The workmen already are busy on the interior of the building. It is expected that it will be ready for opening in about five weeks.

Frank Tinney has engaged Christian E. Kern, of East avenue, as the architect for his new theatre building, to be erected on West Merrick road, Freeport, on the property formerly occupied by Charles I. Wallace.

Ground was broken for the new Keith theatre and office building in South Salina street, Syracuse, recently. Maurice Goodwin, attorney for the Keith interests, presided and introduced the speakers.

A. L. Hoag & Son, the West avenue automobile agents and garage proprietors of Lockport, recently made announcement of their purchase from the Miller estate of the old Exchange Hotel property, on that street, near Transit, upon which it is proposed to erect a two-story concrete and steel garage and ground floor theatre.

It is expected that the new Regent theatre, being constructed from the old Johnson Opera House at Seneca Falls, will be opened on Thanksgiving Day.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Orpheum theatre, Reading, opened its doors a week ago for the first time as a motion picture playhouse. The Wilmer & Vincent management guarantees the picture and screen devotees of Reading entertainments of superior grade and only features of recognized merit.

Harry Stahl is completing final negotiations preliminary to starting the erection of a $35,000 vaudeville house on Idaho street, Farrell. Mr. Stahl is having the plans drawn now. He states that the playhouses will be one of the finest in this section of the State. The interior decorations will be copied on the principles of Gothic architecture and the seating capacity will be 1,000.

WASHINGTON

Work has started on the construction at Camp Lewis, Tacoma, of a $27,000 theatre. The building will be inside the camp grounds, not far from the administration building. The stage will be large enough to accommodate the biggest productions. The seating capacity will be 3,000. There will be twelve side exits and five large entrances.

Señores y Amigos

Those who enable the Operator to project pictures that delight his audiences and his employers, are truly his friends.

No wonder, then, that this Operator in San Pedro de Macoris addresses us as "Señores y Amigos" (Gentlemen and Friends).

San Pedro de Macoris, Oct. 15, 1917.

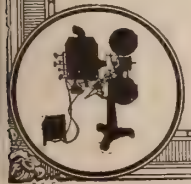
Precision Machine Co.,
New York,

Gentlemen and Friends:

The purpose of this letter is to state the following in regard to your Simplex Machine:

It is over four years since our Manager installed a Simplex in the Theatre, and in all that time no repairs of any kind have been needed.

As a result, I recommend to everyone intending to go into the Motion Picture business to get the Simplex Projector, in order to obtain the perfect projection for which these Machines are known, and also because they are so strong and durable.



You may make use of this as you see fit, as proof of the satisfaction your Machine is giving. I place myself at your disposal.

Respectfully,

(Signed) Miguel de Rodriguez

Think of it! Here's a Theatre 'way down in Santo Domingo that has projection equal to the best houses on Broadway (where, of course, the Simplex is considered necessary—and still there are Exhibitors right in these United States who haven't yet made sure of Projection that Pays: the Permanently Perfect Projection only the Simplex can give.

There's gain in giving. Give your Operator the Simplex and you'll see.

Thackeray is said to have discovered the title for "Vanity Fair" in a dream.
That was before the days of the PARAMOUNT--MACK SENNETT COMEDIES.
In fact, if anybody had ever dreamed of anything like "The Pullman Bride" in Thack's day, everybody in the town would have been praying for sleep.

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies

"THE PULLMAN BRIDE"

"Here comes the bride" and "Oh, Boy"—it's some bride.

It's a fine little wedding with the groom all resplendent with that greenish expression, and the meek little bride with the exultant look and a piano mover grip on his arm.

Gosh—ain t matrimony wonderful.

And the Pullman honeymoon—that's when it really starts—Oh! merciful camouflage—the wedding party gets so mixed.

Did you ever think of all the funny things that could happen to a new bride in a Pullman car?

Of course you couldn't

But MACK SENNETT didn't miss any—in fact he invented a few new ones.

Don't miss it.

A new force at work for the exhibitors of America

Leading, as always, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has encouraged newspapers to go to work seriously and scientifically, to develop our great industry.

Of course, exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures will reap most or nearly all of the benefit of this great movement, because it is so firmly impressed in the minds of newspapers through the million dollar advertising campaign, and from actually viewing the pictures and plainly recognizing the superiority in quality—that there are only two kinds of pictures, namely, Paramount or Artcraft Pictures —and the others.

For instance the Troy (N. Y.) Sunday Budget writes in part—

"I might call your attention to the fact that on Sunday, December 9th, we plan to put out a special theatrical and motion picture section of some 12 or 16 pages, which we will circularize from Troy, Albany, Cohoes, Watervliet, and Mechanicsville—the general idea of this section being to create sentiment for the need of amusement of our people in the midst of war times. The section will contain strong editorial argument, specially written articles by well-known men generally and locally, on the subject of amusement. The fact that there are very few legitimate theatres in this territory will make the section chiefly devoted to motion picture theatres."

We have literally hundreds of letters of this kind and in an early issue of the "Morning Telegraph" where the space available for display is larger, we will print excerpts from thirty of them, selected to cover nearly every State in the Union.

Here is a permanent value—the exhibitor buys in addition to the privilege of showing the foremost stars and productions available today.

Here is immediate revenue, which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is turning to the thousands of theatres on whose screens the Paramount and Artcraft productions are seen.

Pictures that are worthy of newspaper backing are the pictures your patrons want to see—and you want to show.

High class comedies—the kind that the public has demanded for years—now made available for theatres everywhere.

Boundless Enthusiasm for "Over Here"

New York Tribune:

"EVERY MOTHER WHO HAS GIVEN HER BOY TO HER COUNTRY SHOULD SEE 'OVER HERE.' 'Over Here' shows in the minutest details how our soldiers are made fit to go 'over there.' ANY ONE WHO IS INTERESTED IN WINNING THE WAR WILL BE INTERESTED IN THIS PICTURE."

Moving Picture World:

"'Over Here' is strongly imbued with the spirit of patriotism, not alone through the nature of the picture itself, but by means of subtitles which are stirring and which make the picture an inspiration to work and fight for the 'freedom of democracy.'"

VARIETY:

"'Over Here' is a two-reel picture distributed by World, showing in a most interesting and often a most inspiring way how the big cantonments are created for the reception of our troops.

"The main interest in such a production, aside from the patriotic feature, which is exceedingly compelling, is the speed and efficiency of the entire proceeding. 'Over Here' winds up in a blaze of fervor."

Motion Picture News:

"'Over Here' will be a worthy addition to any and all exhibitors' programs. It is timely, instructive and presents a pictorial review of activities in which we are all interested. A worth-while picture which the exhibitor of every neighborhood can book and be assured that he will have presented a picture that every patron has enjoyed."

Sunday Telegraph:

"'Over Here'—incidentally a most appropriate and effective title—is a very graphic motion picture. It is needless to say that it will be given an enthusiastic reception wherever shown. It is an entertaining and informative picture which everyone will be eager to see."

Dramatic Mirror:

"The picture has great informative value in that it shows the people of this country what can and has been done with their dollars in government preparations. 'Over Here' is calculated to interest all classes of theatre-goers."

This Is A Time To Make Friends instead of Profits

GOLDWYN PICTURES organization recognizes that in these trying days the exhibitors of North America must make profits. This is the day to make exceptional effort and the direct result of such effort by any producer is exceptional productions.

Big pictures—powerful, vital stories and tremendously popular stars—today are the only means of attracting big audiences into your theatres. And the four biggest productions immediately available in the motion picture industry today are Goldwyn attractions, released as follows:

1 MADGE KENNEDY in "NEARLY MARRIED" by Edgar Selwyn. A play many times as dramatic and joyous as the great laughter-making hit "Baby Mine." A story of situations and thrills; filled to the brim with wonderful comedy. Released November 18.

2 REX BEACH'S greatest story, "THE AUCTION BLOCK," one of the most dramatic pictures ever made and possessing greater drawing power than his noted screen successes, "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Barrier." Given at your regular rental to Goldwyn contract customers. The first and only Rex Beach production ever available in this manner. Released December 2.

3 MAE MARSH in "THE CINDERELLA MAN" by Edward Childs Carpenter. A beautiful and wonderful holiday picture made by one of the greatest of all directors, George Loane Tucker. A picturization of Oliver Morosco's big stage success. Released December 16.

4 MARY GARDEN in Anatole France's famed story, "THAIS," bringing this artist of world-wide reputation to the screen for the first time. This will be the most sensational and remarkable box-office success ever booked for your theatre, and you get it at your regular Goldwyn rental. Released December 30.

Another Smashing Success for Unrivalled Madge Kennedy

EXHIBITOR telegrams and newspaper reviews in important first-run cities make good the Goldwyn prediction that this joyous girl from the beginning would be one of the screen's most popular stars. Enthusiastic reviews quoted here reveal that

MADGE KENNEDY in Nearly Married

by Edgar Selwyn

instantly registered both a box-office and dramatic success and that her popularity is increasing with amazing swiftness.

PHILA. NORTH AMERICAN: Edgar Selwyn's "Nearly Married" is full of fun, plot, action and "pep." It is a real picture. Madge Kennedy is wonderful.

BOSTON GLOBE: An even greater success is Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" than in "Baby Mine."

BOSTON POST: Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" is drawing packed houses at the Boston Theatre.

PHILA. PRESS: Madge Kennedy brings joy to the Stanley patrons in "Nearly Married." Here is the freshest personality in motion pictures.

CLEVELAND LEADER: In all the screen world there is no comedienne like Madge Kennedy. "Nearly Married" is a huge success.

PHILA. RECORD: Here is the most notable picture of the season, and Madge Kennedy at one leap landed at the top.

PHILA. LEDGER: The winning Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" is filling the Stanley to the doors. Her popularity increases.

Remember this: In all the world there are no eyes so fascinating—
And she has the happiest, sunniest smile ever seen on the screen

"Tell Us All About MARY GARDEN in Thais by Anatole France"

IS she beautiful? Is she slim and graceful? Is it true that there has never been another woman like her on the screen?

Is she the emotional and dramatic marvel on the screen that she is on the operatic stage? Has she a sensational dance in "Thais"?

Does she wear wonderful gowns? Will her gowns and costumes suggest new fashions to thousands of women? Will women like her in "Thais"?

Will she give men "something to talk about" for the next year?

Is "Thais" a sensational production? Does it contain anything never seen before in motion pictures?

A Profit For All Who Have Played It

A SUCCESSFUL motion picture production is one that plays to a profit and creates a good reputation for the house. Any picture that plays to big business for a week but leaves a bad impression behind is a picture to avoid. The great virtue of "The Manx-Man" aside from its immediate drawing power is that audiences remember it for months after seeing it.

WHEREAS the motion picture distributers of the United States have, arbitrarily and unjustly, and we believe, unlawfully, decreed that each reel of film shall be assessed 15 cents to cover the federal war excise tax,

AND WHEREAS this assessment, now in force, works an undue hardship upon the exhibitor of motion pictures, jeopardizes his business,

AND WHEREAS the Triangle Distributing Corporation through its president, has announced its determination to absorb the war excise tax and instructed the managers of its various exchanges to cancel the fifteen cent assessment, therefore

BE IT RESOLVED by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Assn. that the thanks and commendation of this organization and its president to the Triangle Distributing Corporation not only for their fairness and justness in meeting this situation.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the members of this organization endeavor, whenever and wherever possible, to book the productions of the Triangle Distributing Corporation not only as a matter of principle but because of the high standard of quality in production which is maintained by the Triangle Distributing Corporation, and urge similar action upon the part of exhibitors not affiliated with this organization.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that this resolution be spread on the records of this association, copies sent to the various other affiliated exhibitors and copies of the American Exhibitors Association with a request that they take some similar action and that a copy be sent to the Triangle Distributing Corp.

Dear Mr. Winters,

We realize why you are a genuine success as a motion picture exhibitor, and in congratulating you we want to say that we believe this success is due to your judgment in choosing attractions.

We know you broke all your house records with "The Slacker", and now that you have shelved a picture you had advertised heavily and booked "Draft 258" for a week's run, we believe you have shown the judgment and the confidence of a great showman. Please accept our thanks as well as our good wishes.

Lillian Walker, of winsome, unpretentious charm has won world-wide popularity through the force of her bewitching personality.

"THE GRAIN OF DUST," by David Graham Phillips, the second of the Lillian Walker series is a picturization of the greatest story that the most gifted analyst of human emotions has contributed to American literature.

PRODUCED BY OGDEN PICTURES CORP.

In the direction of "THE GRAIN OF DUST," Harry Revier even surpassed his achievement in "The Lust of the Ages."

Millions have read and reread the story; as a play it scored an instant success; picturized it will triple its fiction audiences.

As a box office attraction it will surpass all former successes and prove a world-beater.

MOTION PICTURE STUDIO DIRECTORY

1918 Edition

Over 3500 Biographies of those engaged in the making of the Motion Picture are in handy form for:

The Casting Director, when he wants to cast an actor or actress for a part, must refer to the Directory's biography for full information concerning the player.

The Actor or Actress when he wants to locate a Director, Studio or Producer.

The Producer when he wants to find names of Directors and their previous work.

The Exhibitor when he wants to get information concerning players for use in local advertising and when he wants names and addresses of producers and exchanges.

The Exchange Manager when he wants information of the trade and players in pictures he is selling.

The Dramatic Editor when he is writing his Daily or Weekly Moving Picture Department.

YOU MUST ORDER NOW

The Studio Directory is scheduled for the latter part of December. It is an expensive publication to us and only sufficient copies will be printed to cover orders on hand. There will be about 300 pages and it will be bound in attractive cloth over board. The price is $1.00 per copy delivered.

If you want it, please order AT ONCE lest you be disappointed. Better do it TODAY.

CONCENTRATE

¶ This Mr. Advertiser is the time to eliminate waste.

Time to think and weigh up what you buy.

You're facing taxation—maybe a long siege of it.

Stop taxing yourself with needless advertising now.

That's one tax you can stop—yourself.

Stop the good-natured "hand-outs;" the silly tributes to black-mail; the thoughtless waste all-around.

Concentrate.

Concentrate your message in a publication which also concentrates—

—Which concentrates in service to its readers, in big, solid editorial values, in all-around business helps, in every big and little detail of successful theatre management.

—A paper which, unaided, can carry your business announcement, in a business way, to every business exhibitor in this country.

—And which solicits advertising only on a business basis.

You may LIKE the News:

but unless you take it home tonight and read it through you won't appreciate its big solid values :: :: ::

ADVERTISING PAGES—they tell all the market news—12 more in last week's issue than in any other trade paper.

EDITORIALS—always worth reading—hitting the big undercurrents—fearless, independent.

EXHIBITORS SERVICE—intelligent, practical, comprehensive sales help—12 meaty pages of it—helping exhibitor and manufacturer to increase their joint market. The best!

BOX-OFFICE REPORTS—conducted with much expense and effort. Reliable—because the many reports secured on each picture yield a just balance.

FILM SPECIALTIES—a competent editor's exclusive time given to short subjects, and the promotion of their value to the program.

NEWS—condensed, comprehensive, reliable—and brightened with the newsy treatment a newsy industry deserves.

SUB EDITIONS (1) The West Coast (2) The Central States—others to follow, bringing newsy home-editions close to the hearts of the local exhibitor.

An Advertisement by W. W. Hodkinson

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU—

That the 20 x 50 store show has grown to the Strand theater?

That the single reel costing from $100 to $1000 to manufacture has been superceded by eight and ten reel productions costing hundreds of thousands of dollars?

That the restricted "nickelodeon" public of a few years ago has so enlarged that every person is today a prospective patron of motion pictures at prices averaging twenty-five cents?

That newspapers, theatrical men, business men and banks recognize that motion pictures must become a large and permanent industry?

BUT DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU, ALSO—

That we are making and showing motion pictures with the same restricted medium which was used in the "store show" days, a medium adopted on account of its cheapness to meet the restricted conditions of the time and which only lets us hint at what might be done with the expenditures being made upon motion pictures today?

In other words, did it ever occur to you that improvements and progress have been made at every point but the picture making process itself? Do you realize this great weakness?

Would it interest you to know that my re-entry into the business is to adapt an improved process to the industry, a process that will give every holder of a theatre franchise an advantage in his territory which he can now get only through a star which his competitor may have tomorrow, or an unusual production which at best he can find but once in a month or many months?

THE NEXT DEVELOPMENT IN MOTION PICTURES MUST BE IN THE PROCESS. To an improved motion picture we can tie every advance in star and dramatic production, distribution and exhibitor-producer co-operation. WITHOUT some such force, every effort toward better things will be swallowed up, as it is today, in the unthinking struggle for individual survival.

It is therefore a new process that I am bringing back with me as I re-enter the industry. In succeeding advertisements I shall develop the details of the process and my plans for it.

Wm. W. Hodkinson

Don't Go to Washington!

That is—if we are going there to Ballyhoo, to Air Dirty Linen, to Squeal

IN a brief editorial note last week we put this question to the manufacturer and exhibitor organizations: "Who will go to Washington in December?"

We suggested a small committee, able and willing to analyze the problems of every class in the industry and prepare a definite, concrete program. We ventured mildly the thought that this committee be represented by a man of the Charles Evans Hughes type—keen in powers of analysis and strong in prestige.

The thought uppermost in our mind was a dignified representation—a representation worthy of a nation's fifth industry when that nation is at war. A representation presenting to a war-time Congress reasonable, constructive suggestions—not badgering protests and irritating criticism.

A representation likely to have some meed of success.

* * * *

AS far as we have been able to gather since last week's issue, the program now outlined is something like this:

The Executive Committee of the M. P. E. L., pursuant to a call from Lee A. Ochs, will meet in Washington on December 11, 12, 13.

A manufacturers' committee may, unless wiser counsel prevails, journey to Washington in an effort to have the tax repealed.

Representatives of the A. E. A. will be on the scene.

There is the program.

It is a program that promises a fiasco little short of criminal; a blunder likely to earn the jeers of the industrial world; a mistake monumental in its possible effect on public opinion.

* * * *

LET us face the facts squarely, gentlemen of the picture industry.

The Congress that convenes in Washington in December is the Congress of a nation engaged in a war with the might of a Colossus.

That nation needs money; that Congress must provide the money.

The taxes and handicaps that have been placed on the nation's industries are but drops in the five oceans compared to the demands which must be made by that Congress before we shall have passed the darkness of war and post-war days to the peace that was ours before the gauntlet was cast.

Washington is thinking in terms of the world's most gigantic conflict. It has taxed practically every walk of life. To some, the automobile industry, for example, it has said, "You shall be taxed, and what is more, we shall limit your output. Uncle Sam needs your facilities, your raw materials."

Washington is callously indifferent to parading delegations and boisterous committees. It considers them pests and worse.

To a Washington in that frame of mind we shall appear as a laughing stock, for we will be represented by divided camps; to that Washington and the public opinion of the nation we shall appeal as an industry of squealers.

* * * *

THERE is only one spirit in which the picture industry should go to Washington, and that the spirit of sincere cooperation with the nation's desires.

This is the spirit which will show Uncle Sam how he can secure more revenue by keeping in business houses which a few faulty features of the law are now driving to the wall.

This is the spirit which will show Uncle Sam how he can secure as much or more revenue and still modify features of the law that are working hardship on particular classes of theatres.

This is the spirit which will present the industry's facts and evidence—there is aplenty—in a dignified, loyal manner.

Blustering, bickering, ballyhooing will not clear the eyes of a Congress that knows us only through tales of million dollar salaries.

Wailing, weeping and whimpering will earn only contempt.

And contempt, fed by quarrels and dissension in our own ranks, will be but a forerunner to further taxation by a Congress sorely beset for revenue sources.

Speaking Editorially:

Music

FORTY per cent. of the success of the larger picture theatres throughout the country is due to the musical accompaniment of the picture. It has become a part of the show which could not be dispensed with. The same thing applies to the smaller houses and is just as important to them as to their larger competitors. The difference is that the smaller house does not know how to get the desired results.

We in this office are trying to do all in our power to help straighten out this condition. We have two musicians on our staff both of whom are capable of jumping right in and helping you with your individual problems. This service is free for the asking.

Our Music Department each week contains cue sheets—articles directed to the musicians and criticisms of the latest selections published by the various music publishers. We will go further—we will buy for you any numbers which you may desire and which you cannot obtain from your local music dealer. In fact, we are here to cooperate with every theatre, big or small, in any possible way.

You will find the Music Department every week in the Accessory Section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and every theatre owner or manager should see to it that his musician or members of his orchestra read it every week.

"Specials" and the Elusive Patron

OUR Box Office Reports teach many lessons. Not the least important of those that have come to our notice is this:

"Don't book a 'special' unless you expect to play it as a 'special.'"

Sounds obvious. It is. Yet it is surprising to learn the frequency with which exhibitors pay extra rentals for so-called "specials" and then seem to trust in some all-guiding fate to bring in the extra money necessary to meet the rental. To Mr. and Mrs. John Patron—on the outside looking in—there is nothing to lift the production from the level of the six others shown at the house during the week.

It might be possible to expect "star pictures" to sell themselves automatically, but the picture whose intrinsic value lies in other quarters must be sold—strongly and forcibly.

But the lesson of the Box Office Reports may be extended still further:

"Don't book a 'special' unless you expect to play it as a 'special' and unless the manufacturer gives you advertising aids that are 'special.'"

Be a Consistent Patriot

THE kind of patriotism we must be prepared to show is not the quickly forgotten "three-cheers-for-Old-Glory" variety.

Our offering must be continuous, as persistent as the faith we have in our cause.

Are you one of the exhibitors who came forward and generously lent your hand and lobby to the "Smokes" campaign?

If you haven't joined—climb aboard now.

The "Smokes" Campaign slogan is—

"For the Duration of the War!"

A Footnote to the Preceding Page

WE have stated on the preceding page our flat conviction that any ballyhoo meetings in Washington in December will be fatal. There must be a sane business alternative. One that comes to our mind is linked with our use of Charles Evans Hughes's name.

Can the picture industry afford to engage the services of a man of the unassailable prestige and ability of Charles Evans Hughes?

Secondly, will it place in his hands all our evidence and facts, gathered from all over the country to represent the situation with every type of exhibitor, offered frankly by the manufacturers to show their position?

Then let Mr. Hughes—or the man selected—go into executive session—a supreme court of one to consider the evidence.

Let us abide by the decision he makes—let our fate rest in his hands and our united strength follow the course he dictates. A Congress that knows nothing of motion pictures and will not listen to a ballyhoo will give ready ear to a dignified representative presenting facts and constructive suggestions.

He may decide that in many of our complaints we are wrong—but his decision will at least be that of justice and impartial reasoning.

Can we "think big" enough for this? Or would a move to put this dream into practicality be met with cries of suspicion, distrust and doubt?

The answer will tell you whether we, as an industry, or any single branch of this industry, should show our faces in Washington in December.

Don't Wait—Speak Up!

"I HAVE been waiting for your Exhibitors' Service Bureau to take up the question of the country weekly and help us to get real ads from their limited facilities," writes an exhibitor. "I am sure you can help us."

We will do our best—but the letter prompts a word of advice:

The Service Department is there for you, Mr. Exhibitor, striving its best to aid you. But——

Don't wait—don't sit back until it gets to your problem—speak up! The best service is the service that is timely and direct. "If you don't see what you want, ask for it."

Don't Go to Washington

THE question is imperative. The need for action is immediate. Unless we can go to Congress with clean hands in a clean business way, let us, for Reason's sake, stay away from Washingtotn.

Let us secure harmony of opinion at home. If we cannot get it let no divided camps in Washington air the industry's dirty linen.

Let us study our facts at home and decide a definite course of action. If we cannot then let no gab-fests in Washington incur for the industry the epithet "squealer."

The times demand that we "think big." Can we do it? Or shall we be as pygmies at the feet of Mars?

MARY PICKFORD was the guest of honor at a hop at the U. S. Grant hotel Saturday evening, November 10, at which the Fourteenth aero squadron and the Eighteenth company of coast artillery were the hosts. Hundreds of society people, as well as many officers and their wives, were included among the guests. Miss Pickford was fairly hidden by the floral offerings of her admirers and they formed a veritable bower about her as she received during the evening. She had spent a part of the day at North Island aviation school, where Maj. Henry J. Damm, Maj. Cushman Hartwell and Capt. William Ergenzinger explained to her and her party the many interesting things about flying. Sunday she lunched at North Island and then went to Camp Kearny to see some of her hundreds of "god-sons." Miss Frances Marion, scenario writer, was a member of the Pickford party.

MYRON H. LEWIS, film exchange manager of Los Angeles, visited the managers of local houses the past week, making his headquarters at the U. S. Grant hotel.

ON Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday nights, when the many thousands of soldiers now stationed at Camp Kearny are given liberty, the local amusement houses take on the appearance of a big bargain sale as the men crowd about the entrances awaiting admission. Every house, whether playing stock or vaudeville, having road shows or running films, is enjoying a fine trade these days.

Spokane Red Head Club Breaks into Print

WHEN information given out by the War Department that the first American to fire a shell from the Pershing camp at the Germans was an American red-head, Dr. H. S. Clemmer, sponsor and organizer of the Clemmer Red-Head Club of Boys of Spokane, Wash., wired the War Department to learn the American gunner's name that he could be made an honorary member of the Spokane boys' club. The War Department did not have the name of the heroic red-head, and so suggested that the Clemmer Club make all red-heads of the Pershing army honorary members to the Clemmer Club.

The Clemmer Red-Head Club was organized about two years ago by Dr. H. S. Clemmer of the Clemmer theatre of Spokane and now has a membership of about 100 boys, all under fifteen years of age. Since that time Dr. Clemmer and President Hill of the Northwestern Railroad have organized the Brotherhood of the Red-Head Club. The purpose of the brotherhood is to secure men to act as big brothers to the members of the Clemmer organization. This plan has been very successful and resulted in Clemmer's boys receiving good advice from their foster brothers together with presents and benefits in the matter of securing employment, etc.

Jensen & Von Herberg Big Liberty Loan Buyers

AMONG the larger sums subscribed in the Portland (Ore.) drive for the second Liberty Loan was one taken out by Jensen & Von Herberg, which amounted to $100,000. The name of Jensen & Von Herberg is synonymous with the best there is in motion pictures. They operate the well-known Jensen & Von Herberg circuit of theatres in the Northwest, comprising the Liberty, Coliseum and Mission theatres in Seattle, the Liberty and Columbia in Portland, and the Rialto theatre in Butte. They believe it is the duty of the picture industry to co-operate and help the government in every way possible, and to that end the use of their screens and their money is at the service of the government.

Ruffner of Spokane Now in Portland

RALPH RUFFNER, former manager of the Liberty theatre of Spokane, is now a Portland (Ore.) exhibitor. This highly successful theatre manager, who in three years lifted the L. W. Hutton Spokane property out of the "red" and placed it on a basis where it ranked as the most popular of all Spokane houses and at the same time the biggest money-maker, is the new manager of the Columbia theatre and publicity manager for the Columbia and Liberty, the two Jensen & Von Herberg houses in Portland.

Mr. Ruffner is well known in Portland, for he spent many years of his life here. He was Multnomah County's first motorcycle cop, was connected with the Denver & Rio Grande ticket office, and broke into the film game in Vancouver in 1909, first essaying the role of pianist.

Mr. Ruffner has the reputation of being a live, hustling manager and plays all ends of the game from the projection room to the pipe organ, writes his own ads., prepares his own press stuff, and even draws his own slides. They say he has a bagful of original ideas he will loosen on the Portland public.

With the Columbia management in Mr. Ruffner's hands, E. J. Myrick, who will continue to supervise both Jensen & Von Herberg houses in Portland, will devote most of his time to the management of the big new Liberty, the 2,000-seat house, which ranks as the largest in Oregon.

Paramount Representative is Optimistic

C. LANG COBB, special representative for Paramount, and old college chum of T. Y. Henry, local manager, spent several days in Denver last week and is now at Dallas, Tex., on the last leg of an itinerary covering eight weeks.

Mr. Cobb is not only a live wire but an optimist. He has encountered prosperity everywhere throughout the territory he has visited and believes that this prosperity is bound to continue. The present war tax on theatre admissions, he says, spells Opportunity for exhibitors—an opportunity which will never come again.

"Since I left headquarters," said Mr. Cobb, "I have seen nothing but prosperity and many indications that this prosperity will continue. It is really remarkable how the larger houses are taking to Paramount's first serial, "Who's No. 1?" There is also a strong demand for our short subjects.

"The public is taking kindly to the war tax and are paying it gladly, no difference whether the admission is 10 or 25. I wish that all exhibitors would realize what a splendid opportunity is brought to them along with the imposition of the admission tax. I refer to the opportunity afforded the exhibitor to advance his admission price. Prices in many instances have long been too low, and a moderate increase is not only justifiable but now is the psychological time for such increase. The opportunity is here now. It will never come again. I am just as sure of this as I am that the small houses are gradually being eliminated. The small, poorly equipped and poorly ventilated house must give way to modern, sanitary theatres under management which is keenly alive to the public demand for the best that the market affords."

Patrons Aid Cody's Birthday Celebration

PRACTICALLY all of the patrons of the Cody theatre at San Fernando assisted Proprietor-Manager George F. Cody Saturday, November 17, in the first birthday celebration of his life. Because of a strange series of events Mr. Cody never know what his birthday or his age was until a few days ago, when after years of investigating he found that he would be forty-five years of age on the 17th of November. When he told his friends of this they planned a surprise to aid him in celebrating the event. A general reception was held at the theatre in the afternoon and evening, following a birthday dinner at his home in San Fernando.

Activities in San Francisco, Portland and Spokane

PORTLAND lost another film exchange last week when the Pathe office closed, the equipment was moved to Seattle and the fourteen people comprising the distributing corps were either dismissed or transferred to other points.

The reason for the desertion of the Rose City is charged to the unusually high cost of maintaining the Seattle exchange, coupled with the expense of building a new structure in the Sound City. The Oregon territory will be handled out of Seattle under Manager George Endert. H. O. Strom, formerly an exhibitor of St. Helens, Ore., is to be one of the Oregon roadmen.

W. W. Kofeldt, one of the most popular and at the same time Pathe's most successful Portland managers, is expected to take the Minneapolis Pathe exchange. L. A. Samuelson, booker, is slated for a San Francisco berth, while Miss G. Laundra, cashier, has gone to Seattle.

The Pathe Exchange has been in Portland for four years, being opened soon after the big General Film shakeup.

The only exchanges now in Portland are Paramount-Artcraft, Universal, Mutual and Standard, with a General suboffice.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon has placed itself on record as opposing the 15-cent film tax levied on the exhibitors by the manufacturers and distributors. Immediately upon notice of the tax levy a meeting of the Portland members was held and the exchanges notified that the tax would not be paid. However, this was modified and nearly all exhibitors have paid under protest.

The matter of film tax has been taken up with the National League and the Oregon exhibitors are willing to do their share if the question comes to a showdown.

At this latest film tax protest meeting it was decided to postpone indefinitely the proposed movie ball, originally fixed for late in November.

Among the out-of-town members at the meeting were Lew Cullins of the Casino theatre, The Dalles; A. Bettingen of the Empress and Grand theatres, The Dalles, and F. H. Park of Malalla.

MANAGER C. M. HILL of the Portland Paramount-Artcraft Exchange has closed a contract with the Oregon State Board of Control to furnish films to the eight state institutions under the board's jurisdiction.

The contract is exclusive, one picture a week to be furnished each institution.

Mr. Hill's scoop followed close on the announcement that many complaints had been registered anent the poor class of films the state had been receiving.

E. BETTINGER of The Dalles, Ore., has raised his admission price from 15 to 20 cents for his Grand and Orpheum theatres and reports business every bit as good as usual.

ART KOLSTADT, the Hood River (Ore.) film magnate, was in Portland the other day. He has raised prices at his Electric and Gem theatres from 15 to 20 cents for ordinary shows and gets 25 cents for the bigger features.

JOE WOLKE of the Joy theatre, Grant's Pass, Ore., is getting 20 cents for his average programs and has gone from 20 to 30 cents for the film specials.

J. A. McGILL, who owns Vancouver's (Wash.) three film houses, the American, Liberty and U. S. A., reports that business is booming at the barracks city. He has increased admission prices from 10 to 15 cents.

SAM WHITESIDE of Whiteside Brothers, Corvallis, Ore., film magnates, reports that his houses cleaned up at the benefit performances staged during the Liberty Loan drive.

CONTRACTS have been made for the showing of Goldwyn films at the Clemmer theatre at Spokane. The first to be exhibited is "Polly of the Circus," and following this will be "Baby Mine," "Fighting Odds" and "Spreading Dawn."

The contract was made by C. F. Hill, northwestern representative of the Goldwyn Exchange at Seattle.

SAN FRANCISCO

THE exhibitors of Northern California are organizing a new association for their general business interests. W. E. Corey is the president and H. Taubner Goethe the secretary.

THROUGH the courtesy of the George Kleine System and Turner & Dahnken the orphans of San Francisco were entertained at the Tivoli on Saturday morning, November 24, with Mary McAlister in "Young Mother Hubbard" as the attraction.

L. W. THOMPSON, formerly salesman for Paramount, is now with the Mutual.

LATE San Francisco visitors: Henry Kadoya of Bijou theatre, Visalia; A. W. Wright of Greeland theatre, Riverbank; W. B. Martin, Star theatre, Modesto; Frank Vesely, Brown opera house, Salinas; W. S. Webster of Woodland and Dunsmuir theatres; F. B. Van Buren of Star theatre, Oakdale; James Barlow of the Empire and Maze theatres, Stockton; E. Oddy Freedman, an Eastern representative of the Supreme Feature Film Company.

FIRE broke out in the inspection room of the Fox Film Exchange, 245 Golden Gate avenue, on the afternoon of November 12, probably caused by spontaneous combustion. Three girls were at work there and one fainted as the flames burst forth. All were rescued without difficulty, however. The "Jack and the Beanstalk" film, recently exhibited here, was slightly damaged and a number of other films were either damaged or destroyed. Most of the big attractions not working were in the vault. Considerable damage was done to the room.

COL. E. C. WOOD is in town supervising the distribution of Cincinnati and Connorsville Krell products from the plants which have recently been acquired by the Werner Industries.

W. O. EDMUNDS, formerly manager of the George Kleine System in San Francisco, is now manager of the Majestic theatre, Reno. He has been in San Francisco during the past week, making new contracts and shaking hands with his hundreds of friends.

V. R. DAY, representing G. K. Spoor, Chicago, has just dismantled the motion picture studio at Niles, Cal., where a number of productions were made. This marks the passing of one of the early-day studios. Niles is about thirty miles from San Francisco.

THE new Grass Valley theatre has temporarily closed and it is said that after some improvements are made it will reopen under new management.

Carolan & Sons of the Kinema theatre, Fresno, are planning to open a new house in Los Angeles.

Random Items of West Coast Exhibitors and Producers

Spokane Manager Stars With Ray

MANAGER RALPH RUFFNER, of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, recently put over an advertising novelty that managers will find it hard to surpass or even duplicate. Mr. Ruffner recently visited the Ince Studios in California and met Tom Ince, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and the other Ince stars and Ince hit upon the happy idea of making a picture with the local manager in the cast. Charles Ray was chosen to play opposite in view of the fact that his picture was first to be shown at the Liberty.

The scenario department mapped out a little scenario and the cameraman was summoned and the making of the picture began under the personal direction of Mr. Ince, director of "Civilization" and other big spectacles. The finished picture surprised Mr. Ruffner probably more than anybody else.

The Ince craftsman had given it a standard mounting with special decorated subtitles, one reproducing the lobby and box-office of the Liberty. The production was duly announced with the regulation leaders and copyrighted and the cast was announced as "Charles Ray, the Wonder Boy, and Ralph Ruffner, the Boy Wonder."

The action merely shows the two picture men meeting on the "lot" and shaking hands and conversing. Ray is asked when he will visit the Liberty and the subtitle announces his coming appearance in Spokane and the date. Liberty audiences gave the "picturette" a "hand" at every performance.

High Jinks Benefit Association Funds

MORE than 300 Los Angeles exhibitors, exchange men and members of the film colony participated in a '49 jinks given Wednesday evening at a local cafe. The event began at 11 o'clock and, as advertised, continued until daylight. The entertainment consisted of vaudeville numbers, speeches and dancing. Mike Gore, treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, was master of ceremonies, and among the film celebrities who participated were Hughie Mack, Pathe Lehrman, Fredrick Miller, Henry Brick, C. H. Christie and others. A goodly sum was realized by the Theatre Owners' Association, which will go to the general treasury fund to combat evils of the exhibiting business.

SEVERAL of the studios have compiled figures showing the amount of subscriptions for the second Liberty Loan bonds and the sums are amazing. Hollywood's apportionment by the Government was $365,000, and of that amount $335,000 were purchased by members of the several producing units at the Lasky studio. Mary Pickford took $90,000, Douglas Fairbanks $100,000, and several others purchased large sums. Roscoe Arbuckle, working at Long Beach, gave the committee his cooperation and secured subscriptions, including his own, for $65,000. Every member of the American studios at Santa Barbara purchased one or more bonds and the total sales there amounted to nearly $300,000, or about one-eighth of the bonds purchased at Santa Barbara. Mary Miles Minter presided at a meeting and personally disposed of $100,000. Thomas H. Ince bought bonds to the extent of $100,000 and personally conducted a very successful sales campaign at the Ince studios. It is estimated the members of the West Coast film colony have bought more than five million dollars worth of bonds.

WILLIAM RUSSELL is to lay away his small town wardrobe for his next picture and blossom forth in fashionable evening clothes—at least in the first few scenes of the photoplay named "In Bad."

BERTRAM BRACKEN, who is directing Gladys Brockwell, is now learning all about Berlin at the time of the American declaration of war for coming production. This photoplay, as yet unnamed, has scenes in the German capital and on the western battle front.

SPEAKING of war, reminds one of the work of Tod Browning, his star, Edith Storey, and company now working in "The Legion of Death." Tod last week made scenes showing the Russian regiment of women, led by Miss Storey, go over the top and capture a great number of Germans. The woman's regiment for the film, like the original on the east front, was made up of Russian women who were secured for the scenes from the local Russian colony. Ten interpreters were needed.

ALMA RUEBENS has avenged the death of her French poodle by securing a $75 judgment from the owner of the murderous brindle bulldog.

GEORGE DU BOIS PROCTOR was given a momentous farewell on Monday evening, October 29, the eve of his departure for the East to see his brother, who is leaving for France shortly with the aviation corps, when friends and admirers to the number of forty dined and wined him at a popular cafe. Mr. Proctor has been on the coast for almost a year and during that time has won for himself the name of "the best known man of the industry." He first served as scenario writer for Lasky, but for five months has been with Triangle and was granted a six-week vacation for the trip East.

Griffith Speaks to Ad. Club in Los Angeles

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH was the principal speaker, Tuesday, at the weekly luncheon of the Ad Club of Los Angeles, when for forty minutes he spoke of his experiences on the western battle front, where he spent five or six months securing scenes for the coming three productions, two of which will be released by Artcraft, and the third given to the government and the receipts used for charity.

Mr. Griffith has had a number of sets created on the plot of ground in Hollywood used for the Babylonian sets, and with his company is now working there daily to complete the first subject, which will probably be ready for release within the next month.

Permanent plans are now being made by Mr. Griffith for a studio on the West Coast, and negotiations will be closed within a few days for a site in Culver City, where this plant will be built.

Parsons Leaves for East to Arrange for "Tarzan"

PRESIDENT WILLIAM PARSONS, of the National Film Corporation of America, is to leave for New York in the next few days, there to make arrangements for the premier showing of the massive production, "Tarzan of the Apes," which will be completed within the next three or four weeks. All of the scenes for this big production have been filmed, and Director Scott Sidney and staff are now giving all their attention to the editing. Because of the remarkable cast in this production, men of the film colony have voiced the opinion that it will prove one of the best sellers of the year. The long list includes Enid Markey, Elmo Lincoln, Gordon Griffith, True Boardman, Thomas Jefferson, Colin Kenny and Bessie Toner, together with many others.

It is understood it is Mr. Parsons' intention to get the production on in New York about Christmas time.

DIRECTOR WALTER EDWARDS of Triangle is now one of the city dads of Culver City. Since his election to this office by the people of the stucco suburb he has come to believe he should be interested financially in the town and so this week purchased a valuable piece of business property.

MEMBERS of the Triangle-Keystone staff still insist that they intend to move to the Culver City studio. The date is now placed two weeks in advance, and there is nothing to be seen at the Hollywood plant that would indicate there is any intention of abandoning it for some time to come. The delay is now said to be the want of dressing rooms at Culver City studios.

WILLIAM BEAUDINE is making a Triangle Komedy pertaining to a piano mover and his troubles, with Harry Depp, Paddy Maguire, Ruth Langston, Sylvia Ashton, and Ward Caulfield.

ROY DEL RUTH, who went to American Lake to become a member of the Liberty Army, has been discharged because of defective eyesight, and has returned to the Triangle Keystone studio, where he is a member of the scenario or brain department. Ray Griffith, the comedian, has been rejected on account of loss of voice and has also returned to the studio.

J. P. McGOWAN, Helen Holmes and the Signal band of serialites are nearing the end of their fifteen episode tour on "The Lost Express," the past week seeing the production of the fourteenth chapter. McGowan finished number thirteen, "The Escape," twelve thirty one day last week, and after allowing the players forty minutes for lunch, began shooting scenes of number fourteen, "Unmasked." One of the big scenes for this will be the filling up of a concrete vault slowly with water. At the same time a number of large rats are set at liberty by being shot into the tank through the water pipe while Miss Holmes is imprisoned therein. Blacky and Hobo, Miss Holmes' trick kitten and Airedale pup, are to make their appearance in number fourteen, and this will be the first time they have ever worked before the camera. For weeks the two pets have been in training for their particular stunts in this picture. L. V. Hart, assistant director, who was injured in the making of scenes at the Signal studio a few weeks ago when the entire interior of the Palace Pullman car was set aflame, was this week able to return to the studios.

FILMING of a number of scenes for "Mr. Butterfly," coming Triangle production, has taken Director E. Mason Hopper and organization to San Diego, where he will spend several days. This story, which is spoken of as a reversal of the situations and characters in the famous story "Madame Butterfly" by John Luther Long, has a big cast with a number of new faces for Triangle subjects. Darrell Foss is to take the name role, and opposite him will be Teddy Sampson, especially engaged for the part last week. Her former impersonation of a Japanese maid was for "The Fox Woman," which was produced by Fine Arts. The Triangle Company has engaged Thomas Kurihara, a Japanese actor, who will be seen in the role of father, and Jack Elbe, who will take the part of a disappointed lover. The costume department of the Triangle producing plant has been overworked for the last few days because of the costumes required for this subject. Privilege to use one of the finest gardens on the Pacific Coast has been secured, and it is for the making of scenes in this that the company has gone to San Diego.

Among Coast Theatres

JOHN NEARY, owner of the Pastime theatre at Superior, Ariz., and Al. T. Janes of Martin theatre of Globe, Ariz., have spent the past week in Los Angeles making bookings for attractions at their theatres in the future.

In a Taft (Cal.) newspaper it is announced that T. & D. circuit is to build a theatre at that place and that ground has already been broken for the erection of the new house. Mr. Langly is said to be in charge of the building. Taft is a mining town twenty-five miles southwest of Bakersfield that now has two theatres, The Rex and Airdome, and the C. & C., with 900 seats, which are owned by C. T. Cunnard.

K. BUTTERFIELD, a former Detroit exhibitor, who came to the Coast about six weeks ago and purchased the Arlington theatre on West Washington street, Los Angeles, this week became the owner of the Victoria on Pico street, seven blocks north of his other house. Mr. Butterfield will conduct both theatres in the future.

FRANK ALEXANDER, owner of the Iris theatre, located near Cahuenga boulevard, on Hollywood boulevard, Hollywood, this week let the contract for the construction of a new 900-seat house across the street and a few doors from his present theatre. The new house will have many improvements over his present one, and he plans to make it the finest suburban theatre in or about Los Angeles.

C. C. HEAD, owner of the Grand and New Fairyland theatres at Anaheim, Cal., has taken the active management of these two houses. The theatres were formerly leased, but Mr. Head has now disposed of other business interests and will have time to attend to all business pertaining to the management in the future.

M. KING, formerly owner of the Sunbeam theatre at 5722 Pasadena avenue, Los Angeles, has purchased the Wigwam of Krugher & Helfrich. This house is located at 6110 Moneta avenue. W. Powelson, who has conducted a theatre in Los Angeles for the past two years and recently disposed of it, has purchased the Sunbeam, formerly owned and managed by Mr. King.

PLANS have been completed, leases drawn and contracts let for the construction of a $75,000 theatre at Pasadena, the millionaire suburb of Los Angeles. Dave H. Schumann is back of this new theatre, and the contract for the construction has been let to George W. Simpson. Already the theatre has been named The Florence. Plans provide for 900 seats on one floor, with modern ventilating and heating system for the building. O. T. Dennis, a Los Angeles architect, who made plans for Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles, has drawn the plans for this new house. It is planned the new theatre will be ready for occupancy about April 1.

H. VON EMMEL, representing the George Kleine System, reports after an extended tour that business is flourishing in all Northern California. In the rural districts the war tax has been accepted patriotically and no effect has been felt in attendance.

PROMINENT film men going from San Francisco in a special car to attend the opening of Beatty's new theatre at Fresno on November 26 are: Managers Simpson of Triangle, Wobber of Paramount, Allen of Artcraft, Cohen of the George Kleine System, Markowitz of the California, Goldberg of Bluebird, Citron of the Fox, Levy of Mutual, Kohn of Consolidated, Hyman of All Star, Parsons of Goldwyn, Quive of Vitagraph, Stout of Select, Child of Pathe, Jensen of the World, Mr. Greenfield of the New Fillmore and New Mission theatres and several others. The married men of the party will be accompanied by their wives.

The same people are planning to go on to Los Angeles and attend the opening of Kehrlein's Kinema theatre, but this matter has not been definitely decided.

Citizens Trust and Savings Bank

HEADQUARTERS—
MOTION PICTURE ACCOUNTS
in LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

We are enjoying a large part of the motion picture business of this city.

WHY

First— Because we offer fourteen hours of excellent banking service, from eight in the morning until ten in the evening, which affords an unusual convenience for all depositors who are busily engaged during the usual banking hours.

Second—Because we appreciate the worth of, and try to promote the welfare of the motion picture business.

Third— Because our many satisfied depositors bring their friends to the bank, who, in turn, become satisfied depositors.

Fourth—Because all of the stock of this bank is owned by The Citizens National Bank, the total resources of both banks being over twenty-five million.

Newsy Notes from the Denver Field

THE World Film Corporation has installed a new Rex cleaner, introducing an innovation so far as Denver film offices are concerned. Manager Rosefield is a crank on cleaned films and insisted that his company put in one. Every World film now leaves the Denver office in good, first-class condition.

THE Rocky Mountain Screen Club, whose team secured the largest amount of subscriptions among competing teams on the first day of the recent Liberty Loan drive, has received a beautiful banner in recognition of the team's services.

The same team has since rendered valuable service in pushing Denver's quota in the Triangle Y. M. C. A. drive over the mark. Practically every employe of Denver film exchanges has contributed liberally, their combined donations being turned in as a single contribution.

FIELD CARMICHAEL, former Denver Fox manager and for the past two years holding the same position in Los Angeles, visited Denver friends last week. Accompanied by Mrs. Carmichael, he was en route to Detroit to take charge of the Fox office in that city.

THE nickel theatre is a thing of the past in Pueblo. The Colonial at that place advanced its admission price from 5 to 10 cents on November 1.

Moore & Greaves are building a theatre in Pueblo and a third theatre in Cheyenne.

FRED McCOY, widely known as an exhibitor in New Mexico, announces the opening on Tuesday, December 18, of the Park theatre, one of the largest and most modern picture houses in the state. The house will have a seating capacity of 500 and will open with a first-class orchestra and a Seeburg photoplayer.

Taggert & Taggert will open November 15 their remodeled theatre at Cowley, Wyo. Its seating capacity has been increased to 354.

J. W. SCOTT of the Mutual is out on a trip covering Eastern Colorado and Western Nebraska for two weeks. C. C. Percy, also of the Mutual, is covering Southern Colorado and New Mexico. He will be absent a month.

Harry C. Arthur, Jr., Montana salesman for Goldwyn, is in Denver for the first time since he was appointed their representative in that territory.

Ed. Head of West & Head, Billings, was a recent Denver visitor.

DEMING, N. M., has a cantonment of 25,000 soldiers. Realizing that as an ideal place for Metro's big production de luxe, "Draft 258," Special Representative Harry Lustig recently arranged for a private showing of this film to the soldiers at Deming, at which the commanding general and his staff and many exhibitors from surrounding towns were present. As a result "Draft 258" has been booked for a week's run at one of the principal theatres in Deming. As many of the boys at the cantonment were called to the colors under the 258 draft number, the production has naturally created much interest in military circles at that point.

O. HENRY and George Ade's "Fables in Slang" are drawing capacity houses at the America and the Princess in Denver. R. S. Nelson, local representative for General Film Company, says the demand for these productions is big in this territory, and exhibitors tell him the Henry productions are the best short subject drawing cards they have ever found.

The Strand in Denver is also showing Chaplin subjects to capacity houses.

T. W. TEUFEL, road salesman for the General Film Company, has just finished a successful road trip in his big seven passenger touring car through New Mexico. In this way he was enabled to carry a large amount of advertising and reports heavy bookings of General standards.

Miss Minette Cassidy, well known in Denver film circles, has joined the Denver office of the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

FRIENDS of W. J. Hazeltine, who recently joined the selling force of the Triangle, will deeply sympathize with him in the loss of his wife, who died at the family residence in Denver, Friday, November 9.

JAMES M. TALLY, who came to Denver from Salt Lake City last April as the manager of Vitagraph, has been transferred to Seattle as manager. He is a nephew of T. L. Tally of the Tally theatre in Los Angeles.

Mr. Tally is succeeded in Denver by his former assistant, A. G. Edwards. Mr. G. A. Farris has been transferred from Seattle to Los Angeles.

CLAYTON P. SHEEHAN, special Fox representative, a recent Denver visitor, has departed for his home in New York City via Kansas City. He expressed himself as much pleased with conditions in and around Denver.

The new Sunshine Fox comedies have started a week's run at the Isis and are drawing big.

D. T. McElhinney, formerly with Vitagraph in Kansas City and Omaha, has just started on his initial road trip for the Fox Film Corporation out of Denver.

War Tax Goes Over Nicely in Denver

EVERYTHING seems to be progressing nicely in the collection of the admission war tax at Denver theatres and the public is accepting the imposition of the tax cheerfully. The Isis and Paris are paying the tax for their customers, while the patrons are playing penny ante at the box-offices elsewhere.

According to H. Bradley Fish of the Goldwyn, who has just returned from a western slope trip, exhibitors throughout Western Colorado report that the people realize the tax is a government necessity and are willingly paying the extra admission. The Star theatre at Cripple Creek has solved the penny problem by issuing 2½ cent coupons covering the tax. These are sold to patrons at the box-office and may be purchased two for 5 cents or in larger quantities.

In Denver two distributors are paying the film tax for their patrons, and others are insisting that the exhibitor must pay the 15 cents per reel. Payment is being made in numerous instances under protest.

Intimate Notes About You and Your Friends

THE Princess theatre has installed the first American organ in Denver, and Eddie Horton of Los Angeles is presiding at the console for the coming three weeks. The instrument has an echo organ at the screen, while the organ proper is installed in an excavation.

O. T. Bergner, who recently added the Page and Star theatres of Medford to his holdings, is to conduct the Page as a feature house. Mr. Bergner, who was formerly manager of the Columbia theatre, Portland, is also the owner of the Vining theatre of Ashland.

F. A. PERIN of the Savoy theatre, Eugene; Ward Coble of Ye Liberty, Bend, and Ross Nelson of the Isis, Independence, were among recent out-of-town visitors at the Portland exchanges.

West Coast Exchange Notes

WILLIAM J. QUINN, salesman, is making a trip through the Bakersfield territory, and H. H. Kanagy of the same exchange is now in Imperial Valley after spending several days in the San Diego territory.

C. J. Crowley, salesman for the Fox organization, who was sent from the New York Exchange to the San Francisco branch about a month ago, has been transferred to Los Angeles, where he will be in charge of the Sunshine Comedies Department of the Fox Exchange.

EVA HETHERINGTON, former cashier of the Pathe branch at Omaha, has been transferred to the Los Angeles Exchange, where she succeeds C. B. Hammer, who has become auditor at the Pathe studio in Glendale.

Exceptional business is reported to exhibitors on the "Stars and Stripes in France" film released by Pathe. This subject had its first run at the Alhambra theatre in Los Angeles and went to San Diego, where it is now playing for a week at the Plaza theatre. In both instances the film drew capacity business.

W. J. MULLANEY, Pathe Los Angeles branch salesman, has returned from a trip through Arizona and brings reports of excellent business conditions there, owing to the activities in the mining districts.

Dan Loveridge, a former Los Angeles business man, has been added to the city sales force of the Los Angeles Pathe Exchange.

IRVING LESSER, manager of the Los Angeles All Star Feature Distributors' Exchange, has booked the Florence Reed subject, "Today," for a two-week run at Tally's Broadway theatre, beginning November 19.

Jake Cone, owner of the California Comedy and Feature Exchange in Los Angeles, has just returned from Utica, N. Y., where he was called because of the illness of his father, who died before his arrival. Mr. Cone spent two weeks in the East.

LOS ANGELES GREATER VITAGRAPH EXCHANGE has a new manager in the person of George Faris, who was transferred this week from the Seattle branch to his former home in Los Angeles. The change was made necessary by the resignation of H. M. Lentz, who has been in charge of the Los Angeles branch for the past year. James Tally, a former Los Angeles Exchange man, who has been manager of the Denver branch, has been transferred to Seattle. The changes were made by Western Representative H. D. Naugle. Faris began his film exchange career in Los Angeles when he was salesman for Greater Vitagraph, then the V. L. S. E. Since that time he has been manager of the Seattle branch for more than a year. The retiring manager, H. M. Lentz, has not made known his connections for the future, but it is understood he will remain on Film Row as manager of an exchange.

Los Angeles has a new exchange salesman in the person of Harvey Grossman, Jr. The father is connected with the All Star Feature Distributors, and the new arrival came this week.

O. V. TRAGGARD, formerly manager of an independent exchange in San Francisco, has returned to the latter city after a year's absence. He intends to locate in the South.

DIRECTOR COLIN CAMPBELL is busy with the filming of "Little Orphan Annie," favorite poem of James Whitcomb Riley, at the Selig studios. The company will leave in a week or two for the vicinity of San Francisco, where suitable small town location will be selected. The screen version for this was prepared by Gilson Willette. Coleen Moore is the featured player and the other important members of the cast are Tom Santchi, Mae Gaston, Eugenie Besserer, Lillian Hayward and Harry Lonsdale. Many prominent child players will be engaged for this picture at a later date.

The Reader Has His Say

Finds Trouble in Judging Length of Features

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: You have asked for suggestions and I believe there is one that should have some attention, perhaps not so much from your end of the great industry. But at the same time I believe you will be interested and that is in:

Giving the correct length of feature subjects, not in reels so much, as in the number of feet in each subject.

I find my greatest trouble in getting up a program that will run a certain length, buy service to make this required length and then on arrival of the feature find that it is perhaps in full five thousand feet or about forty-three hundred.

I realize it would be a hard matter for you to get this subject adjusted, but I am only making this as a suggestion to see what you personally think of it. I am sure that other brother exhibitors have the same trouble as I do.

Here for instance is a comparison: Playing Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary" I find the subject a good five thousand feet long. For Sunday I have Lou-Tellegen in "The Long Trail," and the subject is about fifty-one hundred feet. How in the world can a man judge and advertise the starting of shows?

With best wishes, I remain,

Yours truly,

ARTHUR G. STOLTE.

The Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

[Mr. Stolte's suggestion is very interesting, and MOTION PICTURE NEWS will seek some method of meeting the situation. What do other exhibitor readers think of having the reviewer state the time in minutes that the picture required when shown for review?—ED. NOTE.]

An Exhibitor of the Fair Sex Who Is Also a Patriot

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I have read with interest the many comments in MOTION PICTURE NEWS regarding the fifteen cents a reel tax. To settle a dispute will you please publish answers to the following questions:

First: Can a distributor collect this tax on contracts which are still in force?

Second: Where an exhibitor refuses to pay can a distributor stop his service under the thirty days' cancellation clause in his contract?

It would seem to me that if the distributor had given the exhibitor notice of this tax to take effect by canceling contracts after thirty days much ill feeling might have been avoided. The life of the manufacturer depends upon the exhibitor, the exhibitor depends upon the general public. I am paying the 10 per cent. tax myself. To enforce this tax on the patrons who are already taxed to the limit by the high cost of living would ruin my business. The public must eat, but they can worry along very nicely without the movies.

If we still wish to exist everyone down the line must do his bit. I cannot serve in the army, but thank God I can and will stand my part of this tax and I am not going broke either.

I have given notice to my patrons that every time they buy a ticket to this theatre at the same old price they are helping to defeat the Kaiser.

Respectfully,

MRS. MAGDA STATES.

Eureka theatre, Eureka, Nevada.

The dispute to which Mrs. States refers will probably be answered by the results of the court action in Cleveland, told on page 3967 of this issue.

[We regret that we cannot publish unsigned communications on this page. We have received a peppery letter headed "Who is the patriot, a film man, the exhibitor or the producer?" signed "The New England Exhibitor." Because of the rule regarding unsigned communications to which we must in justice to all adhere we are unable to answer this interesting letter]

Why Not a Percentage System of Collecting the Tax

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: I have been reading with interest in the trade papers items from all sections of the country expressing views on the war tax. In stating my own opinions along this line I can see no way for the exhibitor to escape paying this tax any more than I can see him escape his rental inasmuch as he must pay all the expenses of the exchange regardless of the fact that the law says and means that they should and must sacrifice a portion of their profits to the war fund. But there is a certain injustice done in this collection of the tax that compels me to express myself.

In the first place, the corporations do not in the least offer to do their bit toward this tax. Express companies, who are taxed 5 per cent., the railroads with their taxes, and in fact every corporation just unloads the burden on the fellow beneath just as the exchange does.

In doing business with the several different corporations the exhibitor finds the burden indeed a heavy one, and it is little wonder that many are forced out of business. The whole matter would have been easy to all concerned if each would make a sacrifice of his profits, but instead we find that some are using this war tax as an excuse to charge a tax on films that have been on the market for years in addition to the rental when they must know that the law requires only a tax on films released after October 4. Doesn't this look as though some one were taking a long chance for the almighty dollar—and still the exchanges will wonder why we as exhibitors do not place any confidence in them.

Communism is characterizing every activity at this time—plans which mean free interchange of protective information regarding financial ratings, business methods and so on. Are we going to let our business be an exception to this rule or are we going to open our eyes to the conditions that surround us on every side? The strength and resources that can successfully hold out against the opposition of public sentiment could accomplish tenfold as much with the good will of everybody.

We will, for example, say that a man pays $100 a day for first-run service. He must have the business to warrant this and usually the profits are in proportion down to the man in the small town paying one-tenth as much. Now if the tax is to be placed on the theatre man why is it not an increased percentage of what he pays? This would at least equalize the situation.

If the increase was—we will say—5 per cent. on the dollar for service used the big fellow would find that his service would cost him five dollars more. But at the same time he could stand it just as well and the little fellow could stand the fifty cents which would be his bit.

The exchange is not and never will be in a position to ignore the small theatres as they are the real harvest for them. The big house to the exchange counts just as much as the rich man's money in the small town. He comes to the theatre, of course, but you can count the times on the fingers of one hand.

If you are not crowded for space the above in print might—I say might—recall some of the things they have done in the past and have a tendency to reach some one of them who has not passed the stage of entire corruption and make him feel that there is still hope.

Wishing you success and with kindest regards, I am,

Yours very truly

B. E. DAWSON.

The Palace, Waseka, Minnesota.

Marion Carries Letter from President Wilson

Kalem Official Goes to Spain and Italy Well Equipped with Credentials—Epistle Is High Tribute to Picture Industry

FRANK J. MARION, president of the Kalem Company, who left on November 16 for Washington on the first lap of his journey that takes him abroad as representative of the Committee on Public Information, details of which were published in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, goes well equipped with credentials.

Among the papers which Mr. Marion is carrying to Spain and Italy as Government film commissioner and representative of the Committee on Public Information, is a personal letter from President Wilson, reproduced herewith, and which the motion picture industry will no doubt take interest in reading.

From time to time the motion picture trade has had evidence of the more than passing interest President Wilson takes in the silent drama. The letter indicates that he is keeping in close touch with the colossal undertaking of George Creel, chairman of the Commitee on Public Information, and the fact that the motion picture has been chosen as the medium for conveying democracy's message to foreign peoples is considered a high tribute to the industry, and in which all may justly take pride.

According to late advices, Mr. Marion is now on the high seas, accompanied by a remarkable assortment of educational and entertainment films. He sailed from Havana, Cuba, where he proceeded after a brief visit to Washington. On his departure from New York he received a handsome combination eight-day watch and clock made of platinum, a token of esteem from J. E. Brulatour, the American commissioner, and his associates, George Mooser and A. A. Kaufman. The watch has an illuminated dial and was made especially by a New York jeweler. It is attached to a gold-lined silver case and may be carried as a watch, or set up as a clock. The case bears an engraved inscription from Messrs. Brulatour, Mooser and Kaufman to Honorable Frank J. Marion. Mr. Marion will be in Spain shortly.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

14 November, 1917.

My dear Mr. Marion:

Mr. Creel informs me that you are leaving for Spain and Italy at once for the purpose of making arrangements for such distribution of motion pictures as will acquaint these countries with the life of America, our aims and our ideals.

It is a distinct service that you are privileged to render your Country and the whole democratic movement, and I know that this will serve at once as reward and inspiration. Please bear in mind always that we want nothing for ourselves, and that this very unselfishness carries with it an obligation of open dealing. Guard against any effect of officious intrusion, and try to express a disinterested friendship that is our sole impulse.

Cordially and sincerely,

Woodrow Wilson

Milwaukee Paramount Manager Forms New Reel Club

Milwaukee is going to have a Reel Fellows Club all of its own. Work of organizing is now under way and it is expected that it will start with at least sixty members. Ralph Wetstein, manager of the Paramount office, is taking charge of the organization work. The new club will include exchange managers, assistant managers, road men, bookers and the various employees of the exchange offices. It is expected that quarters will be opened in the near future in one of the downtown office buildings and those who are in touch with the situation expect to see the Reel Fellows Club become one of the most prominent organizations in Wisconsin.

Jack Grauman, formerly president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, who resigned from that office upon becoming manager of the Metro Exchange in Milwaukee, was elected president of the F. I. L. M. Club.

Vitagraph Announces New Exchange Appointments

The Greater Vitagraph Company, through its president, Albert E. Smith, announces this week three new branch manager appointments, each in the nature of a promotion. A. G. Edwards now has charge of the Denver office, J. M. Tally, in Seattle, and G. A. Faris, in Los Angeles.

Mr. Edwards came to the Denver exchange in April, 1916, as a stenographer, and close application to work made him a booker in two months. Ten months later he had been advanced to the selling force, where he has maintained a consistently high average week after week. Now, with his seven months' sales experience and previous office work, he has been made head of the Denver organization, filling the position made vacant by the transfer of Mr. Tally to Seattle.

Mr. Tally's appointment to Seattle marks his fifth promotion in two years.

Fuel Administration Gets Co-operation of Industry

According to developments during the past week, the open request made by the United States Fuel Administration to exhibitors of the country to conserve coal, is meeting with prompt attention and co-operation, and it seems probable that the motion picture industry, through exhibitors and producers, will be a great factor in supplying the extra fuel necessary for the proper conduct of the war.

The request of Fuel Administrator Garfield, which was accented by a letter from the administration to Stanley V. Mastbaum, of Philadelphia, was first brought to the attention of the industry by MOTION PICTURE NEWS immediately after Mr. Mastbaum had mailed letters concerning fuel conservation to every exhibitor in the Philadelphia district.

One point of the Fuel Administration's request to the industry included the following: "My suggestion is that you encourage some organized movement to study at all times the cutting down in the motion picture houses of heat, light and power; all of which consume coal. Electricity and gas, however used, mean the consumption of coal."

Detroit Exhibitors Continue to Dispute War Tax

According to advices from the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative in Detroit, about one hundred exhibitors of that city are still standing together and refusing to pay the war tax of fifteen cents per reel per day. There is said to be some sentiment for paying the tax, but inasmuch as the exhibitors have given their word that they would not pay the tax, they stand by that pledge.

At a special meeting held November 19, at the Board of Commerce, the exchange members were invited, and were asked for an expression on the subject. Each manager told what his instructions were from New York. A very splendid address was delivered by George W. Trendle, secretary of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, who had just returned from New York. He had gone there for the express purpose of looking into the tax situation. He told the exhibitors that the producers had convinced him the tax was just and fair, as a result of which the John H. Kunsky theatres would sign new contracts with the tax clause inserted. He said the tax was not a case of where the producers were trying to "pass the buck" to the exhibitors, but that the producers could not stand it, and the other increasing costs of producing. He urged exhibitors to look into the matter as he did, after which he felt sure they would take the same stand.

Virginia Exhibitors Hold Meeting This Week

Notices were sent out November 26 by Secretary Toney of the Virginia branch of the American Exhibitors' Association, Richmond, calling for a special meeting to be held the latter part of this week. The tax question and other matters of vital importance to every exhibitor in the state are slated for discussion.

Small Theatre Reports Continue to Indicate Crisis

Letters Brought Forth by Motion Picture News' Exclusive Forecast of Conditions Tell Further Stories of Hardships Wrought by Tax and Inroads of Army Service on Limited Patronage

In reports gathered exclusively from its own correspondents MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week gave the first forecast of the critical situation that faces the smaller theatres of the country, especially in suburban and rural sections, with the opening of the winter season.

This week we publish herewith selections from the numerous exhibitor letters brought forth by this story. Each expression from a theatre manager serves to further accentuate the perilous situation in which the small theatres are found. The draft and army service, only slight in their effect in the larger cities, have made appreciable holes in the limited patronage of the community houses. Liberty Loans and charity campaigns of various sorts have dampened the picture going enthusiasm of others. Now there has come the war tax on admissions to further discourage theatre going.

Herewith are a few of the exhibitor letters:

"Three Shows Have Closed in This Vicinity," Says Tennessee Man

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: The tax that is killing the exhibitors in small towns is the admission tax. Later on I shall tell you what I think of the reel tax.

We were charging five to ten cents and raised to ten cents straight, including colored gallery and children over four. Out of this we are paying the tax ourselves, but instead of getting more money by the raise the children and negroes have quit coming. The result is that we will have to pay this tax out of smaller gross receipts. This will make our total war tax about $150 per month, absolutely all of which will come out of our own pockets.

If we charge children five cents the tax is 20 per cent. and we could not stand that. If the Government would make coins of six and eleven cents we could probably make the patron pay the tax. One exhibitor near here is trying to get the eleven-cent price, and he is forced to hire an extra cashier and then he says he fails to get the extra penny out of about half the patrons.

We believe that you should advocate that every exhibitor, exchange and film manufacturer and every actor should go to work on their respective Congressmen and Senators and try to get this law modified just as soon as Congress meets. We are all patriotic and are willing to do our bit, but there is no business in a small town that can pay 15 to 20 per cent. of its gross receipts and remain long in business.

Three picture shows have closed in this immediate vicinity, but we cannot close as we have a big building on our hands that could not be used for any other purpose. The small towns are being hard hit by the draft and by mechanics of all classes leaving for the factory towns and cantonments. In addition, everybody is preaching economy and conservation so that scores of our patrons who formerly came every day now come not more than once a week.

Yours very truly,
HENDLEY BROTHERS.

"If This Keeps Up I'll Cut to Two Days a Week"

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

DEAR SIR: You will notice on the attached report card I have had to mark "Business poor" on one feature. Under any other circumstances or rather times it probably would have been marked "big."

Mahaiwe Theatre
Great Barrington, Mass.

¶ Your new Box Office Reports on various pictures is a great stunt. I find a whole lot of pleasure in looking over the pictures I have booked and learning how they have gone over in other places.

¶ I guess the ——— will be given a decent burial in a few months.

Yours very truly,
Earl B. Raifstenger,
Managing Director.

With the war tax on admissions nearly every man and woman buying from one to ten Liberty Bonds, contributions to Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and numerous other calls on the pocketbook, together with the high cost of living—those are the reasons business was poor.

No one can or will give up their bread and butter, but here seemingly they are giving up their amusement. How long we can stand it remains to be seen. Since November 1 my only days of profit have been Saturdays and Sundays. Five days last week my loss was about $20 per day. If it keeps up we will be obliged to run just Saturday and Sunday. This week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, we had Norma Talmadge in "The Moth." Under ordinary times we would have averaged $75 to $85 per day. The three days gave us an average of $42.50 per day. My "nut" is close to $55 per day, so you can see where we land.

Everybody of course says, "We want to help the Government," but seemingly they stay away. This refers particularly to the man with a family. With the couples or men by themselves it doesn't make much difference. From my observation the "war tax" is the cause.

Sincerely yours,
CALIFORNIA EXHIBITOR.

(At the writer's request his name is withheld because of the confidential nature of the letter.)

"Attendance Decrease Quick—No Exchange Help"

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

GENTLEMEN: Having noted the picture of my theatre in last week's NEWS under "Typical Small Town Theatre Which Will Suffer From Tax and Draft Levies," I wish to express my opinion on same.

I believe the taxes are hitting the small town exhibitor the hardest. I run four nights a week. Being in the middle of a serial when the tax went into effect I did not wish to raise admission on that night, but raised my other three nights five cents to pay the war tax on the serial night and also the fifteen cent reel tax. The decrease in attendance on the three nights has been so great that instead of making up my taxes I am losing. Wishing to reduce my expenses and meet my reel tax I went to a New York exchange this morning and tried to obtain a feature, which I am now under contract for, for one day, for two days at a reduction of 50 per cent. for the second day. The exchange could not see it. Result: cancellation.

Why do not the exchanges help the small owner more in this way as they surely give us poor enough prints, etc.?

Yours truly,
T. L. WARDLE,
Manager theatre, Farmingdale, N. Y.

Clawson Not a Murderer—Refuses to Shoot Even the Kaiser

Dal Clawson, one of the best known cameramen in the business has finally risen to deny the report that if the Kaiser wanted to be "shot" he would call on him. Mr. Clawson affirms that the Kaiser never told him this at all and that his original statement playing upon the word "shot" intended to be run under his photograph in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Studio Directory was badly twisted by the time it came out in that publication.

Nevada Film Credits Heffron as "The Planter" Producer

Officers of the Motion Picture Directors' Association in Los Angeles have been notified by the Nevada Film Corporation, producer of the Tyrone Power picture, "The Planter," now being released by Mutual, that on all future prints of this subject the name of the adapter and producer, T. N. Heffron, would be carried. When the first print for this film came out it carried the name of Harry Drum as director. This was called to the attention of the Directors' Association, and it immediately took action to see that proper credit was given to Mr. Heffron.

When the association was organized the sole purpose was to benefit the directors in matters of this kind, and this is the first instance of the need of the association taking action.

Hodkinson Claims New Process of Film Making

Calls It "Motion Picture Plus" and Answers in Advertising Columns Some Questions of Interest—Conceals the Real Issue

W. W. HODKINSON announced this week that he has brought back to the motion picture industry with him a new process of film making, and which he calls in his advertising announcement "Motion Pictures Plus."

While Mr. Hodkinson's "signature" advertisement in MOTION PICTURE NEWS does not go into details it nevertheless answers many questions which are uppermost in the mind of the trade and sheds some light on the underlying motive that brought Mr. Hodkinson back to the firing line.

In the course of his advertisement Mr. Hodkinson remarks: "We are making a showing of motion pictures with the same restricted medium used in the 'store shows' of past days, a medium adopted on account of its cheapness to meet the restricted conditions of the time and which only lets us hint at what might be done with the expenditures being made upon the motion picture to-day. In other words, improvements and progress have been made at every point but the picture itself.

"Would it interest you to know that my re-entry into the business is to adapt an improved process to the industry, a process that will give every franchise holder an advantage in his territory, which he can now get only through a star which his competitor may have to-morrow, or an unusual production which at best he can find but once in a month or many months? How would you like to have pictures with all the elements you get to-day, such as star, story, production, with something added, or putting it in other words, the 'Motion Picture Plus?'"

The announcement is in keeping with the revolutionary developments which have marked Mr. Hodkinson's career in the past. Nothing has been given out at the offices of the Hodkinson Corporation regarding the new process, but it was pointed out that the adoption of some new process, whatever its point of improvement, is regarded by Mr. Hodkinson as vital to the stabilizing of the industry to-day.

This statement was made: "We feel that the business has followed out every line of advance except making actually mechanically better pictures. The trade has stars and stupendous productions, and the fild swarms with them, until the investment of capital in production or in theatres is simple gambling. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will give this business a new hook to hang on, a new rock on which to drag itself out of the ocean of competition, just as Mr. Hodkinson has done in the past."

Chicago Exhibitors Vary on Effect of Tax

At Meeting of Owners' Association Some Declare Business Suffers, While Others Assert No Difference Is Noticeable

A GREAT difference of opinion was disclosed in discussing the extent the exhibiting business had been hurt by the application of the new war tax, when members of the Chicago Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association came together recently at their hall in 19 West Adams street. Some members said their patronage had dropped off more than 35 per cent, while others claimed theirs had suffered only 15 per cent. A few declared their business had not been hurt at all and that the war tax had not decreased their patronage to a noticeable extent.

Many of the theatre men, in speaking of the difficulties encountered in collecting the tax, declared that Americans paid the levy less willingly than foreigners, and that theatres in foreign neighborhoods, where the population was mixed, were apparently less hurt by the move than those in high class districts where the inhabitants were all Americans.

Some of the men declared their patrons had refused to pay the tax because of pro-German tendencies. Max Jesselson, owner of two houses in foreign neighborhoods, hit at a vital spot when he said that many showmen were experiencing difficulty collecting the tax because they failed to advertise, letting their patrons know about the new rules and regulations.

"In my particular case," said Mr. Jesselson, "I am not experiencing any trouble with the tax, and my houses are in foreign neighborhoods where as many as a dozen different nationalities rub elbows. But I advertised and explained the tax to my patrons in a dozen different foreign publications. And now when they come to my house they pay the increased charge without a bit of quibbling."

For those whose business had dropped off from 15 to 35 per cent as a result of the war levy, Edward T. Beatty suggested that they drop back to their old prices and pay the tax themselves. The war tax, ranging from 10 to 15 per cent, he figured, could be more easily paid out of their own pockets than for them to go on trying to collect it from the public through an advanced admission charge and losing from 15 to 35 per cent.

Fred Herrington, one of the founders of the American Exhibitors' Association, and former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was present at the meeting and made a stirring address on the duty of the exhibitor during these times of stress and national danger.

"I think I can explain why Americans are more backward than foreigners in paying the war tax," said Mr. Herrington. "It's because they are already so deeply engaged with Red Cross work, Liberty Loans, Y. M. C. A. campaigns, etc., that they don't feel able to pay a tax on entertainment. Americans are spending their money more freely in the great national campaigns for a victorious culmination of the war than are foreigners, and as a consequence they feel they have to cut down on luxuries. And the theatre must suffer.

"There is little doubt but what a lot of exhibitors are being hit mighty hard by this war tax. But we can't repeal the present law now. What we can do, though, is to take steps to have it modified during the next session of Congress.

"If you write your congressmen and senators and tell them how serious your losses are I am sure they will have the law revised. Congress doesn't want to close your houses. It wants money to win the war, and how, in the name of Heaven, can it get it if it taxes you until you have to close down.

"The thing for exhibitors to do now is to get together and back up H. B. Varner, of North Carolina, when he goes before Congress at the next session. He is the one man who can help to get this tax modified. You had a chance a while back to have averted this very thing, but you did nothing. At that time Varner was in Washington fighting for you and you never even let him know that you had heard he had raised his voice in your behalf.

"The trouble with you men is that you don't wake up until it is too late. If, for instance, you had bestirred yourselves as much before you got into this difficulty as you do now it might all have been averted."

After Mr. Herrington's address the exhibitors turned their attention to the fifteen-cent tax the manufacturers have put on each reel of film. Many of them reported that they had received notices of cancellation from two Chicago exchanges, and they planned immediate retaliation.

Eltinge Plans to Return West for New Picture

Julian Eltinge, who has been in New York to complete negotiations for the release of subjects in which he is to be starred in the future, announced last week that he will probably return to Los Angeles about Thanksgiving time, and it is expected that before next week his contract for future releases will have been made.

According to reports, it is probable Mr. Eltinge will next appear in a serial. At least, it is known that plans for such a production have been partially made. Regardless of what arrangements are made, the actor expects to make Los Angeles his home, and the work of constructing his $75,000 Italian villa on Silver Lake Hill in that city is said to be progressing nicely during his absence. This is to be a prominent residence section of Los Angeles, and it is here that Miss Pickford, her director, Marshall Neilan, and other prominent people of the screen will build homes. The section will be known as Beaux Arts. Upon Eltinge's return to California, definite arrangements will be made for the erection of a studio, it is said.

Jewel Feature Shows in Three Metropolitan Houses

The Jewel feature, "The Price of a Good Time," which was produced under the personal direction of Lois Weber, and which was presented at the Broadway theatre recently, is showing at three metropolitan houses this week. Fox's Academy, the Eighty-first Street and Fox's Terminal in Newark are the houses.

Test Case of Fifteen Cent a Reel Tax in Cleveland Court

Judge Phillips Decided Friday That Charging of Fifteen Cents Was Not Illegal and Vacated Injunction of Exhibitors Against Exchanges—Friend Says Case Is Manufacturers' Triumph

JUDGE PHILLIPS in the Common Pleas Court, Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday vacated an injunction brought by the exhibitors of Cleveland against the exchanges of that city, whereby the exhibitors desired to restrain the exchanges from adding the fifteen cent a reel tax to the regular rental of the film.

In a statement sent out from the offices of the National Association last Saturday, the following passages appear:

"Thrown Out of Court"

Last week the exhibitors sought a restraining order to prevent eleven distributing organizations from cancelling contracts because of exhibitors failing to agree to pay the fifteen cents per reel per day as an additional payment for service because of the war tax, and also restraining the companies from collecting the amount on contracts where exhibitors had agreed to pay the same.

The eleven companies are Goldwyn, Pathe, Artcraft, Paramount, Vitagraph, World, Fox, Universal, International, Metro and Select.

At the hearing today, after the facts as presented by the exhibitors had been thoroughly gone into, the judge threw the case out of court and denied the injunction.

It now appears that the companies will be absolutely free to collect the tax and that the Ohio ruling will be taken as a precedent in future actions of the same character.

At the hearing the distributors were represented in court by Squire, Sanders and Dempsey. The following film men were present:

P. A. Powers, of Universal; Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn; Nathan Vivader, counsel of World Film Corporation; J. A. Berst, of Pathe, and Arthur S. Friend, of Paramount, Artcraft and Famous Players-Lasky.

Berst Gives Opinion

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., expressed his opinion as follows:

"Who pays any government tax, be it on tobacco, gasoline, confectionery, liquor or anything else? The ultimate consumer and no one else, and he is the only one who can pay it. The government knows this and expects the tax to be handed on to the consumer and every man, woman and child in this country is an ultimate consumer. Who is paying for the devastation wrought by this war, for the colossal expense entailed by the maintenance of vast armies in the field? All of us, and no one is exempt. We pay it in higher prices for the clothing on our backs, for the shoes upon our feet, for the food which we eat, and the drink which we drink. We are paying for it in every letter that we send, in every article that we buy. Every tax that is imposed upon every commodity which we use is paid by us in the end, for no matter what our business, what our profession, we are all ultimate consumers and part of the public.

"The distributors, of whom I am one, and, I am glad to say, many leading exhibitors, recognize the truth of this and recognize that any tax placed upon film must be, and should be handed on to the public. The exhibitors who fail to hold this view say that the increased cost of admission to their theatres will hurt their business. But they should realize that anything that hurts their business hurts ours and that we producers and distributors realize that. If we hand on the tax it is because it is our only recourse.

"Unfortunately the War Revenue Act was drafted without regard to or understanding of the motion picture industry, its customs, its methods and its uses. The tax fixed in the act is purely a film footage tax and as such the user under the clear intendment of the act is required to pay. Congress undoubtedly expected that the exhibitor being made to pay would in return require his public to pay. This is evidenced throughout the act and specifically by the provision in reference to the film footage tax (see Section 1007) in respect to which it is provided that this tax shall be paid by the lessee and collected by the distributor. It is a well established economic rule that shifts to the ultimate consumer all taxes except income taxes, which cannot be shifted. Already the manufacturer of the raw product has shifted the tax to the producer and the producer in turn has shifted that tax, as well as the tax on positives, to the distributors.

"Faced with the necessity of recouping the amount of this tax the distributor's only alternative would be a general increase in prices, and the cancellation of all existing contracts.

"That fifteen cents charge which we collect does not go to Pathe. Every cent of it—and more—goes to the Government.

"Exhibitors should ask themselves this question, 'What is that tax money doing?' Let me answer that question. It is fighting for us in Europe. It is keeping the invader from our shores. It is making it possible for us to do business here in the United States. It is clothing and feeding our soldiers and sailors; it is putting ammunition into their guns and it is making it possible for us to look forward to victory and peace. Farbetter the United States and taxes than Belgium, a nation hammered to the ground."

Friend Convinced Manufacturers Are Right

Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation issued the following statement on his return from Cleveland:

"Judge Phillips's decision against the small

Farrell Defends Exhibitors Against Attack

Takes Apparently Justifiable Exception to Recent Article in Boston Newspapers, and Declares Prices Are Far Too Low

E. J. FARRELL, general manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation of New England, with offices at Boston, has responded loyally to what appears to be the call of duty in defending New England exhibitors against the alleged misrepresentations in an article recently published in the Boston newspapers in reference to the increase of admissions at the various theatres. The article, in Mr. Farrell's estimation, which is no doubt shared by nine out of ten exhibitors of the country, gave the very weak side of a tale that has two sides, and voiced the opinions of only one exhibitor.

As manager of the largest motion picture exchange in New England, to whom all the exhibitors in that territory go for photoplays for their individual theatres, Mr. Farrell is well qualified to speak in behalf of the industry. He knows conditions, circumstances and a hundred and one things under the surface that very often confuse the average writer when attempting to dissect the theatre question in the columns of the press.

In a part of Mr. Farrell's reply to the article, the exchange manager said: "Nine out of ten exhibitors in the business today should increase their admissions at least 50 per cent, and they must do this in the very near future or face financial ruin. The war tax imposed by the Government is not alone responsible for this, for there are countless other burdens upon the theatres of which the public is entirely unaware.

"Less than five years ago the average theatre paid for its entire week's supply of photoplays from $40 to $60. Today the average theatre pays from $200 to $350 for its weekly supply of film. These figures would apply to the theatres outside of the down-town section of Boston. Let us apply figures to the big Washington street theatres. Less than five years ago the biggest theatres on Washington street and the down-town district were paying in the neighborhood of $150 for a week's service. Today these same theatres pay from $1,000 to $1,500 per week.

"These figures will astonish the average patron of the photoplay theatres because it has never been appreciated how the cost of operation has so rapidly advanced for the theatres and this, because the theatre managements have refrained from adding the extra burdens to the patrons until actually forced to for the salvation of their investments.

"Yet the cost in rentals for photoplay productions is not all of the theatre's added burdens over a few years ago. Employees' salaries have risen rapidly; supplies of all sorts have increased tremendously in cost; carbon, used for the projection of the film upon the screen have increased in price over 1,000 per cent. We have today theatres costing a million dollars to erect, a tremendous investment. The lone pianist or pianist and drummer have given way in a great many theatres to orchestras from six to twenty men. The small store show has gone and in its place the public finds big handsome theatres that cost ten and twenty times as much to operate.

"Yet how little has the increase in admissions been to the public. A five-cent raise in some instances; none at all in a great many of the theatres. The theatre-owners have accepted increase after increase, caused by the demands of their patrons for bigger and better productions, with famous and more famous stars and have fought and struggled to keep the admissions down to the same low prices until forced to increase them for their own financial existence."

THEATRES UNJUSTLY BLAME WAR TAXES

Complaints have been received by the Internal Revenue Department of cases where the cost of admission to theatres and other places of entertainment has been increased largely in excess of the wa rtax imposed and the increase explained on the ground that it is rendered necessary by the imposition of the war tax. The tax on theatre admissions is one cent for each ten cents or fraction thereof paid for the admission. Any increase in admission charges beyond this amount is not necessary in order to absorb the tax.

The attention of Internal Revenue Bureau has also been called to a newspaper advertisement of a phonograph which states the price and explains that there is 5 per cent. added for war tax." The war tax on phonographs and other musical instruments is only 3 per cent. Other cases of misrepresentation of the war tax have come to the attention of the Hudson County officials and proper steps will be taken to correct such misrepresentation.

Paralta President Arrives at Los Angeles Studio

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., arrived at the West Coast Studios in Los Angeles, a few days ago, it was announced this week by Paralta Plays, and expects to remain there for some time, consulting on the construction of the new studios which are now in the course of construction.

A large tract of land adjoining the studios was recently purchased, upon which is now being erected additional studios which when completed will double the capacity of the present plant. Work is said to be progressing rapidly.

Government Wants Operators for Overseas Service

The Chief of Ordnance, War Department, Washington, D. C., has sent out a call within the motion picture industry for motion picture operators for early service overseas.

The call said, in part: "The men in the front line trench need the help and co-operation of skilled men back of the lines, and motion picture operators are wanted at once for the Enlisted Ordnance Corps, National Army. Men must be between the ages of eighteen and forty, and must know their job."

President Acknowledges Debt to Four-Minute Men

President Wilson has acknowledged the debt of the United States to the Four-Minute Men in a letter which has been given space in the morning papers.

Rogers H. Bacon, chairman of the Speakers' Bureau, notified the Four-Minute Men of the letter on November 19, and stated that he was sending a copy of the letter to the manager of every motion picture house in New York.

Directors Plan Ball in New York for January 26

The Motion Picture Directors' Association announced last week that it is planning to hold a ball at the Biltmore Hotel on the evening of January 26, 1918. It is the intention of the members to make is a brilliant social event, and Wally Van has been appointed chairman of the Ball Committee. Maurice Tourneur is to be the artistic director.

At the last meeting of the Association, Carroll Fleming, Charles Miller and Leonce Perrett were initiated, and several new applications were presented.

Motion Pictures Prove Usefulness in Law Suit

According to advices from Kansas City, Mo., motion pictures played an important part in a recent law suit in that city, and were probably the first pictures to get by the censorship board without first being viewed. The pictures were made and used by the Window Glass Machine Company and the American Window Glass Company to demonstrate the process of glass manufacturing in a suit for alleged patent infringements. A projection machine and screen were installed in the Federal Court.

Morosco Scenario Head Visits New York for First Time

After three years at the Oliver Morosco Studio in Los Angeles, where she has been engaged in preparing scripts for Paramount Pictures, as head of the scenario department, Julia Crawford Ivers is in New York for the first time in her life. She expects, however, to stay but three weeks.

Mrs. Ivers announced last week that she is now at work on a new story for Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, and is looking up prospects for a Vivian Martin script.

Our First Aid Course

SO many theater managers requested our aid in explaining away distorted ideas regarding admission increases or preparing the way for necessary boosts that we prepared this "First Aid" series of educational talks for patrons.

The initial talk appeared in last week's News. The second talk will still further break the ice by letting the patrons know that the theaters are not going scott free in the matter of taxes.

This will leave the ground clear to start the real missionary work of preparing your patrons for an admission increase. Boosts are certain this year, whether you are fighting hard against them now or not. So begin the paving. Next week we will begin the real missionary talks and also offer slide and program suggestions.

Doing Our Bit!

We Told You Last Week—

That we get a wee bit sore when people tell us we are lucky to have the Government ask them for the tax and let us off free. We promised to let you in on some "Secrets of the Movies," and incidentally let you know how "we were doing our bit" in many ways before Uncle Sam asked us in addition to collect a tax from you at trouble and inconvenience to us.

Let Us Start with Our Story—

In the first place, since the very start of the war in Europe we have been paying Uncle Sam an emergency war tax for each seat in this theater. It is a fact that this tax put hundreds of theaters out of business when this tax was levied—but you didn't hear any squealing. Uncle Sam needed the money—and we have been doing our bit.

Then We Got After the Kaiser—

And Uncle Sam needed more money. He placed a tax on every single foot of film which makes up the shows you see each night. Sometimes there are ten thousand feet in an evening's performance. That tax is being divided among the theaters of the country, and paid outright in addition to our usual expenses for film.

Express Shipments Were Taxed—

And did you know that picture theaters are among the largest users of express service in the country—that this item makes up a large factor of expense? With an occasional package it may not seem much to you, but you can imagine the tax if you received billboard posters, photographs, films, etc., by express every day.

Is It Any Wonder That—

Uncle Sam decided that he was getting enough from us? Then, again, he knew some of the inside figures of the business, which we are going to tell you in our later talks. He knew that half the theaters of the country were losing money, that the cost of giving you top-quality entertainment had more than doubled in the past two years, while admission prices had scarcely changed. But we are going to let you know the facts, too. This little talk was just a by-play to show you that

We Are Doing Our Bit!

WHO'S THE PATRIOT? By Sam Bullock

WHEN Uncle Sam decided to impose a revenue tax upon the film industry he evidently had in mind three representative branches: 1. The men who make the celluloid strip; 2. The men who make the strip into negatives; 3. The men who, in turn, make the strip into positives, or "movies." Uncle Sam naturally figured largely upon the publicity (available to every schoolchild from Maine to Frisco) regarding the fabulous salaries paid to the employes of the aforesaid branches, whose manly figures and bewitching faces adorn (more or less) the aforesaid strips.

Whoever gave Uncle Sam the "tip" is immaterial, but the fact that there are "armies of stars" getting salaries equal to and some greater than President Wilson is absolutely believed to be the truth by millions of Uncle Sam's grown ups. Uncle Sam therefore very naturally figured that this trinity of patriots could, and would willingly, come across with a quarter of a cent each—hence the total of three-fourths of a cent footage tax upon the manufacturers. The proposition to tax patrons or exhibitors (following the first Liberty Bond sale) was not included in Uncle Sam's "hunch," simply because some 15,000 exhibitors carried Uncle Sam's message to millions free and sold the bonds, and Uncle Sam knew the exhibitor was already paying a war tax. Then the "efficiency squad" of the "fourth largest industry" got spring fever, or else they were so busy inventing new "systems" to milk the "movie man" that they didn't notice Uncle Sam's "hunch'" growing at Washington, D. C. It sure did grow quick. Then came the now famous Paul Revere ride to Washington and "Lee's surrender." So different, however, from Lee of the '60s, who at least made a fight, while "our" Lee radioed his followers all over the country: "Wire Washington O. K. Tell 'em you like it, the Ontario plan." Ohio refused to be camouflaged and wired back: "Nix on that stuff, Lee Varner."

What was the result? Uncle Sam's employes forgot Bert Williams' ditty, "Dat's Gratitude," and included an admission tax on tickets, based, very likely, upon Lee's eloquent suggestions that it would not hurt the movie manager's receipts if the patron paid it, but a footage tax on films would eventually be paid by the said movie manager.

Uncle Sam's hunch was wrong in one respect. He figured the three "strip" makers would be at least as patriotic as the movie manager. He was dead wrong.

Their "expert accountants" should have camped at Washington, backed by the prestige and dignity of the "fourth largest industry" and, producing the figures they now tell us spells "calamity," insisted upon consideration commensurate with our worth as silent partners with Uncle Sam in winning the war for democracy.

Who is the patriot?

Is it the man who dodges his tax, adds to same, and attempts to collect on films that he himself is not being taxed for?

At this writing every exhibitor in Cleveland has long ago been thus assessed and some have paid. Even poor old "Gloria's Romance" and ancient "Myra" are paying tribute.

To-day court proceedings were started in Cleveland to establish our rights, brutally ignored by the N. A. M. P. I. members holding exhibitor's shows up.

If this is not "profiteering" what is? Pettijohn evidently knows the story of "The Spider and the Fly."

Who is the patriot? I'll tell you and back it up by sworn reports at Washington. I write in the interest of the "70 per centers." There's over a hundred in Cleveland. They went to work as patriots. Publicity was given by all methods available to get the public to respond at all classes of theatres. I am not reporting for the better class of theatres, 50 of them, but the "70 per centers," who report a big slump up to this fifteenth day of the tax impost. I can show you reports of 30 per cent. less in gross receipts covering this period. Can show you 50 per less on Douglas Fairbanks nights—and the movie man thanks his "stars" that Triangle has not assessed the war tax.

Who is the patriot? The showman who is grinning and bearing it until some one comes to his relief in December.

He is the patriot!

We have had ideal show weather so far daily since Friday, Nov. 2. The Lord is with us but the N. A. M. P. I. is not with us.

Fifteen Cent Tax Tested in Cleveland Court

group of recalcitrant exhibitors who attempted by Court proceedings to enjoin the motion picture distributors in their attempt to collect the 15 cents per day per reel charge, made because of the war excise taxes levied on motion picture film by the Federal Government, was not a surprise to the group of New York film men who went to Cleveland for the hearing. These men went to Cleveland prepared to go forward with the trial of the case, just as speedily as the Court would permit. They had no disposition to raise any technical points or defenses, but when the exhibitors had told the Court what they intended to prove it was so patent that such proof constituted only imaginary grievances, and had not even the slightest bearing on the issue, did not by the greatest stretch of romantic imagination constitute a case against them, they were glad to let their very able counsel, Judge Day, enter a motion on the pleadings and opening statement of the plaintiffs for judgment in their favor. In deciding this motion, Judge Phillips put a final end to the case and the entire matter.

"Under the circumstances and for the purposes of the motion, the Court assumed that all the exhibitors' allegations were true. Accordingly the film men felt that the public is entitled to know their view of the controversy. According to the accountants most experienced and expert in the motion picture industry, Messrs. Pierce, Waterhouse & Co., the film tax levied by Congress under the Act of October 3, 1917, amounts to about nine-tenths of a cent per lineal foot, instead of one-half cent as the exhibitors stated in their petition, and assuming that every exhibitor pays 15 cents per day per reel for every reel used by him so long as the film footage tax is in effect, the gross amount so collected by the distributors, will not equal the amount paid by the distributors to the Government on account of the tax. This statement I make with particular emphasis in view of the fact that the Cleveland exhibitors alleged in their position that the defendants were profiteering and undertaking to charge exhibitors more than they themselves were required to pay, when, in fact, the converse is the truth.

"Accepting the figures given by the exhibitors to Judge Phillips in the court room in Cleveland as correct, we would come to the absurd conclusion that every exhibitor in the United States conducted his show forty-nine days in every calendar month. The exhibitors, for reasons probably best known to themselves, carefully refrained from advising the Court that there was a great difference in prices charged by the several distributing companies, for the product handled by them, and left the Judge under the impression that there was a fixed or unit price per reel throughout the industry. The day when motion pictures were sold by the foot, or by the reel has happily passed, and surely every one who stops to think, must know that prices are made by the distributors and paid by the exhibitors, with a view to the real value of the production, the entertainment for which they accept the public's money at the box-office. The public no longer pays to see so many feet of film projected on a screen.

"It is, however, most gratifying now to be able to point to a clear well considered sweeping judicial opinion in support of the position taken by the distributors in regard to the 15-cent charge. It seems too bad we should have been compelled to justify our obviously fair proceeding in Court, and we regret most of all, that a combination of exhibitors, who were in a place to know thoroughly well the attitude of leading producers and distributors toward the Government should permit themselves to make a public charge of profiteering in their hopeless attempt to find a place in Court."

Violation of Sherman Law Intimated

The following telegram was sent by Sam Bullock, Cleveland, after Judge Phillips had given decision in test case of fifteen-cent reel tax:

Judge Phillips to-day decided that the charging of 15 cents was not violation of contract, merely an addition to the price of film, but that the combination to enforce the same he believed to be a conspiracy and violation of the Trust Law Case, will be followed up immediately along the lines suggested by the Court.

"(Signed) SAM BULLOCK."

Milwaukee Exhibitors Not Disturbed

There has been little or no protest on the war tax, according to the managers of the local film exchanges. In fact, so little fuss has been made over this tax that no letter was sent out, in many instances, notifying the exhibitors of the change. According to the exchange managers there were some cancellations on account of the tax but the amount is estimated at about 2 per cent and the exchange men say that they have had little or no trouble over this tax. In fact, it is stated that the cancellations have been from the smaller exhibitors but can hardly afford to pay for the present high-grade feature. It is expected that no action of any kind will be taken by the local exhibitors on the film tax as the majority are now paying it without any protest.

Death Knell of Nickel Houses in Wisconsin

The passing of the little fellow among the motion picture exhibitors is almost completed in Wisconsin, says a report from this section. The five-cent house with its limited seating capacity and cheap program is almost a thing of the past in this state. Hardly a day passes that does not bring news of the closing up of one or more of the smaller theatres. This is not the result of intensive competition for, strange as it may seem in many of the cities where the small houses are closing there is absolutely no competition, the nickel house having everything its own way but being unable to exist in view of the ever increasing cost of films, and no cor-

More Exhibitors Join Drive to Get Smokes for Soldiers

Thanksgiving Week Rally Promises to Turn Campaign Into Grand Success—Rothapfel and Williams Frist to Offer Percentage of Receipts to the Fund Which Will Smoke the Kaiser Out

AS far as smokes and tobacco go, the Kaiser may as well consider himself "kanned" already.

The general advance which began throughout the country recently, under the leadership of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," and which has already captured the first line trenches and is driving forward with relentless tenacity, is planning a huge strategic drive this (Thanksgiving) week that should make the victory complete. And when the medals are pinned on, there will be several exhibitors in these United States who will step forward to hear their names praised as "princes," "bricks" and other things which in America denote titles of the highest sort.

Rothapfel Leads Exhibitors

In the first place, S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre in New York, which theatre does not advertise its patriotism, but reveals it in deeds that speak louder than type or words, led the assault of exhibitors against the enemy by agreeing to turn over 5 per cent of his total receipts this week to the motion picture division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." A pioneer in leadership, Mr. Rothafel did not wait to be urged to exert himself in the smokes campaign, realizing that tobacco to soldiers is as gasoline to the motor car, and notified the Fund at 25 West Forty-fourth street that if every contribution of 25 cents puts 45 cents worth of tobacco into the hands of one of America's fighting men in France, then the boys "over there" could look for some heavily laden crates of smokes from the Rialto. Mr. Rothapfel even went further in his patriotism, and wrote a letter to every known exhibitor in the country urging them also to open their hearts and their theatres—their pocketbooks also—in a big sweep to smoke the Kaiser out by setting aside Thanksgiving week as a period of tobacco-collecting for our boys in France.

THE FUND IN RICHMOND

¶ I have been watching your splendid efforts each week relative to the Tobacco Fund for our boys in France.

¶ Several weeks ago we turned over several hundred dollars and about 50,000 cigarettes in a local tobacco fund for the soldier boys in the camps.

HENRY BERNSTEIN,

That Mr. Rothapfel's initiative, and the thoroughness with which the Fund has been organized and pushed, is beginning to bear most luscious fruit is evident by the reports that have begun to drift in, ever thicker and thicker, from exhibitors and others within the industry whose patriotism is not limited by desires for personal benefit or profit.

First National in Vanguard

Almost immediately after Mr. Rothapfel voiced his faith in the Fund by naming this week for the soldiers, J. D. Williams, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announced that the leading theatres of the circuit would likewise give 5 per cent of their receipts this week to the worthy cause. In the course of his letter which awakened additional exhibitors to quicken their activities in behalf of the tobacco fund, Mr. Williams said: "I cannot too strongly endorse, both from a busi-

A SPLENDID patriotic opportunity is given to every American exhibitor to be of some use to our soldiers in France. They want "smokes" more than anything you can send them. Motion Picture News, which is the official organ of the campaign, urges all exhibitors to place receptacles in their lobbies, for the collection of coins and packages of cigarettes.

No cigarettes can be accepted except in original packages and on which the revenue stamp has not been broken. This is an order from the Government.

How to Go About It

1. Send to Motion Picture News for a card, inviting your patrons to drop pennies and packages of cigarettes into the bowl or box provided.

2. Arrange with the commissary department of your nearest cantonment for distributing (unbroken) packages of cigarettes. In case you have superfluous packages send them directly to Motion Picture News, New York, N. Y.

3. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check sent weekly to Motion Picture News. For every 25 cents you collect, you will receive a postal of thanks direct from the trenches. For example: If you contribute $10, you will receive 40 postcards of thanks direct from the trenches in France. These should be displayed in your lobby, photographed for slides or sent out to your mailing list.

ness and patriotic standpoint, the proposition made to you by the 'Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund' and the Rialto theatre." That the endorsement was taken at its full value is evident, as previously stated, by the excellent reports from all sections of the country.

Among the theatres which had already substantially increased the fund, and which have been named in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, are the Pastime, Tuscumbia, Ala.; Princess, Golden, Ill.; Hippodrome, Syracuse; Hamilton, Yonkers; Opera House, Wadsworth, Ohio; Strand, Poplar, Mont.; Majestic, Keene, N. H.; Miller's, Los Angeles, and the Broadway, Rialto and Alhambra theatres, all of Los Angeles.

These houses, and others, had swelled the total of the motion picture division of the Fund to nearly $400 when MOTION PICTURE NEWS went to press last week, and still money and cigarettes and tobacco were coming in. The entire fund up to last week reached a total of $96,526.01, with every indication that after the Thanksgiving week drive the amount will exceed the hundred thousand mark by many, many simoleons. In fact, according to figures from the headquarters of the Fund, the total had swelled past the six figures before the Thanksgiving clean-up started.

Other Houses Join Ranks

Among the latest theatres to make known their intention of giving 5 per cent of this week's receipts to the cause are the Strand, of New Orleans; Opera House, Thomaston, Conn.; Varieties, Third avenue, New York; Victoria, Harrisburg, Pa.; Electra, Brooklyn; Tennis Amusement Company, Colonial theatre, Norwich, N. Y.; Globe, Vineland, N. J.; Happy Hour, Mexico, N. Y.; Pleasant Hour, Newton, N. J.; Happyland, Corinth, N. Y.; Opera House, Elkton, Md.; Cohoes Opera House, Cohoes, N. Y.; Arcade, Camden; Victoria, Greenfield, Mass.; Sweetland, Mayville, N. Y.

Late additions to the list of theatres which have promised to donate five per cent of their gross receipts for "Smoke Week" to the "Our Boys in France" Fund, are as follows: Cozy theatre, 425 East Main street, Galesburgh, Ill.; Star theatre, Ottawa, Kan.; Bonita theatre, H. W. Neal, manager, Lindale, Ga.; M. C. Martin, Oakfield, Me.; A. R. Lynch, St. Augustine, Fla.; Prairie's theatre, 608 Coral street, New Orleans; J. L. Romaine, Boston theatre, Boston Spa, New York; Parson's theatres (Grand and Lyric), Jonesboro, Ark.; Louis Kalbfield, Grand theatre, Palaska, Fla.; Butler theatre, Butler, Pa.; C. E. Doffin, Doffin theatre, Talahassee, Fla.; W. Brown, Happy Hour, Edensburg, Pa.; M. H. Wace, Larkin theatre, Beverly, Mass.; M. H. Wace Company, Strand theatre, Peabody, Mass. E. C. Yaw, Jr., Naples, N. Y.; Benj. T. Pitts, Pitts' Leader theatre, Fredericksburg, Va.; T. B. Humes, Star theatre, L.B.244, East Brady, Pa.

E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Strand theatre, New Orleans, Fla., has arranged to give to the fund one day's receipts at each house of that circuit. Other postcards are being received with every mail and will be acknowledged next week.

Never has there been an industry that has stood behind the Government more solidly than has the motion picture industry, from the first to last. And in backing up the soldier boys with smokes the picture industry demonstrates backing up democracy in one of its truest forms.

Exhibitors Plan to Send Varner to Washington

Will Represent the Exhibitors of the Country During the Approaching Session of Congress—Tax Sections May Be Amended

THE American Exhibitors' Association, realizing the necessity of concerted action among exhibitors in regard to taxes and other legislative matters, are arranging to create a fund for the purpose of engaging a representative to go to Washington in behalf of all exhibitors during the approaching session of Congress, or whenever any legislative matters come up.

The experience of the recent tax legislation has shown the exhibitors very clearly the need of having a representative who thoroughly understands the needs of exhibitors. Many expressions have come to the attention of the A. E. A. that the tax of 10 per cent on gross receipts is proving a great hardship. In one instance an exhibitor in a certain city who has no competition is said to have found his profits entirely absorbed, and financial ruin confronts him.

The American Exhibitors' Association, it is announced, will attempt to gather all possible evidence and facts, and will present them to Congress through the representative, who, according to reports, is likely to be H. P. Varner, of Lexington, N. C.

Mr. Varner is an exhibitor who has been very successful in working against adverse legislation. It is claimed that he has done more in this way for the industry than any other single man within the field. In 1914 he saved the exhibitors of the United States thousands of dollars on the seating capacity tax, and again in 1916 defended the exhibitors against a tax on gross receipts.

Abrams and Schulberg Pay Respect to Milwaukee

Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, were in Milwaukee Wednesday of last week in the course of their nation-wide tour of investigation of film conditions. They inspected the Milwaukee Paramount office, which is in charge of Ralph Wetstein, and paid a visit to the local theatres. According to Mr. Abrams, the Milwaukee photoplay theatres have developed to a standard far above that reached by most cities throughout the country. While there, Mr. Abrams put over considerable publicity in the way of interviews with local newspapers.

Will C. Smith Nominated on National Board

Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, was nominated as a director on the National Board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of J. F. Skerrett, at a meeting of the Supply and Equipment Division of the Motion Picture Industry held on November 22.

The meeting was presided over by Walter J. Moore in the absence of Chairman J. E. Brulatour, and routine matters were discussed without any definite action being taken. It was decided to hold regular monthly meetings on the second Tuesday of each month and the first meeting will be held on December 12 at 12 o'clock, noon, at the offices of the National Association. The following were in attendance at the meeting: Walter J. Moore, H. C. Miner Lithographing Company; L. P. Weber, Acme Lithographing Company; L. J. Lynch, representing George I. Cooke, Alpha Lithographic Company; Theodore F. Comstock, assistant to the assistant manager of the Pathescope Company, representing Willard B. Cook; S. Snowden Cassard, assistant general manager, Nicholas Power Company; A. P. Lombard, representing E. S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company and B. F. Porter, Joseph F. Coufal, Novelty Slide Co.; S. H. DeRoy, Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company; J. H. Hallberg, United Theatre Equipment Corporation and H. A. Rosenburg of the Greater New York Slide Company; Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary National Association.

Theda Bara Makes Personal Appearance at Audubon

Theda Bara, the William Fox star, made a personal appearance at Fox's Audubon theatre, Broadway and 167th street, on the night of November 23, and was greeted by a packed house.

The star made an address and was presented with a bouquet of roses by the management of the house.

Hartmann Prepares for Exposition in February

Fred W. Hartmann, eastern representative of the Motion Picture Exposition which is scheduled for Grand Central Palace, New York, February 2 to 10, next year, has been in New York the past few weeks, co-operating with Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, of the N. A. M. P. I., on matters pertaining to the exposition. Mr. Hartmann expects to return to Chicago the first of December, where he will be in a position to look after the interests of western producers and exhibitors between that time and the opening of the exposition. His Chicago address will be 1416 Masonic Temple.

It is announced that a large amount of space on the main floor of the Palace has already been sold, many of the larger companies included, while more than half of the applicants are new exhibitors. From the manner in which space has been contracted for to date it appears that three floors of the Palace will be required to house the exposition.

Louise Glaum Withdraws Name from War Luxury Fund

Prompted by information relative to the probable indictment of Donald C. Fox in New York for his alleged improper activities as promoter of the Army and Navy Bazaar, held recently, Louise Glaum has wired MOTION PICTURE NEWS from Los Angeles that she has withdrawn the use of her name from the Louise Glaum War Luxury Fund, promoted by Fox, pending the investigation now under way by Federal authorities.

Miss Glaum was induced purely by patriotic motives when consenting to lend the use of her name to secure tobacco funds for overseas soldiers and sailors, and beyond this is said to know nothing concerning the dispositions of the funds being collected at Fox's office in New York.

In her telegram, Miss Glaum remarked: "I can not comprehend the stripe of a man who would employ such despicable methods of greed in this hour of our country's destiny."

Joe Brandt Heads Film Ad Men's Association

While Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal Film Company, was confined to his apartments here in New York, suffering from an illness that nearly terminated disastrously, he was elected president of the Film Producers' Association of the Advertising Clubs of the World, at the annual session, held in Cincinnati, O., last Saturday afternoon.

Ten days ago Mr. Brandt was suddenly stricken with mercurial poisoning as a result of the improper use of calomel and last Sunday was the first time he has been able to leave his bed since he was stricken. It will be ten days more before he will be able to resume his duties at the Universal. In the time that he has been ill, messages of solicitude and cheer have poured in upon the popular film magnate and personal calls have further testified to the esteem in which he is held by hosts of friends.

NEWS' Exhibitor Poll Uncovers Interesting Figures

¶ We have before us some statistics from a "poll" of our exhibitor-subscribers, which suggest some revolutionary changes in the industry in the past year.

¶ The poll, carefully compiled and analyzed, shows only three per cent. of these theatres asking a straight nickel. Twelve per cent., or one in eight, ask "five and ten" cents. One house in every five, or roughly twenty per cent. of all theatres, are "straight ten" cents. Another twenty per cent. (roughly) get "ten and fifteen" cents. And another twenty per cent. get "fifteen" cents.

¶ Roughly sixty per cent., therefore, of all theatres before the war tax went into effect received ten or fifteen cents, or a split between these two figures. An additional five per cent. can be classed as twenty per cent. houses, and ten per cent. asked prices from ten up to twenty-five cents of which only a few receive the full twenty-five cents—some of these offering vaudeville and added attractions.

¶ Three per cent. received straight twenty-five cents and up.

¶ In other words, the nickel house and the twenty-five cent house are numerically in the same class today. One in every thirty theatres. The only difference is that the nickel house is getting rare, and the higher priced house is getting a stronger foothold.

¶ That sixty per cent. of our theatres charge ten or fifteen cents, no more, for pictures, is significant. That three-fourths, or seventy-five per cent., are properly classed as ten or fifteen cent houses, although some of these have a five-cent price for children and cheap seats for adults, is the big lesson of this statistical review. And of the other fourth—twenty-five per cent.—four in five would average fifteen cents, though charging more for best seats and having no uniform low price. In all those reporting only six per cent. represent either the cheapest nickel class or the fancy twenty-five cent minimum.

¶ Another important lesson from the reports received is the age of service used today. One-half the theatres use service newer than 60 days old. And of this half, two in five use thirty to sixty day service, two in five use fifteen to thirty day pictures, and one in five uses pictures less than fifteen days old.

¶ In connection with the age of service noted, it is interesting to find these percentages holding true in almost all price classifications. Just half the nickel houses use newer service, and half use service older than sixty days. Of the "ten and fifteen" group, approximately half use older than sixty-day service, half use newer pictures. And only the theatres charging twenty-five cents and over seem to require "first run" as indicated by age of service used.

¶ Higher prices therefore do not result from higher cost of film service, but reflect directly a better business management on the part of the exhibitor.

Nicholas Power Company Promotes Cassard

Samuel Snowden Cassard, who has had charge of the purchasing and stock departments of the Nicholas Power Company for the past five years and has been responsible for the Power Company's advertising for the past year, has been appointed assistant general manager of that company. Mr. Cassard's promotion is due to his close analysis of the manufacture of projection machines, which called the attention of the Nicholas Power Company to his wide knowledge of their business and to the remarkable executive ability which he had developed, and is in keeping with the well known policy of picking the highest class men in their own organization for promotion.

"The Grand Passion" Next Jewel Release

Jewel Productions, Inc., whose latest productions for the independent market are: "Pay Me," featuring Dorothy Phillips, and "The Co-Respondent," featuring Elaine Hammerstein, announces that its next offering which will be ready for an early release is "The Grand Passion," adapted from "The Boss of Powderville," a novel by Thomas Addison, which appeared in Adventure magazine. It deals with the efforts of a man who has amassed a fortune from graft, to cleanse himself of the taint in order to win the love of a good woman.

"The Grand Passion" is said to present a theme, strong in dramatic intensity. The cast has not been announced.

Abrams Holds Up for Raised Admission Prices

Declares Public Must Meet the Raise If It Expects Best Pictures Possible—Everything Else Goes Up, Why Not Prices?

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, who, in company with General Manager B. P. Schulberg is touring the country, and who in his visits to exhibitors has gained many new views of conditions as they exist, has presented, in an announcement, his view regarding the admission price problem. Mr. Abrams believes, and plainly insists, that increased admissions for picture theatres are justifiable.

In this connection Mr. Abrams said: "Photoplay followers must pay more for their screen amusement if they want motion picture producers to continue making the best motion pictures that it is possible to create, and if they expect their favorite photoplay theatres to continue in business and to provide a suitable setting for the picture, including appropriate music.

"We must realize that the entire economic standard of the country has changed and that the dollar no longer represents ten dimes but four quarters. It is war time. The dime has lost its buying power and besides the cost of producing pictures has advanced in a startling degree. As a matter of fact from the beginning of the industry, the cost of producing has advanced steadily. A casual mental comparison between the 'movies' of several years ago and the photoplay of today will make this readily apparent.

"Aside from the apparent increase of the salaries of the players, the elaborate staging of a production which the photoplay public has come to demand, has raised the cost from 500 to 1,000 per cent over the costs of a few years ago. In spite of this, the motion picture exhibitor has been backward in raising his own prices to meet this increased cost. This may be due, in a measure, to the fact that in the early stages of motion picture exhibiting there was a great margin of profit; the photoplay public of that day was content with a standard of production that would not be tolerated by the more discriminating patrons of the photoplay today.

"A continuance of the prices in vogue would mean that hundreds of motion picture theatres would have to close their doors, an event which can only be regarded with the utmost gravity in the present war-time conditions, where moderate-priced amusements for the people are an absolute necessity."

Brady Receives Big Welcome From Chicagoans

One Hundred Business Men Turn Out to Hear Ringing Speech of National Association's Head on Censorship

A turnout of 100 exhibitors, lawyers, members of the trade press, exchange managers and others vitally interested in the film future of Chicago greeted the visit of William A. Brady to that city last Monday night, at a banquet given in the crystal room of the Sherman Hotel. The banquet was given under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Its prime object was to have in attendance members of the City Council who are striving to have Major Funkhouser and his one-man censorship board ousted in Chicago.

Among the councilmen present to hear Mr. Brady talk on censorship and the film future of Chicago were Alderman Steffens, the father of the new ordinance now up for consideration in councils to provide a board of censorship made up of at least a dozen persons; Aldermen Rodeger, George Maypole and Schwartz. Each one of these spoke in their turn following the banquet and all expressed their desire to co-operate with the exhibitors of Chicago in giving them the best deal possible on censorship and other legislation affecting the industry here. Alderman Steffens was particularly vigorous in backing up the bill he has drawn and put before the councils. Amidst great applause he declared he was against one-man censorship. All of the other aldermen coincided with his view and promised to give the Steffens bill all the consideration that will be fair and possible.

Others who spoke were Judge Goodenow of the American Theatrical Hospital Association, City Clerk James T. Igoe, Attorney Morris Bergson, Taylor Holmes and Jack Gardner, members of the Essanay force. Mr. Brady was the last speaker of the evening.

The early and greater part of his talk sounded a warning to exhibitors here and all over the country that they are up against a real crisis as far as present and future taxation is concerned. He said that their slogan and their action at this time should be one of unity. He went back over the past few months and reviewed the events that preceded and culminated in the placing of the admission and film tax by Congress. He boldly asserted that because of the factional differences existing among the exhibitors in the country at that time much good effort and results were lost. "Had you exhibitors gotten together at that time and when you should," he said, "you probably would have been faring better to-day as regards the tax situation. Instead of combining their efforts at Washington up until the last minute to avoid the imposing of these taxes both factions of exhibitors represented on the committees there paraded up and down the halls exchanging personalities and airing their differences. You must get together if it is your desire to keep this great industry intact and free from any more death dealing taxes. I am not speaking against the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League alone or the American Exhibitors' Association. I mean this for both divisions. You must put your heads and activities together from now on if you intend to accomplish your salvation."

Mr. Brady left his talk on censorship until the last. He candidly confessed that at that time it was a ticklish subject for him. He began with a long laudation of the motion picture as an educator. He denounced the declaration, so often heard in the past, that the producers are catering to the morbid curiosity of the people and making a specialty in dealing with obnoxious sex films. As a producer and for the producers he said that every man in the business, with the exception of a natural few unprincipled ones, were striving to give the public the very best kind of educational and conventionally correct pictures. He mentioned Major Funkhouser's name in stating that he was against one-man censorship, and especially of the type that the Major has been giving the Chicago film men in the past. He candidly stated that he was opposed to all censorship of pictures. He said that if there must be censorship it should be made up of a board of capable men. In outlining what he thought should be the personnel of such a board to the councilmen present he suggested that a teacher of English, a professor of dramatics, clergymen and others of that type should make up the board.

On the following day, Tuesday, he spoke before the sub-committee of councils, when they took up the Steffens bill for consideration. Here he did not hold back his opinions.

The banquet committee consisted of the following men: Joseph Hopp, W. J. Sweeney, Max Schwartz and Charles Stuart.

responding increase in its admission price. Film men who are in touch with the cheaper grade houses say that they expect that it will only be a short time before the small five-cent house is a thing of the past in this state. Those that are not closing are cutting down to two or three days a week, some only showing Saturday and Sunday and others on Sunday only. The public in general is being so rapidly educated away from the cheap $3 and $5 features that they are no longer interested in the small movie even if it is the only one in the town. The result is the closing of the theatre.

Florida Funny Films Makes Pictures in Jacksonville

The Florida Funny Films is the name of the newest motion picture producing company to establish itself in Jacksonville. The company is headed by H. J. Binney, recently of the Master Pictures Company of Houston, Texas.

The company has secured stage space from the Klutho studios in West Ninth street, and will make one-reel pictures starring Fatty Filbert and Gloria Gayle.

Emerson and Loos Return to California

John Emerson and Anita Loos, director and scenario writer of the Douglas Fairbanks organization, left New York a few days ago for California, where work on their next subject for the Artcraft star will be started in the near future.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Brady?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game—Caught in Action! —Next Week—Wm. A. Fox

By William A. Johnston

FOR the benefit of those who may wish to interview Mr. Brady we cheerfully contribute a time-saving recipe.

(1) Don't bother his secretary. She's looking for him just as hard as you are.

(2) You may find him at (a) The studio, mostly; (b) The Hotel Astor, frequently; (c) The Playhouse, occasionally; (d) Offices of the National Association, now and then; (e) His office, seldom; (4) with Mark Klaw—never!

(3) Don't telephone the above places separately, otherwise you'll hear: "Mr. Brady just stepped out." Call them all at once. If you go to the Hotel Astor get a hotel detective.

(4) The surest way is to shoot the subject in transit.

After a hunt, starting the latter part of October, we finally got Mr. Brady on the 'phone at the Peerless Studios, Fort Lee.

"Is this you, Mr. Brady?"

"You bet your life!"

"What's the noise about, Mr. Brady. Sounds like the studio was falling down."

"That's nothing," said Mr. Brady, cheerfully, "I just fired a director. Want to hear some more? Wait a minute!"

Over the 'phone came the sound of splintering glass and crackling wood.

"What was that, Mr. Brady?"

"The leading man," said Mr. Brady gayly.

"Well, what will you do now?"

"Do now? What's easy: I'll direct the picture myself; play the lead too if necessary. And believe me, I'm good."

"Well, Mr. Brady, I have before me a book called "The Fighting Man," by Henry Irving Dodge. It's about you."

"It is," said Mr. Brady.

"Then you are a fighter?"

"Ask the director who just went out."

"Well, Mr. Brady, it is said that you bet occasionally. Is this correct?"

"No," said Mr. Brady. "I bet every day. You can't win if you haven't got a bet on the table."

"Which do you like best, fighting or betting?"

"Both," said Mr. Brady.

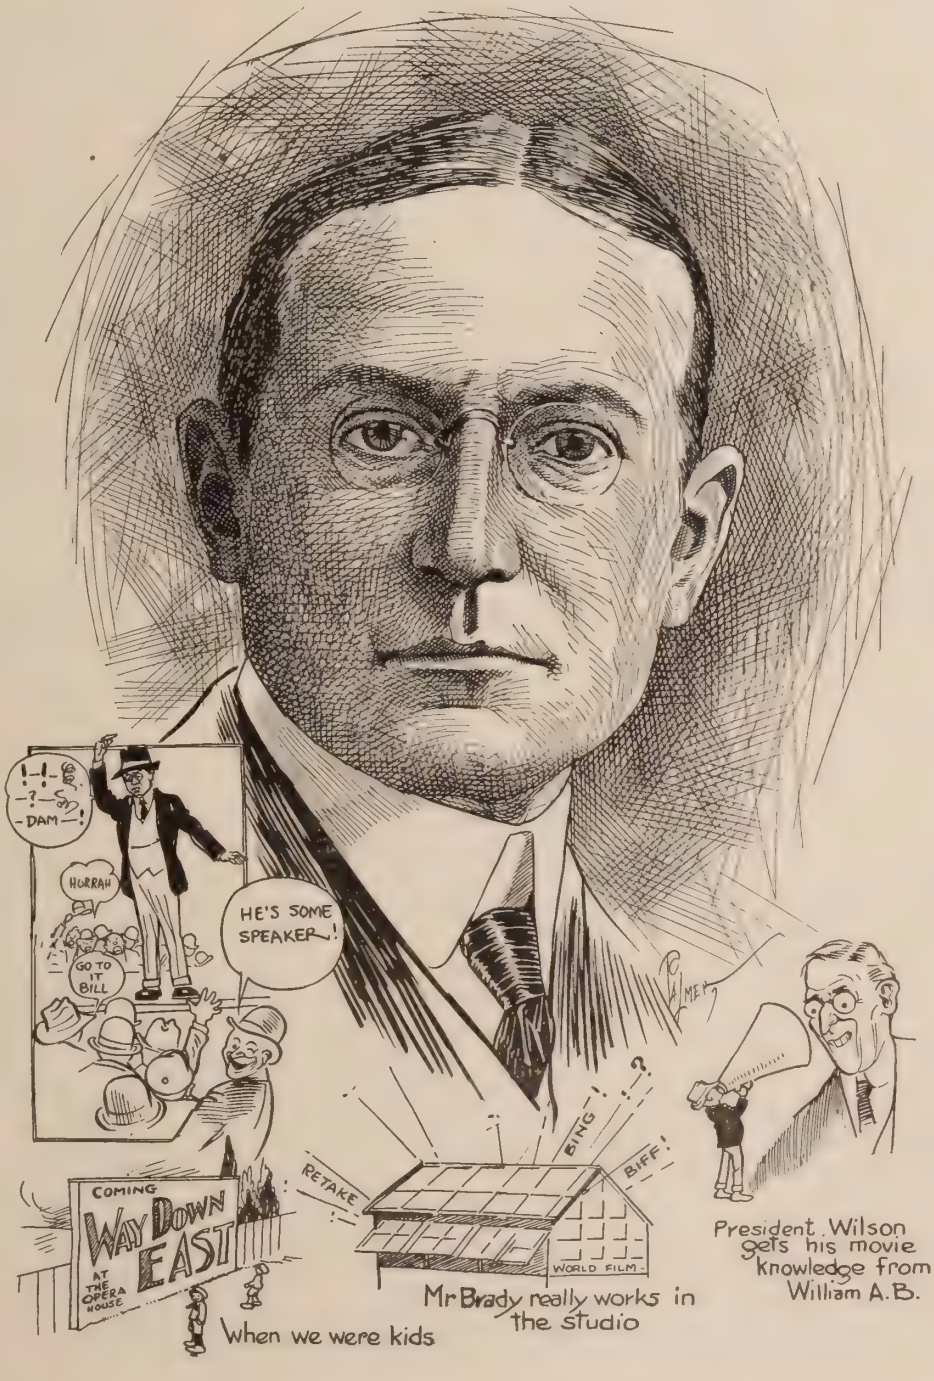
"How about speech-making?"

"Oh, well," said Mr. Brady.

"Along those lines, Mr. Brady, may I ask you a personal question?"

"You can ask anything," said Mr. Brady, "as long as it makes good reading."

"Well, Mr. Brady, do you recall the speech you made at Chicago two summers ago before the Exhibitors' League—when you got them all stirred up and on their feet yelling?"



"Sure."

"And some were so moved by emotion that they wanted to print it, free of any charge, for general circulation?"

"Sure."

"Well, Mr. Brady, I cheered too. But I read over the speech afterward and there was nothing in it."

"Well," answered Mr. Brady. As I say, I'm a speaker. Good-bye!"

Things said about Mr. Brady by men who know him.

James J. Corbett. "Well," said Jim, smilingly, "he helped make me. I guess that's pretty good, isn't it?"

James Jefferies. "Me too. But, say, he's an all around fellow. He pulled off one of my fights and managed Robert Mantell in Shakespearean drama—both shows on one night—and he won out on each!"

Arnold Rothstein, Broadwayite. "He's the nerviest man in New York. Election night, when Hughes was elected, he still wanted to bet on Wilson. Asked me to write my own ticket. 'Twenty-five to one,' said I. 'All right,' he said. 'I'll take a thousand.' And the next morning he said, 'All right, Arnold, now I'll take your check for twenty-five thousand. What do you know?"

Klaw & Erlanger: — — — — — — — — (deleted by the censor).

Leander Richardson, publicity man, who has stood for and by Mr. Brady for five years: "He's a many-sided man."

"He has produced, acted and stage-managed, and publicity-managed, many successes. He

Hall's Ince Production Reported Going Big

Nathan Gordon, of Globe Feature Films, Boston, Writes That "Zeppelin's Last Raid" Is Getting Big Business in New England

NATHAN A. GORDON, directing head of the Globe Feature Film Corporation and the Gordon chain of theatres in New England, has sent word to Frank Hall, president and general manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, that "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," the Thomas Ince production, and initial release of the booking company, has done a record business at the Scollay Square Olympia theatre, in the heart of the Boston theatrical district.

Mr. Gordon writes that business generally has been dull throughout New England, both as a result of war conditions and the tax imposed upon all forms of amusement, but that business at the Scollay Square where the Ince spectacle ran for one week, exceeded all expectations. As a result of the success of the production in his leading theatre, Mr. Gordon has determined to play it in a majority of his other houses in the near future feeling sure the picture will meet with similar approval elsewhere.

Some of the early bookings reported in the New England field are for the following theatres: Olympia, Boston; Star, Manchester, N. H.; Central Square, East Boston; Strand, Peabody, Mass.; Larkin, Beverly, Mass.; Music Hall, Pawtucket, Mass.; Gordon's Olympia, Lynn, Mass.; City, Brockton, Mass.; Scenic, Rochester, Mass.

The U. S. representative in New England is A. Lincoln Ehrgott, formerly manager of the Triangle, Boston Exchange. Mr. Ehrgott is stationed in the Globe Feature Film Company at 20 Winchester street, that city.

Ninety-two Famous Players-Lasky Men in War

From East and West Actors, Technical Experts and Men on Business Staff Join Colors—Still More May See Army Service

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its subsidiary organizations and exchanges are supplying a substantial quota to the honor roll of those who have entered the service of their country in the war. From both East and West men have joined the colors, and, as far as can be determined, there are now ninety-two men in service who formerly were employed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

From the Eastern studios and offices the following are already named: Hector Turnbull, formerly with scenario department; Adolph Menjou, actor, now first lieutenant, U. S. Ambulance Corps, Allentown, Pa.; Albert Bassett, actor, private, 107th Regiment, U. S. A.; Harry I. Day, sergeant, U. S. Ambulance, formerly editor Paramount Progress; Lloyd Robinson, publicity department, first-class yeoman, U. S. N.; Phillip Desmond, 9th Coast Defense, 14th Company, formerly assistant to Mr. Day; L. O. Bull, shipping department, corporal, 22nd Aero Squadron, U. S. A.; Chas. Gartner, advertising department, Co. K., 71st, N. G., N. Y.; James H. MacFarland, U.S.S. Navada, formerly in printing department; Wm. J. Moore, shipping department, sergeant, 69th N. Y. Infantry; Arthur Ryan, assistant cameraman; Joseph Goodrich, assistant cameraman, sergeant, Signal Corps; George Vanderminden, private, 12th Coast Artillery, properties department; Paul Vogel, assistant cameraman, private, 12th Coast Artillery; Jos. Hannafin, shipping department.

From the exchanges are included the following: Famous Players Film Service, Philadelphia—G. W. See, R. E. Brasher, Ray Anderson; Wm. L. Sherry Feature Film Co., New York—James Lynch; Famous Players Film Service, Chicago—Thos. Murphy, Harry Gustafson, Bert Reynold; Famous Players Film Service, Detroit—John Briggs, captain; Famous Players Film Service, Cincinnati—Harold Rhodes; Notable Feature Film Co., Denver, Colo.—Earl Davis; Texas Paramount Pictures Company, Dallas, Texas—H. W. Wills; Famous Players Film Co., of New England, Boston—Fred Hookalio, Seymore Stone, Bernie Moorland, Buck Livingstone, Jack Wheeler, Edward Poress, Fred Stearns, Nathan Goldstein, Walter Leary, William McColdive; Notable Feature Film Co., Salt Lake City—Frank Osborne; Kansas City Feature Film Co., Kansas City, Mo.—L. B. Flintom, Tom McKean, A. Orendorff; Progressive Motion Picture Co., San Francisco—Donald B. Smith, F. Palmerton, A. H. McQueston, H. Brown; Southern Paramount Pictures Co., New Orleans—George Sheperd and Anthony Mato; Progressive Motion Picture Company, Portland, Ore.—W. Gifford; Progressive Motion Picture Co., Seattle, Wash.—A. St. Claire and E. L. Lewis.

The enlistment early in the war of Tom Forman, Walter Long and T. E. Duncan, members of the Lasky stock company, was instrumental in securing about a dozen of the Lasky boys from other departments in the Coast Artillery, the corps to which the three named belong. Dr. Geo. Hamilton, who was a member of the company, has earned a surgeon's berth, as first lieutenant, and Walter Long has become a lieutenant in the Coast Artillery. T. E. Duncan has rank of captain in the same company.

Cullen B. Tate, Albert Carroll and Douglas Burke were among the first members of the newly organized divisions of camofleurs, enlisted under the signal corps. Arthur Streib is to be with the special hospital corps. He is a photographer. W. N. Sherer is already in service in France as a sergeant; Frank Dazey of the scenario department is a second lieutenant; Joseph Poe, chauffeur, is with the "Grizzlies," and Leo V. Nomis is in the aviation corps.

The men who have left the Lasky company to undergo service in France, comprises approximately 10 per cent of the regular studio quota. There are 43 soldiers and sailors from thirteen different departments in the Lasky roll of honor. The complete list, up to date, is as follows: Actors—Walter Long, Tom Forman, Lucien Littlefield, T. E. Duncan, V. Higgins, Leo V. Nomis, Dr. Geo. Hamilton, Sam Searle; from the laboratories—D. E. Lyon, Geo. Nico, W. Nicco, E. Lockwood, L. Ecklund, D. W. Jones, H. T. Selberg; photographic department—Victor Fleming, Edward Morrison, Arthur Streib, Don Short, Al Gilks; property department—Bon Lee, Harry Boquet, Howard Whyler; assistant directors—W. N. Sherer, Roy Marshall, C. B. Tate; stage crew—D. Burke, E. Manriquez, C. Marchund, L. Botts; carpenter shops—Harry Mittenzwer; scenic department—A. Carroll; transportation—J. Poe and R. Seigel; scenario department—Frank Dazey; electrical department—A. Johnson; titling and printing—F. Westeberg; offices, etc.—W. Wheeler, R. T. Keeton, Myron Lasky, H. Willard. In addition are W. Nevenheisen and David Vail, selected, but not yet called for active service.

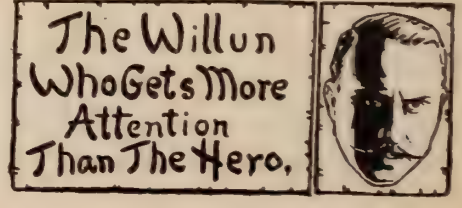
is fully competent in each capacity. He knows every end of production. He's a corking good ad-writer, for instance."

"He is magnetic."

"He would have made a splendid news editor. He knows news values."



Paramount - Artcraft Combine Organs

With the current issue, Paramount Progress, the service organ of Paramount Pictures Corporation, and Artcraft Advance, which did the same work for Artcraft, are combined under the name of The Progress-Advance, and the result is a much larger and more interesting publication. It is now twenty pages and makes a neat book almost the size of The Saturday Evening Post.

The same editorial policies will be followed, except that with the increased size of the publication it is expected that many new features can be included. Charles E. Moyer, formerly editor of The Progress, is the editor of the combined publication, and Charles E. Ulrich, of Advance, is associate editor.

Dispatch Corporation Loses a War Production

J. L. Warner, of the Dispatch Film Corporation, Godfrey Building, New York, announced last week that he is hot on the trail of an alleged film thief or thieves, as a result of the disappearing on October 16 of Donald C. Thompson's "War as It Really Is." The company had booked the film on that day, it is said, and the picture was returned to the Dispatch exchange the same night, but was discovered missing thirty minutes later.

Let Us Have TEAM WORK Between Exhibitor and Producer

An Editorial on the Sincerity of Box-Office Reports

WE have had complaint during the past week—bitter complaint from some producers who KNOW their pictures will get over anywhere IF handled the way they should be. They have reports from first-run exhibitions where the pictures were highly successful. The "cold averages" suggested by these box-office reports are unjust to them, they say. We have revised our list this week and omitted any and all pictures on which the verdict was not absolutely conclusive.

Hereafter we will not list a picture until distribution is complete—until the producer, in other words, has had a fair chance to find out how that picture must be presented to get success at the box-office.

This is only fair to the distributor, and makes these reports "doubly sure" in their assurance to the exhibitor that if we call a spade it IS a spade—as far as averages will show.

We don't want any exhibitor to think that HE may not put over pictures that have not made a general success. There are pictures in this list, graded low, which offer the finest opportunity for the exhibitor with imagination and vision to get splendid returns. It is up to the distributor of any such picture to convince the individual exhibitor in each and every such case. These "averages" should not interfere with TEAM PLAY between producer and exhibitor. These reports were started with the very object and aim of forcing TEAM PLAY between exhibitor and producer. A better presentation of all pictures, and especially those requiring peculiar methods, will be instantly reflected in these reports. It is time exhibitors and producers both were awake to this waste in the industry shown up by the low average of some pictures in these reports that have not the "star" to carry them. We frankly admit the star's advantage in these reports under the conditions of TODAY.

Exhibitors, producers, USE these reports and let the lesson of these "averages" mean something to you. Awake to the fact that you are NOT today getting the money you might from the picture-loving public. Now that you have facts and figures to show you this need, AWAKE. Let us have TEAM WORK.

Exhibitors' Box-Office reports have already proved their value to both exhibitor and producer.

Advertising Neighborhood Houses

Use of Newspaper Space Daily is as Essential as That of Downtown Houses

TWO years ago anyone who suggested that a neighborhood theatre should advertise in the daily papers was considered foolish. In fact, there weren't very many motion picture houses through the country who could see the reason for spending money for display. Neighborhood houses, because they believed that their appeal was wholly to a particular locality and because they probably had less seating capacity than the theatres in the business section. They argued that their location alone would bring them the business. But those that were finally persuaded to advertise found out that this brought them increasing business, increased the scope of their appeal and built patronage for the future.

Every neighborhood house can afford to advertise. It will not be able to spend the same amount of money and make the same flashy display as the downtown first-run house. It does not have to do so. The neighborhood house can take advantage of the money that has already been spent on pictures and it can divert a great deal of the business to itself if the advertising is done carefully, consistently and persistently.

Here are the reasons why neighborhood houses should advertise:

You must realize that the day is here when the newspapers have become the calendars of the people. You cannot expect people to walk several blocks to your theatre to find out what is going to be shown that day. Of course a certain element will do this, but you are discounting your attendance when you make it difficult for the possible patrons to learn what you are going to offer.

All the programs you can print, all the mailing lists that you can use will not bring the attention of the patron every day in the week. This is the very thing that the newspaper accomplishes.

The manager of neighborhood houses are, in a sense, fighting the theatres in the business portion of the city. They seek to hold the patron back from seeing pictures at the business section houses and draw them to their own theatres. But the downtown houses are advertising, and even if they were not they would have an advantage over the community theatre, because there are always a group of downtown houses and the patron starting out in ignorance of the bill at any of them would have the opportunity to select the picture he most desired to see without the danger of a trip for nothing.

And there is another thing well worth considering—and that is the patronage of those who have failed to see certain pictures at the first or second runs and who have been interested in them by the discussion of others. These people will be attracted to the neighborhood houses if those theatres advertise their pictures and in lots of cases permanent patrons will be developed. In the case of automobile owners this trade will be easy to develop—it will almost develop itself—because of the popularity of combining a spin with seeing a favorite picture.

When should a neighborhood house advertise? EVERY DAY.

Nearly all theatres of this class are daily change houses. You have to keep your current bill before the public if you expect to do business. Programs and slides and displays in front of your theatre are all well enough in many cases, but you cannot afford to show a dozen slides with each picture and you will confuse everyone if you paper the whole front of your house. And remember that all of your patrons are not coming to your theatre six or seven days in the week.

Recently we read in the service organ of one of the biggest producing companies the statement that small advertising is waste advertising. This is utterly untrue. While we have urged in these talks on advertising that the exhibitors use as much space as they can afford and have advised that investment in newspaper displays will increase patronage, it is equally as true that the theatre manager should not spend more than he knows he can afford.

And big displays are not needed by neighborhood theatres.

Before the community house shows these features, they have already been seen at the downtown theatre. You can get the benefit of the display advertising that the business district house had done, the benefit of the newspaper notices and a share of the yield from "word of mouth" advertising. You are not put in the position of having to tell the people about the picture. You can count on a considerable share of the public knowing that. You need to use little more than the name of the star and the title of the production.

As illustrations of neighborhood advertising we have taken some examples from five cities where these theatres exist in large numbers: New Orleans, Cleveland, O., St. Paul, Indianapolis and Omaha. While it is true that these may be classed in the larger city list, there is no reason why the same plans cannot be followed in smaller communities where there are fewer of the community shows.

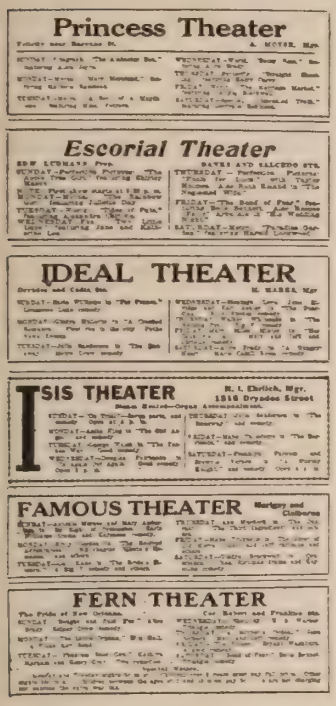
There are two plans followed by the neighborhood houses in the cities where they have been educated to advertising. One is to advertise the entire bill for the week in the Sunday issue and then to do nothing during the week, and the other is to advertise every day in the week, including Sunday, and to devote the entire space to concentrating attention on the current bill.

Naturally the argument in favor of doing all the advertising on Sunday is that the patrons will clip out the advertisement and preserve it during the week. And a lot of them will. But still that avoids the very thing that you ought to do—keep your bill for the day before all your possible patrons every day. In advertising it is the NOW punch that counts. To offset this argument the man who advertises his whole bill on Sunday and then drops the matter says that he is appealing to a certain neighborhood and that the Sunday advertising places the whole bill for the week before his patrons on Sunday and that then they select the attractions during the week and make their arrangements accordingly. That much of it is true, but not only do a lot of people change their minds, but scores of things may come up during the week that would lead a person to attend your theatre if the day's bill was before them in the morning and evening papers.

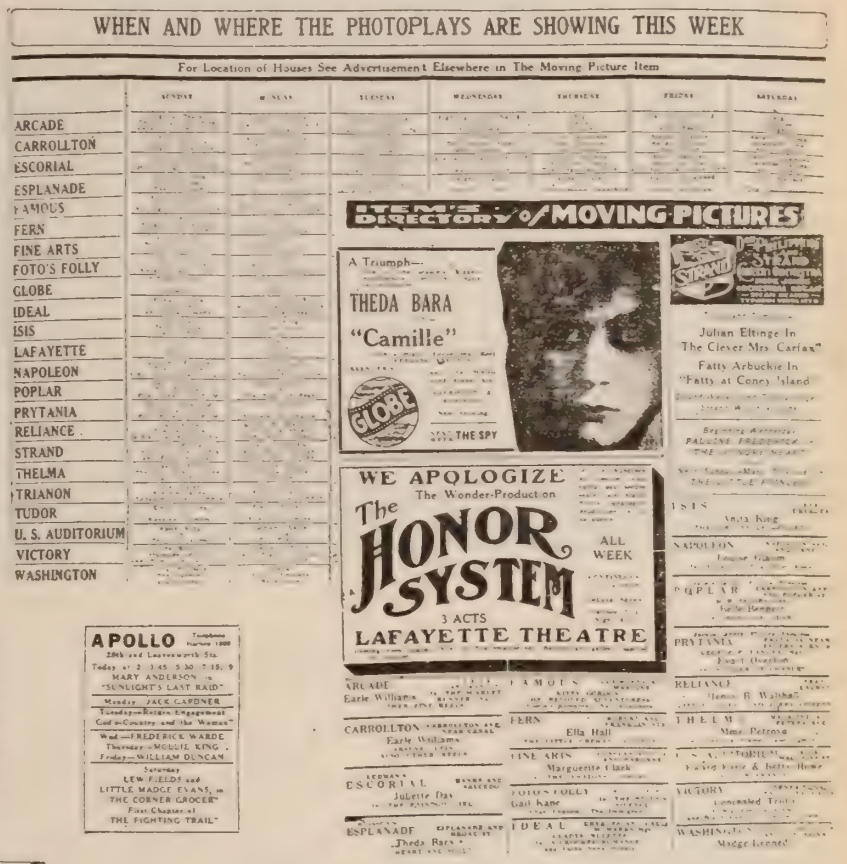
A combination of the two plans would be most effective, using the full week's bill on Sunday and then the additional daily advertising. But, by all means, we urge the neighborhood house to advertise every day. As we have said to you before you do not have to use large space. A space of five agate lines a day will suffice if you can go no stronger. (Most newspapers measure space by agate lines, there being twelve agate lines to the inch.) There are few newspapers in the country where a five-line advertisement each day would amount to more than five or six dollars a week.

Let's take a look at the advertising of some of the neighborhood houses in the cities we have mentioned and which are reproduced on another page. An illustration of what other exhibitors are doing is always the best way to show why you should do the same thing.

The displays of the Rohlff, Apollo and Boulevard theatres are taken from an Omaha paper. These theatres use their whole bill in the Sunday advertising and not during the week.



The Summitt, Dale and Park displays are from the St. Paul papers. These theatres use space daily from one to three inches deep and advertise the Sunday bill and the bill for the following two days. After that some of these theatres advertise during the week.



The strip of advertisements beginning with the Strafford are

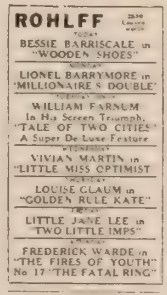
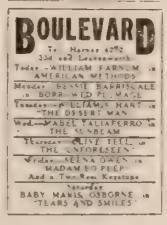
Putting the Neighborhood House in the Newspaper Running



How community theatres in Cleveland, St. Paul, Indianapolis, Omaha and New Orleans line up their announcements and some specimens of cooperation given them by the newspapers.



Manager Thomas D. Sorerio, of the Park theatre, Boston, has paid especial attention to his stage effects, which he changes every few weeks. The symphony orchestra occupies a prominent place on the stage and special lighting effects are introduced during the overtures, bringing out the colors of the stage effects.

How Neighborhood Houses Are Putting Themselves In Newspaper Running

from the Indianapolis Star. These theatres advertise every day and advertise their bills only for that day. They use a space two columns wide by an inch, more or less, deep. The Star co-operates with the neighborhood houses by running a small layout of pictures on Sunday, showing the attractions at the neighborhood picture shows, in contrast to the downtown attractions.

Cleveland theatres are among the best advertisers in the country. The big block of advertising reproduced under the heading of "Motion Picture Theatres" shows the group of one week day advertising in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Note that the neighborhood houses are grouped with the downtown houses and that the motion picture attractions are kept separate from the legitimate and vaudeville theatres.

This is one point that you should strive to make with your newspaper. Get the publisher to consent to group all of the motion picture advertising and contribute a little strip over them calling attention to it. This "directory" idea has been found extremely valuable by those who have adopted the scheme for that paper that uses it is always the ready reference sheet of the motion picture fan. And let us say here that where the motion picture houses of a city show their readiness to advertise, they will find most of the newspapers ready to co-operate with them to the limit. No properly conducted newspaper is going to advise you to advertise to an extent that you cannot afford. On the contrary, when they see the neighborhood houses buying display space, they are pretty certain to be turned to a more liberal treatment of you in particular and motion pictures in general.

Two plans of advertising are followed in New Orleans. At the top at the left of the page is shown the advertising of several of the neighborhood houses in the Times-Picayune. In this case the theatres center on the Sunday display, giving their bills for the entire week. The paper, however, gives the theatres frequent "reading notices" during the week. At the right is the manner in which the Item, in the same city, treats the theatres.

In the first place notice the "chart" showing where and when pictures are to be seen during the week. This is a free contribution to the theatres, but of course none are included in this "chart" who do not advertise. The minimum advertising is five agate lines a day, for the full seven days, but the smallest advertiser gets just as much space in the "chart" as the biggest. For instance, the Strand is the largest theatre in the city, and the Reliance one of the smaller neighborhood houses. Now overlaid on this chart is a reproduction of the advertising as it appears every day in the Item. Note that in the case of the Cleveland paper, these advertisements are grouped together with a neat heading, and note also that the community houses are all represented. There is the name of the theatre, and in some cases that of the manager, the location, the star of the feature attraction snd the title of the picture. All of the essential elements of neighborhood houses are included.

Several other papers through the country, including the Baltimore American, the Baltimore Sun and the Philadelphia Evening Ledger use the same "chart" idea. In fact, those papers which have adopted this declare that it is one of the most valuable features. It is responsible for the sale of many copies of the Sunday issue because it throws the attractions of all of the liver theatres of the city before the reader at once. The only reason that the idea has not been followed by more newspapers is that it requires considerable time to prepare the table, but enterprising photoplay editors will find that they have made a hit by using it.

And right here comes the matter of co-operation of the newspapers. You and other proprietors of neighborhood houses should go to the publisher of your paper and lay the problems of your house before him. Point out what papers in other cities are doing to co-operate with the motion picture houses and the chances are that your publisher will be willing to do the same thing. Don't expect the newspaper to hunt up your troubles. There has not been the co-operation between the press and picture houses in many cities, for the very reason that the exhibitors have pursued the "something for nothing policy" and the publishers have come to look at them as grafters of free space and not as a source of revenue. Meet your publisher half way and the chances are that you have made a valuable friend for life.

Newspapers which have entered into full co-operation have found that photoplay news is one of the best circulation builders and holders that they have and there is not one of them that has ever entered into real co-operation that ever abandons it.

We say these things for the results of advertising in your city may depend on the sort of co-operation that you do get. But even if that is not forthcoming to the full extent that you would like, don't forget that small advertising every day in the week is invaluable to you. You cannot afford to rob yourself of patronage because you cannot get everything that you want.

At least go to the daily advertising, and if your newspaper doesn't print a "chart" and few of them do, and if you can afford it, use the Sunday papers for the advertising of your full week's bill. It's an excellent combination that "gets 'em going and coming."

But what we want to impress upon you most is that a neighborhood house needs advertising as much as the downtown theatre, though not in the same volume. But with the same daily regularity.

Don't expect people to come out in the rain or snow and hunt up your theatre, to see what you are going to show that night. Keep the bill before their eyes in the daily papers every day. After a month's trial you will be amazed at the benefit you have conferred on your patrons, the waste that you have saved in unnecessary circulars, and in the new patrons that are coming to your house.

Reproduction of "work sheet" designed by Manager Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, to convey his ideas to the makers of his lobby displays. Note that he simply traces out the lettering and then sends the photos along with the work sheet and his worries are ended. These cards are of standard size to fit the handsome mahogany frame in the lobby.

How One Manager Outlines His Lobby Display-Cards for the Sign Maker

MOST exhibitors would like to get away from the mass of lithographs in their lobbies if they knew how. They are not artists themselves and they do not know how to direct others to do the work. Manager Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, has solved this problem through a work sheet which he sends to his sign department each week. You may not have a sign department of your own, but there's likely to be some one in the neighborhood who can do the work for you.

Naturally the manager knows what he wants to say in his announcements. He has already on hand his portraits of the stars or scenes from the productions. Mr. Franklin has prepared a sheet that immediately conveys his ideas to the sign maker and with this blank go the necessary pictures for the display. The sign man makes the sketches, does the lettering, placing the photographs in the positions indicated, and the result is an artistic display that gets away from the luridness of the ordinary poster.

Shea's Hippodrome uses lobby frames which are the size of a one-sheet. The frame is hand-carved mahogany and the design blends with the decorative atmosphere of the theatre. In the lobby there are five of these frames used, four of them for coming attractions and one for another theatre operated under the same management which plays vaudeville. Each frame is identified by the number on the work sheet and all signs are made in uniform size so that they can be shifted about as necessity dictates and thus saving expense.

Except in the larger cities the average exhibitor will not wish to use so many of these displays, but this is a convenient plan to follow, not only in cities where there are decorators available, but where you have to send your displays to another city to get them made. Any sign maker can get the idea immediately from these diagrams even though the manager himself may not be able to do more than indicate the positions for the pictures and the design. And the whole thing is a whole lot clearer than all the letters of direction that you might write.

Nine-tenths of the showmen who read this will immediately say to themselves that this is a splendid idea, but that they cannot do it. There is no reason in the world why any enterprising exhibitor cannot have this sort of lobby cards that attract attention and at the same time are in keeping with the remainder of the theatre. The cost is not great. By buying in quantities you can get the cardboard stock which forms the basis of these displays for about ten cents a sheet. The lettering and arrangement should not cost you over fifty cents or a dollar, provided you make an advance agreement with the man who is to do the work for you. Of course there is the additional charge for the photographs that you use.

But the result is worth the expense to any theatre that is appealing to the better class of audiences and that wants to get away from the side-show style of advertising. And for the many exhibitors who are complaining about the kind of paper that is being sent out by the exchanges, here is an opportunity to practically select your own displays.

There is another point in Manager Franklin's plan and that is the program frame. It has been found of particular value in telling the patrons just what time each part of the show begins, saves confusion and prevents anyone missing the particular part of the exhibition that was particularly sought.

Finished Card in Lobby Frame

Your Idea—and Ours

RECENTLY we printed an article about the proper way to advertise a big picture in which there is no star featured. From the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, comes a splendid example of the display of a double bill, with "Our Boys in France" featured. Note that the designer of this display has placed up at the top of the advertisement a drawing of American soldiers, which catches the eye at the same time as does the name of the house. The scenes from the film add emphasis to it and then the crisp reading matter tells further what the film contains. The Charles Ray Picture is brought out, but attention to it is secondary. It is useless to try to make your advertisements "balance"—to give equal emphasis to two things. We repeat: Pick out the thing that you want to feature and go to it with all the power that you have at command. That is the only way to get results out of a real feature.

To stop advertising to save money is like stopping a clock to save time.

PACIFIC Coast exhibitors have long been setting the pace for the rest of the country in motion picture advertising. These theatre owners believe that the way to get the patronage is by big displays and they have not hesitated to use plenty of space. Most other exhibitors who are confronted with the advice to advertise liberally plead that their houses are so small that they cannot afford it. Then what do you think of a theatre seating less than 400 persons that uses half pages? Here is an example, the Lyric, Spokane, Wash. And if you want to figure further the value of advertising, take into consideration that the feature advertised was a reissue. But the Lyric went to the display, capitalized the name of Douglas Fairbanks, made its display dominate all others in that issue of the paper—and did the business.

Advertising is an insurance policy against forgetfulness. It compels people to think of your theatre.

WE showed you an example, a few weeks ago, of the way that Gordon's Olympia theatre, Boston, advertised the opening chapter of the Paramount serial, "Who Is 'Number One'?" He put it ahead of the feature, took advantage of the general newspaper advertising that was being done in Boston and hit it the biggest smash possible. This photograph shows the way Gordon displayed the announcement in his lobby, achieved a striking effect and made it stand out as the one dominant thing. And it was done without any great expense. The head was taken from one of the twenty-four sheets and the remainder of the sign is one that any painter can prepare.

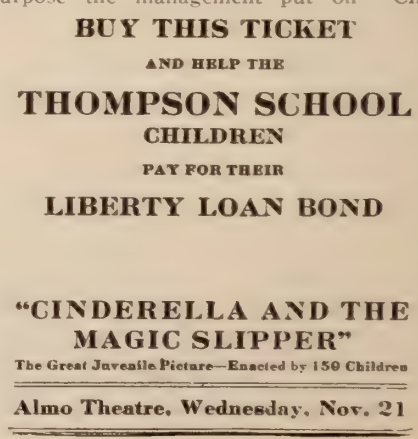
The crowd in front of the theatre is the best answer to the question whether it pays one to exhaust every resource in advertising a serial. Remember our advice not to merely expect a serial to bring business to your house—make it do so.

Pictures are the bricks of the business, but exploitation is the mortar that holds them together.



STANDARD theatre, Cleveland, O., gets into this column mighty often, for the simple reason that the man who writes the advertising for that house has a knack of using the very best thought that the producers put behind the exploitation of pictures, together with his own original ideas. Here is a display on "Nearly Married" which reverses most of the good rules of advertising in that it does not use the name of the star or the name of the picture in especially large type but centers the attention on the illustration. The photograph itself is an exceptionally appealing one and it will attract attention in the midst of scores of other displays. The first thing that you ask yourself on looking at the picture is, "What's the matter with the bride?" And once your attention is centered you will read the particular appeal that is made in the reading matter. This is one of the exceptions that "proves the rule." You will find this style of advertising good when you have the "hunch"—the picture to illustrate it with. It's just one of the examples of going outside of custom to put over something with a particular appeal.

Every time you tie your tie in the morning, think how you can tie yourself to better business.

ALMO theatre, Raleigh, N. C., made itself solid with the people of the city and especially with the children by aiding the Thompson school to raise the money to buy a Liberty bond. The Almo gave a percentage of its receipts from special tickets for the purpose and the required amount was easily gained. For this special purpose the management put on "Cinderella and the Magic Slipper," a picture that has special appeal to the younger patrons, but so thoroughly did the active ticket sellers work that the house was filled with adults as well..

What Live Wires Are Doing

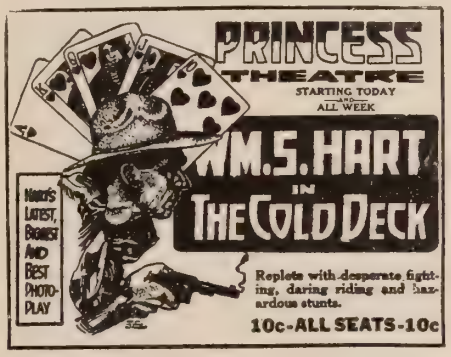
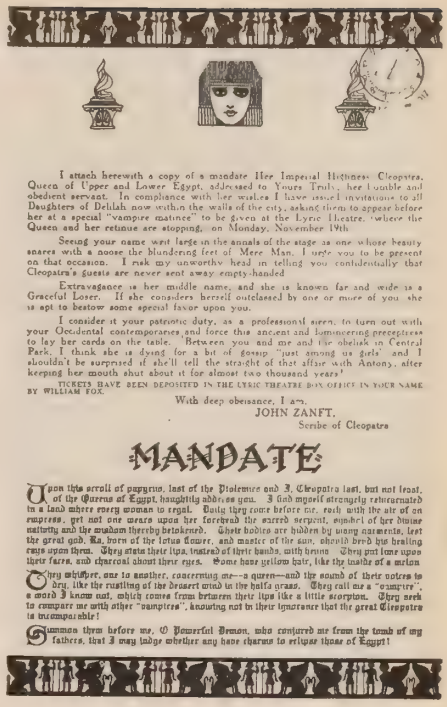
Any sort of co-operation that you can give to war work is going to help your theatre, and especially anything that you do for the children is going to prove one of your best guarantees for future business. Circulation manager of one of the biggest daily papers once said: "Let a child read my paper for three months and I will have a subscriber for life."



Fans and steam heat may keep your theatre from having CLIMATE, but your personality has to put the ATMOSPHERE in the house.

FROM time to time we have reproduced examples here of very bad advertising—a waste of money. Here is an excellent example of bad work. This display of the Bowdoin theatre, Boston, is reproduced in practically its actual size and stands out far more here than it did in the Sunday newspapers, where it was crowded up against a number of other larger ads. A hasty reading of it will show further why it is bad advertising. When would you say that "A Morman Maid" was to be shown? We happen to know that the Bowdoin starts its new bills on Monday, but how many of the thousands who read the newspaper last Sunday knew that. The advertisement was evidently banking on that fact BEING KNOWN. This might get by so far as regular patrons of the house are concerned, yet it is certainly confusing and almost misleading so far as others are concerned. Certainly it is not the sort of advertising to bring NEW business.

Successful exhibitors make mistakes, but unsuccessful exhibitors repeat them.



OUT of a big bunch of last Sunday newspapers we picked this as the best advertisement we had seen during the week, and it was quite a coincidence that we should receive from the Princess theatre, Milwaukee, a request for our opinion of it. Here it is: It is one of the most striking and convincing motion picture theatre ads that we have ever seen and meets our ideal of what advertising should be. Why? Because, in the first place, the name of the theatre is strikingly brought out, but still the name of the star and the title of the picture dominate the display, while the picture of Hart with a gun in his hand and the "royal flush" behind him show clearly what the picture is about. There is just one sentence of reading matter, without exaggeration and without superlative. It's an advertisement that every one who runs this picture can afford to copy.

Advance knowledge of a picture is worth a hundred apologies afterward.

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the cleverest advertising campaigns is that which has conducted in New York city on behalf of the William Fox picture, "Cleopatra." Last week we called attention to one of the displays in which mention was made of the special "vampire matinee." Here is a copy of a herald which was mailed to hundreds of people in the city. Note that it is distinctive in style and content. No herald is worth the postage that does not have an appeal of its own. There should be just as much REASON for a herald as there is for your display advertising. If there is no reason, you will save yourself a lot of money for postage and your patrons a lot of trouble in opening envelopes by forgetting all about them. But there is scarcely a picture that does not

I attach herewith a copy of a mandate Her Imperial Highness Cleopatra, Queen of Upper and Lower Egypt, addressed to Yours Truly, her humble and obedient servant. In compliance with her wishes I have issued invitations to all Daughters of Delilah now within the walls of the city, asking them to appear before her at a special "vampire matinee" to be given at the Lyric Theatre, where the Queen and her retinue are stopping, on Monday, November 19th.

Seeing your name went large in the annals of the stage as one whose beauty snares with a noose the blundering feet of Mere Man, I note you to be present on that occasion. I risk my unworthy head in telling you confidentially that Cleopatra's guests are never sent away empty-handed.

Extravagance is her middle name, and she is known far and wide as a Graceful Loser. If she considers herself outclassed by one or more of you she is apt to bestow some special favor upon you.

I consider it your patriotic duty, as a professional siren, to turn out with your Occidental contemporaries and force this ancient and lonmocring preceptress to lay her cards on the table. "Between you and me and the obelisk in Central Park, I think she is dyeing for a bit of gossip. "just among us girls" and I shouldn't be surprised if she'll tell the straight of that affair with Antony, after keeping her mouth shut about it for almost two thousand years!

MANDATE

Upon this scroll of papyrus, last of the Ptolemies and I, Cleopatra last, but not least, of the Queens of Egypt, haughtily address you. I find myself strangely reincarnated in a land where every woman is regal. Daily they come before me, rash with the air of an empress, yet not one wears upon her forehead the sacred serpent, symbol of her divine maternity and the wisdom thereby betokened. Their bodies are hidden by many garments, lest the great god, Ra, born of the lotus flower, and master of the sun, should bend his burning rays upon them. They stain their lips, instead of their hands, with henna. They put lime upon their faces, and charcoal about their eyes. Some have yellow hair, like the tassels of a melon.

They whisper, one to another, concerning me—a queen—and the sound of their voices is dry, like the rustling of the dessert wind in the halfa grass. They call me a "vampire", a word I know not, which comes from between their lips like a little scorpion. They seek to compare me with other "vampires", knowing not in their ignorance that the great Cleopatra is incomparable!

Summon them before me, O powerful Demon, who conjured me from the tomb of my fathers, that I may judge whether any have charms to eclipse those of Egypt!

offer a chance to do something "out of the ordinary" in this kind of exploitation. But find the appealing thing and center on that.

Pictures are part of life, and music is as much a part of them as it is of any other form of successful being.

WILLIAM FAIT, JR., managing director of the Avon theatre, Utica, N. Y., had adopted the program style for some of his advertising. This display appeared in the Monday newspapers and consists largely of a heart to heart talk with the patrons. There is a personal letter about the feature picture to be shown, but the advertisement is not confined to that, for there is display dominating the whole thing so that one who does not care to read the whole advertisement may immediately get the bill.

While this is not the sort of advertising that we would recommend for all theatres or as a regular diet, it is certainly unique and it is altogether likely that hundreds of Uticans watch for these talks and digest them thoroughly.

Cornelius Kennedy

Cartoonist Who Draws for Theatre Picked by Universal

Cornelius Kennedy, better known to readers of the Buffalo Evening News as "Ken," has been selected as one of the cartoonists of big dailies throughout the country to draw for the Universal Screen Magazine, and, of course, all Ken's Buffalo friends are mighty glad to see him jump into the limelight, because he has earned his "place in the sun."

It is not generally known that Ken used to be a boilermaker and while pounding rivets into lake steamers had little idea that some day he would be a famous artist. He asked a friend of his to show some drawing he made at home one night to John D. Wells, editor of the Buffalo Sunday News, about four years ago. The drawing was "different." The News needed an extra artist. Ken stopped pounding rivets and began pushing the pen in the art department of the Buffalo Sunday News.

One local theatre, the Academy, has attached him to draw its advertisements, and these have attracted much attention and incidentally helped to bring business to the box office.

Baltimore Theatres Aid Fund for Soldiers

To swell the fund for the boys at Camp Meade, Dr. Frederick W. Schanze donated Schanze theatre, Baltimore, for benefit performances held last Sunday afternoon and night. There was no admission charged but a collection was taken.

Mrs. J. Henry Strohmeyer, chairman of the Camp Meade Ladies' Auxiliary, was in charge of the arrangements, and there were a number of the soldiers from the camp at the performance. Paramount donated the use of a number of photoplays, the feature of which was Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green."

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

HERE is one of the most unique theatres in the country. Theatre K. is located in a town of about 20,000 people, where the State University, a co-educational school, forms a considerable element of the community during nine months of the year and a summer school claims an even larger attendance during the summer season.

There was already a large theatre in the city, and when the new house was built no one could see any need of it and practically everyone united in predicting speedy failure. That was three years ago. Both theatres are still running and prosperous. Theatre K. did not build up its business by tearing down that of the other exhibitor. He simply created new demand and brought people to his house that had rarely attended motion pictures.

The owner, who is also the manager, admitted that the theatre already there was apparently satisfying the demands of all the "fans," but he surveyed the field and found that not 10 per cent. of the population was going to the established theatre. He remembered that in the days when the legitimate was in its prime the local opera house was jammed every time there was a really good attraction. He realized that the legitimate attractions were now fewer and of an even lower quality than before. And the thing that struck him the hardest was the fact that the scores of people he used to see at the legitimate theatre were not regular attendants at the established motion picture house.

In the first place he determined that the theatre should be the handsomest building in the city, and again he surprised everyone and aroused new predictions of bankruptcy by spending more money than he really needed to spend. As he added feature after feature to the house he had the population literally "waiting at the gates" to see what would happen next. And then he forgot the "Bijou Dreams" and the "Happy Hours" and gave his house the name of the state. Then he announced that everything about the house was to be kept in keeping with the dignity of the building and the name.

The next people that got a jolt were the exchange men at their headquarters in the larger city, some eighty miles away. He descended on them and demanded the second run showing of the pictures that he wanted—the first run outside of the exchange city itself. Heretofore the films had been going to a larger city in the extreme northern part of the state, where an entire day was lost in transit, and then coming back to his city with the loss of another day. He had studied railroad tables and showed the exchange men how they could send the pictures to him first by using a night train; he could use them all day and then get them to the city in the northern part of the state at practically the same time that they arrived before.

He got the second run showing and the benefit of the big city publicity even if he paid a little more in rental, and no one was inconvenienced. No one else had ever thought of the plan before. As a matter of fact, there are many pictures which this theatre shows even before any house in the exchange city, simply for the reason that this man keeps informed in advance about pictures and generally knows what he wants while others are "taking their time" in reaching their decisions.

Now, Theatre K. had everything except one very essential thing—the patronage. In the first place, the established house had not been successful with the college trade. He had found that some of the youth practically broke up the shows with their noise and that they kept other patrons away. Theatre K. started out with an open appeal for the college patronage, but one of the first things that he did was to send season passes to every member of the faculty. At first few of them used these, and the doorkeeper kept this record carefully. Then the manager began sending personal letters to these holders of passes about educational pictures and other features of special importance, and soon practically every professor was a regular attendant. The manager did this because he wanted them present for the effect they would have on the student body. It succeeded. Except on rare occasions there has not been a case of disorder in the house.

And soon the professors began to mention in classroom pictures that they had seen at Theatre K., which not only stimulated attendance but advertised the specific pictures. The manager says that the passes that went to the faculty were worth all of the advertising that he could have done.

Now for the town attendance. He did not seek a list of his competitor's patrons, but rather of those who did not attend. The dignity of the house itself brought many out of curiosity, and a large percentage who had never been in the other house became regular attendants. The other house had been depending largely on handbills, which were scattered on the porches and lawns, for advertising. The new man in the field went to the only daily newspaper in the city and surprised the proprietor by agreeing to use what appeared at first blush to be a fabulous amount of space, for the other house had never advertised except on rare occasions and then with such a wealth of superlative that no one credited the statements.

Next he issued a neat program that would fit inside of a small envelope. This he mailed to every head of a household in the town. He kept this up for a month

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

IT is a rather remarkable thing that pictures of a parade, taken in this country, months ago, should bring one of the biggest bursts of applause that the Rialto has ever known. And it is all the more remarkable when it is true that the same audience had seen and applauded the same pictures a few days after they were taken—at the big farewell parade in New York.

But the answer is simple. It came from the way they were used. It came from the blending of music and picture and effect in a way that the Rialto stands out. But as we told you last week, it is something that every exhibitor can do on probably a smaller scale. Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, who is in charge in the absence of Mr. Rothapfel, is responsible for this novelty, which comes right at the end of the Rialto Animated Magazine.

This pictorial review opens with pictures of the new French Cabinet and was followed by decorations for French soldiers and also decorations for the survivors of a sailing ship. With these "Sombre a Meuse" was played by the orchestra with excellent effect. Caterpillar tractors at work and U. S. Ambulance Corps demonstrating the efficiency of camp kitchen in the streets of Philadelphia brought great applause, being accompanied by "Admiral March," a stirring selection. Relief from the patriotic numbers was given by Pathe's colored picture of "Rare Parrots." There was a humorous touch to this picture and with it was played a delightful little caprice.

Now after the audience had been allowed to get their minds off the war for a few moments came the smashing patriotic effect. First there came pictures of King George and Queen Mary visiting the American Officers' Club in London and then some splendid pictures of American troops arriving in France. As they marched down the streets with their flags flying the big audience burst into one continuous furore of cheering. But, wait; the biggest hrill was yet to come. There flashed on the screen a title "Now, Let's Go Back to the Day the Boys Marched Away." Dr. Reisenfeld dug into the news weeklies of that date and got some very striking pictures of the marching troops and as they were thrown on the screen the great orchestra, which had been playing the "Columbia March," turned into "Over There." We have never seen an audience in any motion picture theatre make such a demonstration as that which came Sunday afternoon. Scores of people cried out their cheers, but they could barely be heard above the frantic clapping of hands. It had been a simple thing—the use of a short piece of old film, but it brought the audience back with a rush to America. And after the pictures of the boys in France had appeared on the screen there came to the mind of every one who has read the first casualty lists that they should have paid an even greater tribute to the boys as they marched in that farewell parade—and they made it up by their tribute to the pictures of it.

Then came the anti-climax. The light became dark blue and the curati curtains on either side of the screen parted showing on one side the water front of New York at night and on the other the Statue of Liberty and Miss Malvine Parry, alto, leading a little girl and wearing the widow's garb appeared on the stage and began to sing selections from "The Soldier's Farewell." When that had ended, Greek Evans, baritone, wearing a blue uniform, appeared and sang a new selection, "When the Boys Come Marching Home," written by John Hay and Oley Speaks. It is a very stirring number and delighted the audience, and when it was ended there was another wave of continuous applause that almost matched the first one.

There was another novelty introduced in the opening of the Animated Magazine. After the orchestra had played "Fantasy from I Pagliacci" in splendid fashion, another one of the wonderful scenics made under the direction of Robert Bruce and released by Educational Films was shown with the accompaniment of Borch's "Mountain Music." This picture, "The Chain Gang," contains probably the most wonderful water reflection that has even been seen in a picture. It illustrated a pack trail in the western wilderness. The titles are exceptionally clever and they got lots of laughs alternating with the beautiful scenery.

Immediately at the conclusion of this the orchestra began Luigi Boccherini's "Minuet,". After several minutes of this there appeared on the stage Misses Rielle Dorres and Yvonne Roberts of the Albertieri ballet school, and they danced a minuet, like two Dresden China dolls, ending it up by opening the curtains for the Animated Weekly. This week the dance was given on the program, but the real admirer of Rialto presentations never opens his program, because he wants to take in all the surprising effects. You will remember that we told you once that Mr. Rothapfel would never have a program in one of his houses if he was not compelled to do so. It is the novelty effect and the novel ways of doing what otherwise would be the ordinary thing that adds so much to the charm of the Rialto. And it is this thing that can make any theatre, no matter how small it is, distinctive.

In this day of the developed motion picture nothing counts so much as giving your patrons atmosphere. By attention to the little details you can make your house DIFFERENT from every other in the city and the public will quickly realize it. That is proven by the standing out success of probably a score of exhibitors of the country.

William S. Hart is the star this week in "The Silent Man," an Ince-Artcraft. Owing to legal difficulties the first of these Artcraft productions was not shown in New York state and it had been several weeks since Rialto patrons had seen a Hart picture and there was a big wave of applause when the title and the star were announced. This being, of course, a western picture, descriptive music, with a number of themes, was followed.

"As Others See Us," a Metro-Drew, was the only comedy on the bill, which was unusually well balanced.

An interesting musical novelty was Godfrey's "Duet of Two Trumpets," a spirited number written as if there were a contest for supremacy in technical skill between two trumpeters, but with the solos made to blend harmoniously as a duet.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF NOV. 25

MANAGING Director Howard Edel, of the Strand, is making a big hit this week by having the splendid orchestra play "The Star Spangled Banner" just before the overture. Just as the musicians break into the national anthem, the lights in the theatre go out and on the screen appears a huge American flag. Every theatre with a capable orchestra will make a hit by opening the performance with this number—provided it is real not tin-pan music. Following this was the overture, "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2." Carl Edouarde is conducting. The overture included an original piano cadenza by William Lowitz.

Famous Watering Resorts of England were shown in Pathe color picture, "Tonic Towns," furnishing a number of striking views. This was followed by the Topical Review, which has a number of good subjects, the opening one showing scenes connected up with the breaking of the Hindenburg line receiving strong appreciation. It was followed by pictures of the anti-German riots in Buenos Aires. Another picture showed the dedication of the American officers' club in London and the visit of the king and queen. Davis college work in using tractors for war agriculture, gathering the beet sugar crop in California, and pictures of Camp Devens National Army camp and of artillery training at Fort Myer, Va., were other striking war numbers. All of these were Hearst-Pathe. Paramount-Bray contributed pictures of a new life-saving invention. Another interesting feature of the topical was the Ditmars-Educational picture of "Our Vanishing Game," which included a number of buffalos. The topical ended with a cartoon plea for Christmas gifts for our soldier boys.

The feature this week is "Nearly Married," a Goldwyn farce, with Madge Kennedy, and it got a wealth of laughs. More was added to the comedy effect with Mutt and Jeff in "The Hunters."

Musical numbers include Helen Scholder, 'cellist in Popper's "Mazurka," and Rosa Lind and Von Colignon in a duet from "Hamlet."

Service Head Warns Against Patchwork Display in Announcing Coming Pictures

WILLIAM A. BACH, who is on a tour of the principal exchange cities for the Universal, writes this fifth of his articles on lobby displays as he has seen them in Chicago, Detroit and St. Louis. His criticisms reflect those that have already been printed in this department. He is in charge of the service work of Universal.

I've often watched a number of people stare bewilderedly at the patchwork display in front of some "movie house," wondering just what was playing today—or what tomorrow. And I'm positive that people go in many a time under the impression that a certain film is being shown, when as a matter of fact it is on the program for later in the week.

First of all, the exhibitor should beware of scattering "today"-"tomorrow" and "next week" signs all over his front. Especially so if he is catering to transient trade. They want to know what is running right now, and are not interested in the future.

The day's show should be prominently advertised, and if this is done by concentrating on the theme of the picture, making a drive on one point instead of half a dozen, the people cannot be confused and they cannot help being attracted.

Again, if you want to advertise a coming show, the use of a program frame is desirable, showing in its seven compartments, the show, the title, the star and the day of each film. This should be neatiy and carefully lettered and hung in a place to catch the eye of outgoing crowds. That is the time to interest them in your future program, not as they go in.

Watch your announcement slides. I've seen a good picture entirely misrepresented by a slide. If the slide you get from the exchange doesn't carry the point of attraction that you know is necessary from your own audience, make one of your own or call upon the exchange service men to help you. And don't announce more than three future pictures at one time, it is better to hold to one or two. A collection of slides shown between shows has much the same effect as the multitudinous trailers mentioned in my last article.

Another thing, do not hand your programs to ingoing people. They can't read them in the dark and the chance of advertising your coming show may be lost because of the people crumpling them up and throwing them on the floor, littering your house, into the bargain.

Give them to your patrons as they go out and if given with a pleasant word, chances are they'll at least glance at your coming list, perhaps they'll keep them for reference. At any rate, there is less waste this way than by the other. These are all little points but they count in the long run for dollars and cents.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Rotagravure Portraits of Stars Used on Programs

OFTEN it remains for an exhibitor in one of the smaller communities to put over a very attractive idea. This has been done by the Elks' theatre, Blackwell, Okla., with its weekly programs.

Each week the theatre issues a folder like the one illustrated above. Each one carries a rotagravure picture of one of the stars who will be seen during the week, the pictures just barely pasted to the card so that they can be removed and added to the "fan's" gallery.

It is interesting to notice that the Elks devotes but a small space to each of the pictures, using the name of the star and the title in prominent type, and then adding just a few lines to give an idea of the character of the production. The program doesn't try to tell the patrons "all about the picture"—one of the worst of faults.

The reverse side of the folder is devoted to snappy paragraphs about attractions during the week, coming productions and breezy news of the motion picture business. On the bottom of each sheet there is a small advertisement, the proceeds from the three going toward paying for the program. The fact that these advertisements are changed nearly every week show that the merchants of Blackwell appreciate the program as an advertising medium.

This sort of a program certainly has the advantage of permanency. You will rarely see a real motion picture fan throwing away one of these which bears an excellent portrait of a favorite star.

Two Views of the Lobby Display of the American theatre, Butte, Montana, on "Pay Me"

Butte Exhibitor Hammers Home Single Idea in His Lobby Display on Features

HERE'S another lobby display of P. E. Noble, the live wire of Butte, Montana.

When Noble puts on a picture at the American theatre he hits it a smash, and that means that he keeps busy with his blows, exploits each production for all that it is worth.

Take into consideration that Butte is a city of about 50,000. It is the biggest copper center in the world. It is a typical western city with a whole lot of the original western atmosphere to it. The sort of advertising and display that gets business there has to be striking—even breezy. And Noble accomplishes that.

For instance, when the American theatre played "Pay Me," the title of the picture itself was featured in all of the advertising and lobby displays. Here was a title breezy in itself and Noble kept hammering that home. There is a large element in the community that does not speak or read English readily, but practically all of them could get the expression "Pay Me."

A study of the photographs will show the way these two words were featured and the number of times they were repeated. Every card in the front was of a vivid red, while the "Pay Me" spots were of black outlined with gold and the smaller case letters of white. The idea was even carried out in the announcement of the cost of admission with the card "Pay Me Two Bits." The newspaper advertising on this production was equally striking, a bunch of five and twenty dollar bills being reproduced with the name of the picture in big type.

Here is an example of the name of the star being practically passed over in order to get the full benefit of the title.

There is but one secret to the success of Mr. Noble's exploitation of the pictures. When he books a film he immediately begins to study it. He seeks to grasp the one central idea that he can bring out and then he proceeds to do this with as little confusion of the patrons as possible. You will see at a glance that a confusion of placards about different attractions would have puzzled anyone looking into the lobby, but not when they are all hammering in the same direction.

Here is another thing that he keeps in mind—and that is to make every display as different as possible from the ones that have gone before.

Mutual Designs Novel Minter Display

Mutual has devised a novel lobby photo display, the first of which will be issued with "The Mate of the Sally Ann," the Mary Miles Minter production, released November 26.

Two 22 by 28-inch photos will be added to each set, one of them a portrait of the star and the other a scene from the production.

How Theatre Made Place for Itself and then suddenly dropped it for a week, purposely, in order to find out how many would miss it. And the result was that people that he had heard complaining of the handbill nuisance complained now that they had failed to receive their programs.

The result was that Theatre K. is doing a splendid business. It may have slightly hurt the other house, but that theatre is using cheaper pictures and is not appealing to the whole city, as Theatre K. is doing. In fact, Theatre K. has been responsible for the increase of motion picture patronage over 200 per cent.

Here is a house that deliberately went into the field to develop new business—patronage which the manager knew was there. It's a lesson in showmanship.

And you can do it in your theatre.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Sonia Markova, New Fox Star, in "The Painted Madonna"—Fox Special

(Fox Special Five-Reel Production)

Sonia Markova, recently added to the list of Fox stars, will be seen for the first time at the ———— theatre ———— week in her first William Fox production. It is from the pen of George M. Scarborough and titled "The Painted Madonna." It is one of the late Fox special features in five reels. Miss Markova presents the role of Stella Dean whose confidence in the man she loves is betrayed. Fearing the censorship of the inhabitants of the town of Pleasantville, she leaves a written confession for her mother and goes to the city where she can forget and be forgotten. Her mother dies of a broken heart and Stella is left alone to face the world. Milton Taylor, an artist, whom Stella had known in her home town, loves Stella and when he learns that she has gone to New York, he follows. She is engaged as a chorus girl in a Broadway show and Taylor in search for a model engages her to pose for him, concealing the fact that he knows her identity. Not until the picture is completed, does Stella discover that the artist is Taylor. She resents his action and leaves him. Taylor who is in love with her is heartbroken because he has lost her respect, and drinks heavily to forget. Stella, believing that all men are alike, devotes her time to the salvation of homeless girls. In the supporting cast are Sidney Mason, William Lampe, David Herblin, Albert Tavernier, Anita Navaro, Edith Reeves and Julia Stuart. O. C. A. Lund directed.

At the 6666 theatre on ———— of ———— week, "The Painted Madonna," a Fox special feature with Sonia Markova in the featured role.

Violet Heming, Wilfred Lucas, Conway Tearle in Parker's "Judgment House"

(Paramount Six-Reel Production)

Sir Gilbert Parker's first work to be produced under the direction of J. Stuart Blackton, "The Judgment House" will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Wilfred Lucas, Conway Tearle, Paul Doucet and Violet Heming are seen in the principal roles. "The Judgment House" is an adaptation from one of the famous English playwright's works. It is a Paramount production under the personal direction of Commodore Blackton. Violet Heming, known to the millions for her excellent work on the speaking stage, presents the principal feminine role of Jasmine Grenfel, a beautiful English girl who is placed in the situation of having to decide between two men, which one shall best serve her as a husband. One is of a strong, virile nature, the other a polished, highly educated gentleman. She asks a year in which to decide and chooses the strong, virile character. Rudyard Byng (Wilfred Lucas), the man who is her choice, is a large diamond mine owner in South Africa. Ian Stafford (Conway Tearle), the other suitor, who is rejected, goes to South Africa to forget. Here all three meet under circumstances which reveal their true characters. The events which lead up to the revelation in "The Judgment House," and the human interest that permeates the entire story as told on the screen, are examples of intensely entertaining drama.

Montagu Love and Dorothy in "The Awakening"—Life in Paris

(World Five-Reel Production)

Dorothy Kelly comes back to the screen after an absence of some months in a corking good World picture, titled "The Awakening," with Montagu Love in the featured role. Mr. Love gives one of the best characterizations of his career in this picture and Miss Kelly in support, has a part that fits her like a glove and in which she shines. The story tells of life in Bohemia with Montagu Love as Jacques Reville, an eccentric artist, holding the center of the stage. The opening scenes show Jacques working in the wheat fields as an awkward, disliked farm hand. No one likes him. He is left alone. In his solitude he visits the parish church and sketches. He has a natural tendency for drawing and resolves to go where he can develop his talents. Paris is the place. In Paris he develops into a well-known artist, but still keeps by himself. He lives in a dingy room, dresses in tattered clothes and drinks heavily. One night while returning to his room in a snowstorm he comes upon a young girl asleep. He takes her to his room and provides for her. He finds in her the companion whom he has pictured in his dreams. From that day he leads a different life. The girl is attracted by his kindness and he in turn risks his life that her honor might be avenged. The story is one of human pathos, true to life in every detail and one that will hold your attention to the last flash on the screen.

Norma Talmadge in "Tess of the Storm Country"—Miss Talmadge's Latest Success

(Select Pictures Five-Reel Production)

Norma Talmadge's latest, "Tess of the Storm Country," is an adaptation from Grace Miller White's novel of the same name. It is one of the Norma Talmadge Select Star series. There is a lesson contained which all will be the better for having learned. Miss Talmadge is recognized as one of the most talented actresses in the silent drama and those who see her in her latest work before the camera, will not hesitate to attribute this praise to her. She presents the role of Tessibel Skinner, daughter of an ex-convict. Her father has spent the greater part of his life behind prison walls. Tess marries a divinity student who, shortly after the wedding, asks his wife to renounce him as her husband. His mother demands this, and Tess makes the sacrifice even though the act will brand her child with shame. Tess is taken into the home of Lawyer Young. She is educated and treated as his own daughter would be. After several years the husband returns and discovers the child. Her husband's brother-in-law does everything in his power to make life miserable for Tess, but she ignores him and suffers in silence. His child is kidnapped by Mother Moll, a witch of the village, and when her hut in which she has confined the child burns, Tess risks her own life in order that the child might be restored to the man who has worked to ruin her life. Her husband dies confessing the wrong he did her and she finds happiness in the love and respect of the man who had believed in her. "Tess of the Storm Country" is an example of human interest on the screen. Miss Talmadge is at her best in the role of Tess.

Norma Talmadge in "Tess of the Storm Country" will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Harry Morey and Corinne Griffith in Robert W. Chambers's "Who Goes There?"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

When the public picks up a volume of Robert W. Chambers's works they are assured of Class A reading matter from cover to cover. You have noticed, no doubt, that Mr. Chambers invariably places adventure first, then action and through it all he weaves a line of adventure. If this be so, then this author's works when adapted for screen presentation, should afford excellent entertainment. The Vitagraph company have adapted to the screen Mr. Chambers's "Who goes There," with Harry Morey and Corinne Griffith in the featured roles. Those of you who have read this fascinating story will recall that it tells of the adventures of a Belgian officer who is captured by the Germans and allowed his freedom and that of the Belgian population if he will go to London and fetch the German general's sweetheart to him in Belgium. The adventures of the Belgian officer and the girl, after leaving London and the manner in which the tables are turned on the German officer, are related in this latest Vitagraph release. There is a punch in every scene, a thrill in every flash and an interest for all. "Who Goes There" is timely; is written by an author known to the millions for his works of adventure and romance. The characters as created by Mr. Chambers are impersonated by artists in the silent drama. Harry Morey has the role of the Belgian officer and Corinne Griffith presents the part of Karen Girard, the girl. Arthur Donaldson impersonates the German officer and Mary Maurice, better known as "Mother" Maurice, one of the oldest actresses on the screen, has the role of the Belgian mother.

At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, "Who Goes There," with Harry Morey and Corinne Griffith.

Gladys Brockwell in "A Branded Soul," Story of a Woman's Influence

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

William Fox presents Gladys Brockwell in a thrilling spectacular photodrama, "A Branded Soul." In the supporting cast with Miss Brockwell are Colin Chase, Lewis J. Cody, Vivian Rich, Gloria Payton, Willard Louis, Fred Whitman and Barney Furey. The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, scenarioized by Franklyn Hall and produced under the direction of Bertram Bracken. The story opens in Rome at the time when this city was at the height of its power. This setting is in the nature of a prologue and presents Miss Brockwell as a young Roman girl who converts Valerian, a Roman nobleman, to the Christian faith. The scenes of the story then shift to modern times in Mexico where Conchita Cordova, a Spanish girl, is seen doing good among her people. John Rannie, a wealthy oil magnate, has purchased the land occupied by the mission church and sends his men to tear it down. When the men arrive the congregation is at prayer. Conchita, because of her beauty, exerts a strong influence over Rannie and he orders his men to postpone the work of demolishing the church. Conchita has a sweetheart, Juan. Juan has lost heavily at gambling and in order to recover his losses, engages himself as a spy. Rannie obtains possession of a document incriminating Juan and uses this to persuade Conchita to accede to his wishes. In order to save Juan she gives herself to him. Rannie is touched by her willingness to sacrifice even herself. The people aroused by his action in destroying their homes, burn his oil wells and destroy his property. He loses everything and Juan saves him from death.

At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, "A Branded Soul."

Taylor Holmes in His Fourth Screen Production, "The Small Town Guy"

(Perfection Five-Reel Production)

Taylor Holmes, idol of the vaudeville stage and hero of the comedy drama on the screen since his appearance in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" and "Two Bit Seats," will be seen on the screen of the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest work before the camera "The Small Town Guy," produced by Essanay and released on the Perfection program. "The Small Town Guy" is adapted from a story appearing in Munsey's Magazine, entitled "A Picture of Innocence," and it affords Mr. Holmes a screen vehicle in which he can ride to the hearts of his audiences with humor and pathos blazing the trail. Helen Ferguson presents the leading feminine role. Fred Tiden and Mark Ellison are others in support. Mr. Holmes presents the role of Ernest Gledhill of Crompton Centre. His knowledge of the world is limited and when a couple of confidence men from Chicago meet with him he is easily persuaded to accompany them to the big city where he is told he can readily put his cleverness to valuable use. Eleanor, his sweetheart is left behind and he with his companions start for Chicago. He is elected secretary of a new club and is set to work soliciting funds for the erection of a new club house. The little game is detected and Ernest who is adjudged by the authorities, innocent of all wrong is sent back to the small town where he is united with his sweetheart and cleared of a stain he had unwittingly inflicted on himself.

Taylor Holmes in "The Small Town Guy" will be at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Pauline Frederick in Adaptation from David Graham Phillips's, "The Hungry Heart"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Pauline Frederick, one of the few accomplished emotional actresses on the screen today, appears on the screen of the ———— theatre ———— week in a photodramatized version of David Graham Phillips's story, "The Hungry Heart." Charles Maigne made the adaptation and the picture was produced for Paramount under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. In the supporting cast with Miss Frederick are Howard Hall, Robert Cain, Helen Lindroth and Eldean Steuart, a child actress of unusual ability. Miss Frederick presents the role of Courtney Vaughn the wife of a chemist who devotes all his time to experimentation in the laboratory. He neglects his wife who longs for her husband's companionship. A young chemist comes to their home to assist the husband in his work and during his spare time he spends with Mrs. Vaughn. The husband leaves for New York and during his absence, the young chemist is seen with Mrs. Vaughn at times and under conditions that were compromising. The housekeeper grows suspicious and when she attempts to verify her suspicions, she is injured by a fall which injury deprives her, temporarily, of speech. The husband returns. Days after the housekeeper recovers and tells him what she saw. He, for the first time, realizes his neglect of his wife. The young chemist flees, but later returns when he learns that Mrs. Vaughn has obtained a divorce. Vaughn leaves also, but returns and asks permission to use the laboratory until he arranged to obtain the use of another. During his time spent at the laboratory, Mrs. Vaughn realizes that she had played unfair. The two are reunited and a better understanding and closer and more intimate friendship results.

"The Winged Mystery," with Franklyn Farnum in a Dual Role—All-Star Cast

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Opening in Berlin in the fashionable district, swinging from this seat of action to one of the large cities of America, "The Winged Mystery," the late Bluebird featuring Franklyn Farnum, supported by Claire Du Brey, Rosemary Theby, Charles Hills Mailes, Sam De Grasse, T. D. Crittenden and Frederick Montague, is one of the most exciting stories of adventure ever projected on the screen of a theatre. It was adapted from Archer McMackin's story by William Parker and produced for Bluebird under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. Franklyn Farnum impersonates a dual role—brothers born in Germany of American parents. August is an officer in the German army and Louis is thoroughly American and in sympathy with the Allied cause. They meet in a restaurant in Berlin and August insults the American flag. Louis resents the insult and a fight follows in which August is beaten. Louis hurries to his apartment to prepare to sail for America and August by aid of his brother's passport sails for America with Gerda Anderson, a German spy. Louis is held up, but after difficulties is able to cross the frontier and eventually lands in America. August conceives a blackmailing scheme and through its operation entraps half of the millionaires of a social centre on Long Island. The party of millionaires find themselves entraped in a house of mystery. By the use of carrier pigeons, August sends notes to the imprisoned millionaires, demanding ransom for the women. Louis and Shirley Wayne are among the prisoners and they are attempting to devise ways and means to free the prisoners. August and confederate are operating in a room above them. How they are liberated and how the Germans are victims of their own scheme, is told in this late Bluebird production, "The Winged Mystery," featuring Franklyn Farnum in a dual role of brothers. At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

Douglas Fairbanks in His Latest Success, "Reaching for the Moon"—Different

(Artcraft-Paramount Five-Reel Production)

"Reaching for the Moon"—this is the latest as offered by Douglas Fairbanks, the prize winner of the screen drama and the one whose performances before the camera have done more toward making an evening at the theatre "the end of perfect day" than any other person whose aim in this life is to provide entertainment for the public. You may make one exception—Charlie Chaplin—but Charlie is in another line of comedy, usually referred to as slapstick. Doug never resorts to the slapstick. He deals straight from the shoulder and with very few exceptions delivers the knock-out with every punch. He will be seen on the screen of the ———— on ———— of ———— week in his latest, "Reaching for the Moon," written by Anita Loos in collaboration with John Emerson and produced for Artcraft Pictures under the direction of Mr. Emerson. In the supporting cast are Richard Cummings, Millard Webb, Eugene Ormonde, Frank Campeau and Eileen Percy, the charming feminine character who has been seen opposite Mr. Fairbanks in most of his Artcraft pictures. Doug impersonates Alexis Caesar Napoleon Brown, chief clerk in a button factory, who is thoroughly convinced that he is wasting his time in such menial business when he can rule as king. His best listener is Elsie who believes in the powers of concentration, but who devotes her concentrative energies to more plausible and practical ends than Alexis Caesar. Alexis Caesar is discharged in order that he may carry out his plan of revolutionizing the affairs of state, and takes an extended trip to Bulgaria where he is crowned king. He wakes from all this of a sudden and finds himself on the floor of his room. He hurries to the office and gets his job back, sees Elsie and they concentrate and decide that it is cheaper to live in Jersey than New York. At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon."

Ad Talks Supply Basis for Telling Patrons About Pictures

Be able to talk to your patrons in advance about the pictures they are going to see at your theatre. You probably know the followers of particular stars and which of your patrons like particular kind of pictures.

These Ad Talks give you, in brief form, a mighty good idea of what the picture is. They are valuable not only for newspaper and program use, but as a "talking" basis. When you yourself are familiar with the picture in advance, you will soon find yourself becoming more interested in the productions you show.

Read about the pictures, talk about them and then file these stories away for use in newspapers or program when you show the picture.

Gladys Hulette in "Over the Hill," Story of Girl Reporter Winning Out

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Gladys Hulette, supported by William Parke, Jr., Chester Barnett, Richard Thorton, Daniel Mason and J. H. Gilmour, is seen as the society reporter on a daily newspaper in one of our large cities. She presents the role of Esther Neal, the daughter of a minister, who, because of his advanced years, is compelled to go to the city and try his hand at seling books. His health fails him and Esther is left to shift for herself. Esther is acquainted with Allen Stone and Roy Winthrop, one the son of the owner of the Daily Pioneer and the other advertising manager of the same paper. She is engaged as society reporter. The paper has followed a policy of running scandalous stories and this practice has ruined its advertising. The owner of the largest department store in the city has withdrawn his advertising and unless his business is returned the paper will fail. Young Winthrop is responsible for the loss, having antagonized Lawlor. Stone sees a way of saving the paper and confides in Esther and they work together. Young Winthrop decides to publish a story which will show Lawlor in a bad light and Esther gets the copy and destroys it so that the edition does not come out with the story. Lawlor learns of her act and rewards her by giving her the credit for the contract which gives to the paper his advertising. Winthrop is recalled by his father and Stone is placed at the head. He succeeds in putting the paper "over the hill," and wins Esther. "Over The Hill" is the title of this Pathe product which will be seen on ——— of ——— week at the ———Theatre. Gladys Hulette featured.

Alice Joyce and Marc MacDermott in "A Woman Between Friends"—Tragical Scenes

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production.)

The tragedy in the lives of two young American artists in Paris, as told by Robert W. Chambers, the best known writer of modern fiction, and picturized by Vitagraph is the next big feature to come to the screen of the ———— theatre. Alice Joyce with Marc MacDermott in chief support, is featured in this latest work of Chambers, to be adapted to the screen by the Vitagraph Company. In the supporting cast are: Robert Walker, Bernard Seigel, Edith Speare and Florence McCafferty. "A Woman Between Friends" is the title of this production, and it is assured a hearty welcome by all who see it for the reason that it contains the heart interest that is the prime essential to both the dramatic element and the entertaining element of any presentation on the screen or stage. In this picture Marc MacDermott, conceded by critics to be one of the most talented character actors and leading men on the screen, is seen for the first time opposite Miss Joyce in the leading male role. Mr. MacDermott has been seen on the screen since the five-reel picture came into vogue as the feature of motion picture exhibitions. He was with the old Edison Company, and played leads with Mary Fuller when she starred in Edison pictures. He has been seen to advantage in many Vitagraph successes, and is admired by thousands of picture-going people for his fine work before the camera. Miss Joyce is known to the millions and needs no introduction. In this her late picture, she presents the role of a flower girl drawn into a tragedy by her adoration of a wronged husband. The scenes are laid in Paris.

Marguerite Clayton Seen in Unusual Role of a Doll in "The Dream Doll"

(Perfection Five-Reel Production.)

Marguerite Clayton, who will be remembered as leading lady for Broncho Billy Anderson when Broncho Billy's Western dramas were popular, is the featured player in a late Essanay production releasing on the Perfection program, entitled "The Dream Doll," written by Howard S. Moss. In the supporting cast are: John Cossar, Bobby Bolder and Rodney La Rock. Miss Clayton presents the part of Ruby, daughter or the Toy King. A. Knutt, a chemist, claims to have discovered an elixir which when applied to dolls, will bring them to life. Among those who are invited to attend a demonstration of A. Knutt's discovered, is Ruby. A doll which he has brought to life accidentally spils some of the elixir on Ruby, and she is changed into a doll. The doll which has been brought to life, and Ruby who has been changed into a doll, leave the laboratory and rush to the display room where they bring to life the justice of the peace of the doll world, and they are married. In the meantime Ruby's father and A. Knutt start on a hunt for the lost daughter. The police are summoned and the city is searched. The dolls leave on their honeymoon, and on their return select a dog's kennel as their home. They make friends with the dog and their new friend supplies them with food. While strolling through the park one evening they discover a bomb, which explodes and then—well Ruby has had a lovely dream.

Irene Hunt in an Appealing Drama of a Sister's Sacrifice, "The Stainless Barrier"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production.)

"The Stainless Barrier," with Irene Hunt in the featured role tells of the sacrifices made by a sister that her wayward brother might be kept from the hands of the law. In the supporting cast with Miss Hunt are: Jack Livingston, H. A. Barrows, Rowland Lee, Thomas Guise, T. Barney Sherry, John Lince, Kate Bruce, Lena Harris and James G. Farley. The story was written by Louis Schneider, picturized by Jack Cunningham, and produced for Triangle under the direction of Thomas Heffron. R. E. Irish was behind the camera. Miss Hunt has been seen in hundreds of successful screen dramas. The members of her supporting cast in her late picture are all well known to the lovers of motion pictures. The story in which she appears was written by the author of innumerable screen dramas. The director, Thomas Heffron, has given to the screen some of its best known productions. In short, there is quality behind the production of "The Stainless Barrier," and it is bound to please the most varied audience. Miss Hunt has the role of Betsy Shelton, whose Aunt Ruth is the only mother she has even known. Her brother, Richard, is the victim of evil companionship. Betsy has sufficient money saved to purchase a pretty dress when she receives word from her brother that he needs money to save him from trouble. Betsy makes her first sacrifice for her brother, and from that time she gives up every enjoyment and pleasure that she may save her brother. Calvin Stone, a young attorney, is Betsy's sweetheart. Her brother is arrested for fraudulent use of the mails, and in defense he accuses the man who had betrayed him of betraying his sister. Betsy makes her last sacrifice to save him.

At the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week, "The Stainless Barrier," with Irene Hunt featured.

"A Marine Miracle," Late Chapter of "Who Is Number One?"—Submarine Is Sunk

(Paramount Serial—Two Reels)

"A Marine Miracle" is the title of the fourth and late episode of Paramount's baffling mystery serial, "Who Is Number One?" with Kathleen Clifford in the featured role. Last week you saw the thrilling escapades of Tommy Hale and his followers when they donned diving suits and pursued the members of the T-T-T and engaged in an under-sea battle. In this late episode the submarine is sunk and Hale and his party are compelled to take to the open sea. Aimee and the crew are captured but Hale escapes. From her place of imprisonment, Aimee sends a message for help. The message falls into the hands of a child and then—"A Marine Miracle," the latest episode of "Who Is Number One?" serial with Kathleen Clifford, in the featured role, will answer.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Goldwyn Releasing Plans Meet Approval

Organization Considers Four Big Pictures in Succession Great Aid to Exhibitors in Face of the War Problems

QUOTING the statement of Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, that "big pictures are the instant cure for box-office depression in the motion picture industry," exhibitors in all sections of America give hearty indorsement of Goldwyn's decision to release in straight succession four pictures in which public interest has been awakened to high pitch, according to Goldwyn announcements last week.

The giving of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block" to all Goldwyn contract exhibitors at their regular prices instantly won the approval, it is said, of exhibitors who for months had looked forward to playing this big production at higher prices.

For months "The Auction Block" had been announced and exploited as a special production, and everyone in the trade knew that it could be obtained only at advanced rentals. Suddenly when Mabel Normand's first Goldwyn production, "Joan of Plattsburg," had to be postponed, though completed, Samuel Goldfish saw an opportunity to do what is considered a profitable thing for all Goldwyn exhibitors. By paying a big price to the Rex Beach Corporation he obtained the right to release "The Auction Block" to all Goldwyn customers at the same prices they pay Goldwyn for its own productions. Already the effect of this step is said to be felt by Goldwyn in the form of increased bookings at all of the Goldwyn offices.

The unique value of this step will be better understood by considering the power of the next four Goldwyn releases which, in straight sequence, give exhibitors these pictures: November 18, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married" by Edgar Selwyn; December 2, Rex Beach's picture, "The Auction Block"; December 16, Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man" by Edward Childs Carpenter; December 30, Mary Garden in Anatole France's "Thais."

Pathe Buys Authors' Works for Pathe Plays

"For Sale," "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket" Among the Stories Secured for Fannie Ward—Drama for Frank Keenan

APPARENTLY in line with the company's big feature plans, Pathe has purchased a number of well-known books and plays by well-known authors, and also several additional stories written by people trained in the motion picture field, for productions in which the Pathe stars, including Fannie Ward, Irene Castle, Frank Keenan, Bessie Love and Bryant Washburn will appear.

"For Sale," play by Fred Jackson, "Innocent," and "The Yellow Ticket" by Michael Morton, have been purchased for Fannie Ward.

For Frank Keenan, Pathe has purchased "Simeon's Shadow," by Elizabeth Lee, and "Loaded Dice," by Hillary A. Clark, giving Mr. Keenan roles of the dramatic nature.

Henry Kitchell Webster's "The Painted Scene," has been purchased for Bessie Love and is being produced under the working title, "Spring of the Year." Another story for Bessie Love is "Bessie Beware," by Agnes C. Johnston.

Cyrus Townsend Brady's "The Cliff Dwelle's Pot," and Sir William Young's "A Japanese Nightingale," have also been bought but as yet no star has been assigned to them.

Three more A. H. Woods plays in addition to "Innocent" and "The Yellow Ticket," which will shortly be presented by Pathe, are "Wanted—Jim Bennett," "The Power of Money" and "The Other Woman." In the last named Peggy Hyland is the star. "The Other Woman" is the only story on this list which has been completed. The cast, hitherto unannounced, includes Peggy Hyland, Anna Lehr, Milton Sills, Horace Robertson, William Parke, Jr., Charles Gotthold and Dell Boone.

Wallace S. Clifton's famous story, "The Frame Up," has been purchased for Irene Castle and is now in course of production under the direction of William Parke, with Mrs. Castle, Harry Benham, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmore, Ethel Cooke and Bert Starkey.

For Bryant Washburn the company has purchased "Kidder and Ko" story by John W. Grey, and scenario by Charles Sarver, and "Twenty-One," story by George Randolph Chester and scenario by Charles Sarver, who recently left Lasky to join the Pathe staff.

Olive Thomas Stars in Triangle. "Limousine Life"

Olive Thomas, who, it is announced, has completed work on her latest Triangle feature, "Betty Takes a Hand," which was directed by Jack Dillon, is ready to begin work on her next Triangle picture, "Limousine Life," adapted from the Ida M. Evans magazine story.

Artcraft Changes Title of Fairbanks' New Film

Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, last week announced that the title of the new Douglas Fairbanks picture, now in the course of production, has been changed from "D'Artagnan of Kansas" to "The Modern Musketeer." In this photoplay Douglas Fairbanks has the part of a modern youth who gets into all kinds of difficulties as a result of his chivalry. Casted are Marjorie Daw, Frank Campeau, Kathleen Kirkham, Eugene Ormonde and Tully Marshall.

Honolulu Furnishes Settings for Hayakawa Feature

Island settings in and about Honolulu will be a feature of Sessue Hayakawa's Paramount picture, following "The Secret Game," a December release. The new picture is to be called "Hidden Pearls," and is expected to be as picturesque and novel in character as "The Bottle Imp," in which the Japanese star appeared some months ago.

Florence Vider has the role of the girl spy in "The Secret Game." Others in the cast are Jack Holt, Charles Ogle, Raymond Hattan and Maym Kelso. The story was written by Marion Fairfax and directed by William C. De Mille. The next picture, "Hidden Pearls," is being directed by George Melford.

William S. Hart Teaches Youngster Screen Art

One of the first official acts of Pete Schmid, Artcraft publicity representative, following his recent return to New York, was the announcement that William S.

Bill Hart Has Discovered a Future Star and Is Giving the Lad a Tryout in "The Silent Man," an Ince-Artcraft Feature

Hart has taken unto himself a protege in the person of Harold Goodwin, a youngster of whom the star expects much in future years. The lad, it was announced, scored nicely when given a try-out in Hart's new Ince-Artcraft picture, "The Silent Man."

Lasky Returns from California with Progressive Plans

Imbued with Conviction That Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Is in Better Condition to Carry on Extensive Development Than Ever Before—Enthused by System Perfected for Economical Achievement—Features in Production Also Please the Executive

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York from California, thoroughly imbued with the conviction that never before in its history has his organization been in more satisfactory position, from every point of view, to carry on its extensive developing business of making the best pictures that time, money, art and experience can produce.

The recent trip was Mr. Lasky's first visit to the Coast since Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett became affiliated as producers. To converse with Mr. Lasky concerning his sojourn in the West is proof that he took in every detail of the present and future arrangements at the various studios where the Paramount and Artcraft stars are engaged.

Studios Buzz with Activity

"I am perfectly frank to state," said Mr. Lasky, "that I am more enthusiastic over productional activities in our organization, both East and West, than ever before. Arriving in California I found our studios and those of the other producers releasing through Paramount and Artcraft, humming like beehives. I found a perfection in organization that was most gratifying. I saw with a clearer vision, perhaps, than at any previous time, the wonderful opportunities that lie before us and of which we are striving to take entire advantage. I also saw the infinite potentialities of the work and with every day, during which I watched the activities of each department, I grew more and more thoroughly convinced that nothing could stop the forward impetus.

"Returning to the East I was again edified and enthused by the splendid system that has been perfected for economical achievement; for perfect distributing arrangements and for the collation of the vast amount of material that is constantly required to supply our producers with material for photoplays of the most modern quality.

"During my absence the details of my Eastern work had been handled admirably by Hugh Ford and Whitman Bennett, and from them I learned of the splendid work progressing in the studios, which are under the supervision of Mr. Ford. I was gratified to learn that Marguerite Clark is engaged upon a Christmas play, and that Pauline Frederick is completing George V. Hobart's fine allegorical drama.

Subjects Please Surpassingly

"Another notable achievement is 'The Judgment House,' by Sir Gilbert Parker, produced by J. Stuart Blackton. I heard with no little satisfaction of the successful completion of Mme. Cavalieri's first Paramount picture and of the recent release and cordial reception of Ann Pennington's new picture; also of Elsie Ferguson's progress with 'Rose of the World' for Artcraft. Nor may I omit mention of Billie Burke's forthcoming picture, 'Eve's Daughter,' a Paramount release. I found Robert E. MacAlarney, head of the scenario department, here, with his desk piled high with future photodramas and, indeed, wherever I look I constantly note with more satisfaction than I can express, the perfect organization by means of which we are perpetually advancing in our field of endeavor."

While in the West, Mr. Lasky attended the opening of the new California theatre in San Francisco, under the management of Eugene S. Roth.

"The New California theatre," said Mr. Lasky, "is the finest motion picture house west of New York. Mr. Roth began his career as an exhibitor with the Portola theatre on Market street, a comparably small house, but with the profits he derived therefrom, he was enabled to erect this new and beautiful structure, which opened with an Artcraft picture, 'The Woman God Forgot,' featuring Geraldine Farrar. The success of Mr. Roth is, to my mind, visual evidence of the certain results of properly exhibiting and exploiting high-class motion pictures.

De Mille Makes Specials

"Cecil B. De Mille, recently left New York after a brief visit, returning to the Coast where he is engaged in the production of the first of several 'special' De Mille pictures, which will be entitled, 'The Whispering Chorus,' from a story by Perley Poore Sheehan. Mr. De Mille is enthusiastic over this story, which he says possesses one of the strongest psychological plots that he has ever come across. I am inclined to agree with him that it will be one of the best pictures we have ever made.

"We are approaching the threshold of a new year," concluded Mr. Lasky, "and I have no hesitation in saying that personally I can see only success of the most flattering character ahead. Despite the present day conditions, which are looked upon by some persons as fraught with uncertainty, to me there appear only indications of greater activity in our organization and the development of many cherished plans for even greater perfection in the production and distribution of the highest form of motion picture entertainment."

Addition Built to Studio

As evidence of the increase in business that has developed recently, Mr. Lasky announces that it has been found necessary to erect an addition to the laboratories at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood, Cal. This addition will accommodate a third projection room, drying and printing rooms, etc., and this will make it possible to turn out nearly a million feet of positive film per week.

For the last year, in order to handle the total number of prints of Paramount and Artcraft pictures made at the Lasky Studio, the laboratory has been running two shifts, handling approximately 600,000 feet of positive each week. Two years ago, when the laboratory was built, it had a capacity of double the number of Paramount releases then required.

One of the strongest evidences of continued and future motion picture prosperity, as seen by Mr. Lasky during his Western trip, is contained in the indications of continual advancement in exhibiting methods and in the constant addition of new theatres for motion pictures. The exhibitor personnel, he believes, is of a calibre that assures the best possible use of the material supplied by the makers of photoplays and, as a consequence, perfect entertainment for the patronage that has arisen for this form of amusement.

Vitagraph Secures Right to "The Son of Kazan"

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, announced last week that he has obtained exclusive rights to "The Son of Kazan," the story by James Oliver Curwood, which ran serially in a magazine not long ago. This story, in the estimation of its publishers, is the strongest story ever written by this virile writer, and President Smith declares that it will be one of the strongest pictures ever turned out by Vitagraph.

"The Son of Kazan," the latest of the Curwood stories to be taken for screen production, is a story of the Arctic north. A dog, half wolf and half canine, is the link that binds the characters together and develops the stirring situations. In it busy beavers are seen at work, there is a fight between Baree, the half-wolf dog, and an eagle, and numerous other animal episodes. These, it is announced by Vitagraph, will be incorporated in the film story, and President Smith, before he accepted "The Son of Kazan," made sure that a "husky" was at hand for the important role of Baree. The work of rehearsing the dog is already under way, it is declared.

Blackton Goes West to Produce Parker Novel

Will be Third of Series, Under Title of "Wild Youth," and Comes to Screen Following Release of "The World for Sale"

A Representative Scene in "The World for Sale," Which J. Stewart Blackton Produced for Distribution Through Paramount

TWO of the most important announcements made by Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, on his return from the Pacific Coast recently, were that Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, producer for Paramount of "The Judgment House" and "The World for Sale," would go to California about December 3 to produce his third Sir Gilbert Parker picture, "Wild Youth," and that a decision has been reached to release "The World for Sale" in January.

Commodore Blackton, for the new feature, will be surrounded by all the extensive facilities afforded by the Lasky organization, which should enable him to give even more time to the actual work of supervision and provide him as well with greater scope for the realistic staging of what is claimed to be undoubtedly one of the most vital stories of the British novelist. The producer is said to be highly pleased with the prospect because he realizes that it will be an unexampled opportunity to accomplish a masterpiece and achieve his ambition, which is to produce pictures that are the last word in screen entertainment.

It has now been decided that "The World for Sale" will probably be a January Paramount release, and the producer, J. Stuart Blackton, is of the opinion that it will be as thoroughly artistic in every respect as "The Judgment House," which is a current production and is also the work of the British novelist.

"The World for Sale" was completed before the other picture, but was held back, inasmuch as the producer, for several reasons, wished always to be at least two pictures ahead of his releasing schedule; and furthermore, abhorring the idea of haste in making his photoplay adaptation of books that have become known from one end of the world to the other, desired to devote more time to the work.

At the time when he first decided to postpone the release of "The World for Sale," Mr. Blackton said: "My personal affection for Sir Gilbert Parker and my earnest desire to surpass anything I have ever accomplished on the screen before, prompt me to beg the indulgence of the trade. . . . The idea of completing a picture, and immediately rushing it to the laboratory, is abhorrent to me, and I believe much better results can be obtained by devoting the extra time thus gained to welding the entire production into a harmonious whole."

Constance Talmadge Plans to Visit California

Constance Talmadge, whose debut as a Select Pictures star was made in the current release, "Scandal," directed by Charles Giblyn, is planning to leave shortly for California, where some of her future productions will be filmed, it was announced by Select Pictures last week.

Miss Talmadge, following the completion of "Scandal," completed "The Honeymoon," which is scheduled as her next release by Select. After this picture came work on the screen production, "The Runaway," which was to have been called "The Cliffs," as announced previously by Select, but which will be produced under the screen title of "The Studio Girl," it is announced. In this production Miss Talmadge is supported by Earle Fox, leading man; Russell Bassett, Isabel O'Madigan, John Hines, Gertrude Norman and Grace Barton.

Government Helps Universal Spread Education

Will Announce in Official Publications Films Concerning the Department of Agriculture—Shown in Universal Screen Magazine

THE United States Government, supporting its oft repeated assertion that motion pictures are one of the chief necessities, in so far as entertainment and education are concerned, in the United States, will help the Universal Film Corporation spread the doctrine of knowledge throughout the land, it was announced last week by Jack Cohn, manager of the Animated Weekly Department of Universal.

The Government decision comes close on the heels of the contract which Universal recently signed with the Government, whereby the former will gain the exclusive rights of all Government films of an educational nature made by the Department of Agriculture, and to be released through the medium of the Screen Magazine.

There are three chief channels of publicity through which the Government will make announcement of the Universal releases of pictures made in accordance with this contract. One of these is the Official Bulletin, published daily by the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman. The Official Bulletin is furnished without charge to newspapers, to all post offices in the United States, to Government officials, and agencies of public character equipped for the dissemination of official news of the United States Government.

The second channel of publicity, established and maintained by the United States Government through which announcement of Universal's coming educational releases will be made is the Weekly News Letter of the United States Department of Agriculture. This publication is sent regularly to all agricultural newspapers, to all newspapers published in rural communities, to agricultural colleges and colleges having agricultural departments and to societies and associations interested in agricultural matters.

The third channel is the series of mimeograph sheets issued by the various branches of the Department of Agriculture. For instance, while the release illustrating the work of the forest ranger is announced through the Official Bulletin and the Weekly News Letter, it is also especially announced in the mimeograph issue of the Forest Service, and this issue is sent to all publications, associations and private individuals interested in forestry. The same is the case with releases showing the work of other branches of the Department.

"Taken together, these three publications issued by the Government have a combined circulation largely exceeding anything that can be claimed by any newspaper or periodical appearing in this country," said Mr. Cohn.

Gladys Brockwell Celebrates First Year as Star

William Fox, through his general publicity bureau, called attention last week to the fact that Gladys Brockwell is now celebrating the end of her first year in stardom. "Sins of Her Parent" was the production in which she made her debut twelve months ago, and "A Branded Soul," recently released, is the latest picture in which she has been filmed. Between the two are six other features; hence it follows that an average of six and one-half weeks has been required for each picture.

Two New Fox Productions Get Under Way

Virginia Pearson, it was announced last week, has commenced screen work on another William Fox feature, the name of which has not been made known. Walter Law, the heavy of many photoplays, is appearing in the rôle opposite the star. Ethel Hallor also has a principal rôle.

Murdock MacQuarrie, player and director, has been added to the Fox forces for a rôle in Jewel Carmen's first starring photoplay. Others in Miss Carmen's company, it is announced, will be Genevieve Blinn, G. Raymond Nye and Nancy Taswell.

Dave Morris Begins Series of L-Ko Productions

The services of Dave Morris have been transferred, among the other shifts at Universal City, to the general direction of J. G. Blystone, although his first L-Ko was turned out by Craig Hutchinson, who has been directing Universal comedies for some time. Mr. Morris becomes an L-Ko attraction December 19, when "Bullets and Boneheads" will be distributed through Universal Exchanges.

When he left the musical comedy stage, he first worked in Biograph comedies, playing opposite Charley Mack, until Mr. Mack joined Keystone. Then Mr. Morris became principal comedian, also appearing in several "legitimate" roles with Biograph. After two years, Morris likewise became a Keystone comedian, going from there to Kalem, and then changing to Fox. He has been at Universal City, in comedies, for a long time. He will now appear in a series of L-Kos, starting with "Bullets and Boneheads."

New Lois Weber Feature Shows Gold Mining

Lois Weber is busily engaged in the photographing of her third independent production, "The Man Who Dared God," a dramatic portrayal of a strong man's redemption, based upon her own story of the same name. Playing opposite Mildred Harris is William Stowell, who has been leading man for Dorothy Phillips in Bluebirds; while among the other members of the cast may be named Clara Whipple, Alfred Paget, Hayden Jones and Willis Marks.

"The Man Who Dared God" has gold mines, and gold mining as a sort of general background, in developing the story. With her usual thoroughness in matters of detail, Miss Weber took the principals of her company, some thirty strong, to Oatman, Ariz., in order to get an accurate portrayal of this background in its relation to the plot.

The managers of the Great Eastern, one of the largest mines in the United States, were cordial in their welcome, showing the entire party, headed by Miss Weber and Phillips Smaley, her husband and codirector, every process of the work.

Pathe Adds George Proctor to Scenario Staff

George D. Proctor, the scenario writer formerly with Lasky and Triangle, has been added to the Pathe scenario staff, and has already taken up his new work at the Pathe headquarters in New York. The big and growing force of writers is now bending every energy to creating bigger, better stories in line with Pathe's progressive production policy, and George D. Proctor should prove a valuable addition.

Empire All-Star Makes Picture in California

The Empire All-Star Corporation announced last week that it will make its next feature at the American Film Studio in California.

Mrs. Hpmphrey Ward's novel, "Lady Rose's Daughter," will be picturized as Empire All-Star's next production.

Petrova Releases First Picture December 23

"Daughter of Destiny" Is Scheduled to Make Debut at Rialto in New York as Forerunner of Star's Eight Pictures to Come

Madame Petrova Is a Charming Bride in the Wedding Scene of Her First Petrova Picture, "Daughter of Destiny." Thomas Holding Is the Groom

PETROVA PICTURE COMPANY, through its publicity department, last week announced that, in answer to the inquiries from exhibitors and others, the release date of the initial starring subject of Madame Petrova has been set for Sunday, December 23.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first of the eight pictures in which the star will appear during the forthcoming year, will be shown on this date and throughout the entire week at the Rialto theatre, New York, and also in photoplay houses throughout the country.

"Daughter of Destiny," the first picture to be produced under the auspices of the Petrova Picture Company, was finished and ready for showing on the date originally scheduled, but following a conference between the executives of the Petrova organization and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through the offices of which the Petrova productions will be issued, it was deemed advisable to withhold the film until all of the exchanges were in active operation. It was also decided by the producing and releasing factors to have the second Petrova picture entirely completed and its successor in course of production before definitely fixing the release date of the initial presentation.

Inasmuch as the objects outlined above have been completely attained, "Daughter of Destiny" will be given to the first-run theatres in the United States on the date announced. The selection of this date is regarded by the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit as exceedingly appropriate because of the holiday season.

The Polish star has finished her second picture, the title for which has not yet been chosen, and has started on the third of the eight special features which will make up the Petrova Cycle.

Vitagraph Selects Brand Name for Comedies

Series Will Be Called "Vitagraph Comedies," with First Release on December 3—Subjects to Be of One-Reel Length

"VITAGRAPH COMEDIES" is the brand name decided upon for the series of comedies, announcement of which was made recently by Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph company. The first of these new one-reelers, which are expected to be kept on a high plane of humor, will be released on December 3 and will bear the title of "A Family Flivver."

Edward Earle, star of "For France," and Agnes Ayres, who has scored individually in O. Henry pictures and Blue Ribbon features, are to be starred in these comedies. Graham Baker will direct.

President Smith in his announcement of the comedies said: "We feel that in producing these little comedies, most of which will be stories taken from real life, we will fill a long-felt want. We shall continue to make 'Big V' slapstick comedies because the demand for them proves their popularity, but we realize that there is a large proportion of the motion picture going public which is desirous of seeing comedy of more polite form. It is about the same, in comparison, as the difference between the audiences that go to the theatre to see good farces and those that go to burlesque shows or circuses. One element prefers the subtle, neatly developed humor, while the other enjoys the more hilarious type of fun-making.

"'Vitagraph Comedies' will be found as high class as anything in motion pictures on the market to-day, because in story, cast, direction and setting we are devoting the same amount of care and attention to them as we do to our regular Blue Ribbon features and our super-features.

"Before we decided to make these pictures I had a straw vote of exhibitors taken and the result of this canvas proved to us that they were hungering for just this type of entertainment for their patrons."

Dorothy Dalton Likes "Price Mark" Supporting Cast

Dorothy Dalton believes that the supporting cast which Thomas H. Ince gave her for "The Price Mark," her first Paramount picture, is the best she has had since deserting the speaking stage for the screen. Associated with Miss Dalton are Thurston Hall, well known on the legitimate stage; William Conklin, Dorcas Mathews, who has been under the management of Mr. Ince for some time; Adele Farrington, well known on stage and screen, and others.

James W. Gerard Visits Mary Pickford

Ex-ambassador James W. Gerard recently paid Mary Pickford a visit at the Lasky Studio, in California, it was announced last week by the Artcraft department that looks after all happenings of interest and sees that proper publicity is given events in order of their importance. James Neill, it is said, conducted the introductory ceremonies.

June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell Turn the Clock Backward to the Early Days of This Country in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," a World-Picture Brady-Made. Arthur Ashley, as Aaron Burr, and Evelyn Greeley, as Margaret Moncrief, Are Making Love Through the Spindles of the Wheel

World-Brady Select Stars for January Feature

Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Arthur Ashley Included in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," Weller Story

WORLD-PICTURES BRADY-MADE, it was announced last week, will put forward another characteristic star cast when "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" is published in January. The members of this acting company whose names are included in the advertising matter are: Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Arthur Ashley, and the remaining cast, which is quite numerous, contains Pinna Nesbit, Rose Tapley, Lionel Bellmore, George MacQuarrie, Ethelbert Hale and others who are well known.

This picture introduces to the screen, it is announced, the romantic career of Alexander Hamilton, one of the most fascinating personages of the early history of this country. The story, written by Samuel M. Weller, a New York newspaper man, is not similar to the stage play upon the same topic acted by George Arliss for a long run at the Knickerbocker theatre, excepting that both introduce many of the same characters and certain episodes of great national importance appear in each version.

In addition to Hamilton, the film story embraces George Washington, Martha Washington, Aaron Burr, Gen. Israel Putnam, Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, James Reynolds and Mrs. Reynolds.

Carlyle Blackwell has the role of Hamilton, and Arthur Ashley that of Aaron Burr, while June Elvidge is Mrs. Reynolds, and Evelyn Greeley is Margaret Moncrief.

Author Weller, in leading up to the climax of his story, makes the rather volatile sentiments of the beautiful Mrs. Reynolds cling to Hamilton after she is in the arms of Burr, whom she loathes—to the end that she suggests to Hamilton that he challenge Burr and kill him. This provides a plausible "planting" of the duel and the frantic grief which leads the fair and frail Maria to cast herself over the Palisades at the very spot where her dashing lover fell before his rival's pistol.

Accident Holds Up Production of Two Artcraft Films

IT was announced last week that the production of two forthcoming Artcraft release on the West Coast are being held up temporarily as a result of accidents. From the Thomas H. Ince offices comes the news that William S. Hart has again met with an injury in staging a perilous scene. While making an escape from the window of a building which plays a prominent part in "The Bloodhound," the new Hart film, the star was called upon to descend from a window by means of a lariat. During his hurried descent his right hand was caught in a windowsill and badly torn. In addition, one of his fingers was smashed. Hart is resting at present but expects to continue work in the near future. This is the second accident he has had during the past two months.

A telegram from Douglas Fairbanks just received by Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures, also announces the temporary discontinuance of work on the new picture being staged at Grand Canyon, Ariz., due to the fact that Marjorie Daw, leading lady, has broken a leg. The actress was thrown from her horse in a scene for the new photoplay and was immediately rushed to a doctor. Soon after her accident Miss Daw received the news that her mother passed away and her condition immediately took a turn for the worse. Three doctors and a surgeon attended Miss Daw and report that her injury is very serious.

Director Allan Dwan has been compelled to hold up work on this production and the completion of the film will have to await Miss Daw's recovery. This picture marks the debut of the actress in the capacity of leading lady to Douglas Fairbanks.

Frank Keenan Nears Completion of "Loaded Dice"

Frank Keenan has now all but completed what is claimed to be the strongest story in which he has ever appeared, "Loaded Dice," for Pathe, which is expected to prove an artistic and dramatic success. Keenan's part is that of "the man who denied God," and his handling of the role under the direction of Herbert Blache, is said to be an outstanding example of a new art in photodramatic expression. "Loaded Dice" is from the book by Ellary H. Clark, and the scenario is by Gilson Willets.

Titling of "Madam Who" Shows Another Step Forward

One of the striking features of Bessie Barriscale's first Paralta play, "Madam Who," which will be released the middle of December, is said to be the manner in which the titling of the production has been handled. Illustrated titles were found to be a great improvement over those which were displayed in cold type, but Paralta Plays claim to have taken another step forward in the development of an artistic effect that holds the interest at the same time giving the audience the message that can be interpreted only through reading titles.

The new titles, which will be used for the first time in the production of "Madam Who," are animated scenes built in sunch a manner that the wording appears to stand out in mid air. In one instance, where the title is descriptive of a battle which is supposed to be raging, a shell bursts, obliterating the entire title and showing, just for an instant, a field of battle with the cannon smoking. This is the only element of battle that is really shown in the play, as the story is not that of the trench and conflict, but of the secret service.

Mary MacLane Finishes Production for Essanay

Mary MacLane, whom Essanay enticed into motion picture acting, has completed her seven-reel vampire photoplay, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

Coming to the Essanay studios without ever having thought of screen acting, the author of "I, Mary MacLane," has proven, it is said, that the genius who drives the pen can often illustrate the thoughts it transcribes.

Miss MacLane herself, it is claimed, was surprised at her interpretation of a vampire. In reviewing the picture at the studio projection room, her comments were many and interesting.

Miss MacLane wrote the script out of a writer's fund of knowledge regarding the world of men and women. This knowledge, combined with her dramatic talent, has produced a cinema classic that will probably rival the popularity of her strange book.

Don Meaney Handles Casts for Thomas H. Ince

Don Meaney, who for some time past has conducted a players' agency in Los Angeles, and who has been given credit for the "discovery" of more than one star, has closed his office and has signed an agreement with Thomas H. Ince whereby he becomes the latter's casting director, effective December 1.

Mr. Meaney has been identified with the Motion picture industry for eight years, entering the business as advertising manager for Essanay. He was later assistant general manager at Universal City.

Helen Gibson Surpasses Herself in Her New Series

Helen Gibson, it is claimed, performs one of the nerviest feats she has ever attempted in "The Deserted Engine," the current General Film release in the new "Daughter of Daring" series. Noticing that the fast mail speeds by her station with the engine deserted, Helen takes a short cut across country to a nearby trestle and leaps from a barrel to the platform of the last coach. She then prevents a collision between the mail train and a special. This release completes the current "Daughter of Daring" series.

Triangle Directors Wait for Stories

Triangle announced last week that Thomas N. Heffron, who directed William Desmond's last picture, "The Sudden Gentleman"; Jack Conway, whose last Triangle offering was a seven-reel feature, 'Because of a Woman," and Gilbert P. Hamilton, who handled the megaphone on "The Maternal Spark," are waiting for stories and expect to begin work within a few days.

Freuler's Idea for New Coin Gains Prestige

Need for It Is Also Evidenced in Other Industries Than the Motion Picture—Many Advantages Apparent in Plan

THE idea for a new fifteen-cent coin, which was organized by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, has gained in prestige recently and has been greatly accentuated by conditions caused by the war, with its attendant taxes and other little intricacies. Mr. Freuler's apparently wise contention that a new coin is needed has not only spread within the realm of the motion picture, but has likewise branched to other industries and big businesses, with the result that manufacturers and merchants have added their names to the list of supporters of the movement.

"The plan to coin a fifteen-cent piece," said Mr. Freuler, "does not involve the abolition of any coin now in use, but the introduction of a new coin between the dime and the quarter in size. It would probably be a silver coin.

"There is a widespread demand for a fifteen-cent piece due in a measure to the rise in prices which has established a fifteen-cent piece for innumerable small articles of commerce.

"For instance, in the department stores a huge volume of fifteen-cent articles is handled, the sale of which would be facilitated and perhaps heavily increased by addition of a convenient coin to the currency. In the cigar trade, the need for a new coin is being particularly felt, but in no avenue of business is the necessity greater than in the motion picture field, since fifteen cents is rapidly becoming the standard admission price.

"The psychology of salesmanship recognizes as a handicap to trade the necessity for changing a quarter to pay a fifteen-cent bill, or for searching a handful of small change to extract the necessary nickle and dime. In many instances the prospective purchaser, unable promptly to lay hands on necessary change, passes on without making a contemplated purchase."

Josephine Whittell Makes Debut in "Alimony"

Feature Is Expected to Be Released by First National Circuit Early in December—Lois Wilson and George Fisher Support

JOSEPHINE WHITTELL, formerly on the musical comedy stage, will make her debut in "Alimony," the divorce drama described as sensational, to be released early in December by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, it was announced by the latter organization last week. Miss Whittell has the role of Mrs. Bernice Flint, who, with the other two characters playing the supporting leads, interpreted my Lois Wilson and George Fisher, forms the triangle of the play.

Miss Whittell went on the stage, it is said, because it sent for her. Born in Phoenix, Arizona, and educated in a San Francisco private school, she realized at the age of fifteen years that she possessed a good voice. This inspired her parents to send her to Europe to study. She remained in Paris for two years, studying voice culture.

Upon her return to America in 1912 Miss Whittell met and was married to Robert Warwick, the actor. Shortly after this George Cohan made her his leading woman in "The Little Millionaire," at the Cohan theatre. Her successive appearances were with Lina Abarbenell in "Miss Princess"; the prima donna, in Victor Herbert's operetta, "The Madcap Duchess"; in Victor Herbert's "The Only Girl," and with Donald Brian and Julia Sanderson, in "Sybil."

Miss Whittell visited Santa Barbara and Hollywood and evinced a keen interest in moving picture work, with the result that when offered a part in "Alimony" by Director Flynn she readily consented.

Eddie Polo Barely Misses Death in Universal Serial

THE Universal publicity department, in admitting that publicity stories born of imagination are sometimes given more credence than the actual truth, offers the experience of Eddie Polo, while filming a scene in Universal's new serial, "The Bull's-Eye," as one more proof that truth is stranger than fiction.

Polo's fall down the steep side of an embankment, with horse and rider rolling to the bottom, is said to clearly show in one of the episodes of "The Bull's-Eye" and constitutes a "thrill" that was not originally devised by Director James W. Horne. The scene was enacted on location in southern California while a troop of cowboys was riding in pursuit of Polo in an effort he was making to escape a band of supposed raiders who thirsted for his blood.

When the brink of a cliff accidentally crumbled and gave way, horse and rider plunged, according to Universal, sixty feet down the steep, rocky declivity and landed in a heap at the bottom. Other members of the company who witnessed the fall rushed to the spot, expecting to find the leading man, killed, or at least fatally injured, but to their surprise he dug himself out of the avalanche of loose earth that had followed him down the cliffside and smilingly began a personal inspection to invoice the numerous minor dents and scratches he had received.

Fortunately it was found that neither man nor mount was seriously injured.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Universal Calls Public Into "Mystery Ship"

Will Present Liberty Bonds and Thrift Stamps for Ideas with Which to Form Last Episode of Wilson-Gerber Serial

THE final episode of "The Mystery Ship," it was announced by Universal last week, will be shaped by means of a co-operation plan which Universal has decided upon, and by which the boys and girls of the country will be called in to supply best endings for the serial. For these suggestions and ideas Universal will award Liberty Bonds, War Certificates and Thrift Stamps to the total of $1,000. There will be a total of 438 awards available to juveniles fifteen years of age and under, ranging from $2 thrift stamps to $100 Liberty Bonds.

The Universal serial features Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, who have already started upon a routine of sixteen adventures of two reels each, the final one of which is expected to come from the public.

Universal will put the plan into effect December 1, according to announcements, and will close it at noon on March 30 next.

Judgment of the "best ending" suggestions and the selection of those deserving awards will be made by a committee of four newspaper writers—Bide Dudley, New York World; Louella Parsons, Chicago Herald; Harriette Underhill, New York Tribune, and T. E. Oliphant, New York Mail. "That which has the highest degree of excellence" is the definition of the word "best," which is to govern the judges in their decisions.

It shall not be necessary of a participant to witness the progress of the serial upon the screen. The story will be written and distributed in the sequence displayed in the various episodes, and entrants for awards may base their "best ending" upon the ideas they gain from perusal of the written story. No entrance fee whatever shall be required; no special blanks for writing the "best ending" upon are necessary. The only restrictions are embodied in the condition that not more than 300 words shall be employed in submitting the idea.

Every requirement exacted by the Post Office Department in opening the mails to the idea have been met, it is said, and the competition has been sanctioned by the department officials in Washington. There will be a first award of $100; second, $50, and a third of $20, first and second to be paid in Liberty Bonds, and the third in War Certificates. Then there will be 20 awards of $5 each, running from fourth to twenty-third; and the next 415 awards to consist of $2 War Certificates or Thrift Stamps that will be placed upon the market by the Treasury Department within a very short time.

It is believed by Universal that the interest this plan will awaken may be properly considered an educational adjunct to exploiting and showing the serial. That the children will take a personal interest in the story as it advances, either in printed form or upon the screen, will vastly enhance the exhibiting value of "The Mystery Ship" is unquestioned. It is fair to assume that the boys and girls will content themselves with simply reading about the adventures of the hero and heroine—they are sure to see for themselves just how the exciting episodes are worked out upon the screen.

General Shows O. Henry Pictures to Literary People

A REPRESENTATIVE gathering of New York literary people attended a private showing of O. Henry pictures, released to date, on the evening of November 14, at Wurlitzer Hall, under the auspices of General Film Company and Doubleday, Page and Company.

Relatives of William Sidney Porter, as O. Henry was known in private life, intimate friends, business acquaintances, newspaper and magazine editors, literary patrons, artists and some of the screen stars and directors who have helped produce the O. Henry pictures, were represented in the unique assemblage.

Probably the greatest interest was caused by the showing of four favorite stories in screen form. "The Defeat of the City," a four-reel subject, featuring Agnes Ayres and J. Frank Glendon, under the direction of Thomas R. Mills, was the main offering of the O. Henry evening. Other pictures screened were: "A Service of Love," featuring Mildred Manning and Walter McGrail, directed by John Robertson; "The Guilty Party," featuring Patsy DeForest and Frank Brule, directed by Thomas R. Mills, and "The Lonesome Road," featuring S. R. Jennings, Chet Ryan and Francis Parks, directed by David Smith. An intimate touch was given the evening's program by special slides of newly discovered portraits and scenes from the life of O. Henry.

Mildred Manning, J. Frank Glendon, Agnes Ayres, Patsy DeForest, Carlton King, of the stars who have appeared in O. Henry pictures, and John Robertson, a director of one of the earlier O. Henry subjects, attended the showing. Evidence that the screen versions of the O. Henry stories measured up to the high standard of the original stories was found in the unstinted applause of the audience.

Jewel Reports Good Business on Its Productions

Jewel Productions, Inc., last week reported that it is experiencing business of the best kind on Jewel productions, which include "Come Through," "Pay Me," "Sirens of the Sea," "The Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent" and "The Price of a Good Time."

Officials of the Jewel organization have expressed themselves as well pleased with the praise from exhibitors and public over the features in question. Two features to be added to the list shortly are "K," a Lois Weber production, and "The Grand Passion," in which Dorothy Phillips stars.

"Hidden Hand" Makes Its First Appearance on Screen

"The Hidden Hand," the latest Pathe and International serial, was shown for the first time last Sunday, Nov. 25. Doris Kenyon, the star of the production, brought into being a character conception in a manner that will do doubt increase her popularity.

The first episode of this serial is called "The Gauntlet of Death," and tells of a prophecy made to the Emperor of a European country, by Rascon, the Mad Monk. "This day a girl is born in this court, who will be the most beautiful woman in the world, and will bring about the madness of the Emperor and the destruction of the Empire before her eighteenth birthday," the prophecy ran, and pointed at the daughter of the Grand Duke. Frightened, the Emperor makes an agreement with Judson Whitney, an American millionaire, for the child's bringing up, her identity to remain a secret. The picture opens in the Whitney home, eighteen years later. There are two girls in the household, Whitney's daughter, Doris, and Verda Crane, his ward.

Miss Kenyon is supported by Sheldon Lewis, "heavy" of many serials; Arline Pretty, who played the part of the Princess in "The Scarlet Kingdom," and Mahlon Hamilton, leading man.

"The Hired Man" Serves Charles Ray as New Subject

Following the release of "His Mother's Boy" in which Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, in Paramount pictures, will be presented during December, "The Hired Man" is announced as the third photoplay in which he will be featured.

"The Hired Man" is by Julian Josephson. It is a story of New England life and includes among other features a typical country fair, the setting for which is said to be one of the most effective ever employed for a motion picture. Ray, in this play, will have a part that, while differing considerably from his previous rôles, is said to possess these qualities which render it exactly suited to the actor's talents.

Cincinnati Thanks Marguerite Clark for Presence

In a set of resolutions adopted recently, the City Council of Cincinnati thanked Marguerite Clark, the Paramount star, for her work in that city on behalf of the Liberty Loan, and the unusual example of appreciation was forwarded to the diminutive star in New York last week, just about seven days prior to the presentation of her third sub-deb story, "Bab's Matinee Idol."

Regarding the latest, and last, sub-deb feature, which was released November 26 and which found ready acceptance and hearty approval at the hands of the critical picture audiences, it is not amiss to remark that "Bab's Matinee Idol" was directed by J. Searle Dawley and photographed by Lyman Broening. Director Dawley, at latest reports from Famous Players-Lasky, was completing "The Seven Swans," Miss Clark's Christmas photoplay.

Wolbert Completes Shipman-Whitman Vitagraph Feature

William Wolbert has completed the filming of "The Eight Great Grand Parent," featuring Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, for Vitagraph and is preparing for his next production, to be "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger." Hamlin Garland, the author of "The Gray Horse Troop" also produced by this director, wrote the story and Mr. Wolbert expresses himself as delighted with it.

Many of the exterior scenes will be photographed in Arizona, and as this story is a Western, this will include the largest part of the picture. Mr. Wolbert will not make it a West of the stereotype class, but he will direct his scenes and have his settings and costuming so that the atmosphere will be without exaggeration, and the action that of real people—logical, sane and withal, thrilling.

Atmosphere and Surprise Combine in O. Henry Story

Genuine Western atmosphere and O. Henry surprise twist are said to make "One Dollar's Worth," the current Broadway Star Feature release, one of the most attractive two-reel O. Henry pictures offered to date. Chet Ryan, Frances Parks and W. L. Rodgers, who have been appearing in most of the Western O. Henry stories, do some good work in this General Film picture.

A lead dollar, taken from a young Mexican counterfeiter, plays a most important part in the happy ending in the picture, saving the life of one couple and bringing happiness and freedom for two other lovers. Nancy Derwent, the judge's daughter, pleaded so energetically for the release of the counterfeiter that Bob Littlefield, the district attorney, pocketed "Exhibit A" for further consideration of the case. That afternoon the two went grouse hunting and were caught in the coils of "The Rattlesnake," a Mexican, just released from prison. How "Exhibit A" furnishes the climax is told as only O. Henry can tell it.

Merely a Little Domestic Difficulty. The Scene Occurs in Triangle's "The Sudden Gentleman," with William Desmond as Star

Triangle Begins Five Features at Culver City

Companies in Action Both Night and Day to Keep Ahead of Production Schedule Recently Set—New Faces in "Mr. Butterfly"

FIVE new productions, including what are described as some of the most elaborate and unusual things yet attempted at the Triangle's Culver City studio, have been commenced during the past week, and companies are working both night and day to keep ahead of the strenuous production schedule recently set.

Among the new subjects are offerings from the pens of some of the best known magazine writers, as well as a play by one of the Triangle's staff authors. The research department, under Elsa Lopez, and the costume department, directed by J. S. Fishenden, have been working overtime preparing data and costumes for these new subjects, which include a Japanese story.

Two directors, Walter Edwards and Jack Dillon, have completed pictures in the past week, the former having begun work on another screen feature. Three directors, Jack Conway, Gilbert P. Hamilton and Thomas N. Heffron, are either preparing or waiting for stories.

With several faces new to Triangle included in the cast, and costumes costing several thousand dollars, Director E. Mason Hopper has begun work on a new Triangle story, the working title of which is "Mr. Butterfly." The story, written by E. Magnus Ingleton, is a reversal of the situation and characters in the story, "Madame Butterfly," by John Luther Long. Thomas Kurihara, in the role of the father, and Jack Abbe, as the disappointed lover, are Japanese actors who have been engaged for leading parts in this new Triangle picture. Teddy Sampson has also been engaged by Casting Director Arthur Hoyt, who declares she will make a winsome Japanese girl.

Director Hopper is working on the exteriors now and will begin shooting the first of the week at San Diego, where the principals will work in a Japanese garden. On his return from San Diego, Hopper will begin work on the interiors and the Triangle experts are now busy turning out the "props" for these settings.

George Scarborough Writes War Play for William Fox

George Scarsborough, the author of the dramas "The Lure" and "At Bay," has written a war play that William Fox is to produce. Mr. Scarsborough, who has been lawyer, reporter, detective and dramatist, is called by members of the United States Secret Service, with which he was long associated, "the man who met the Kaiser."

Mr. Scarsborough recently became affiliated with the Fox scenario staff and has written a number of photoplays.

Drafted Film Folk Return to Triangle Jobs

Word was received last week at the Triangle West Coast Studios from the training camp at American Lake that Ray Griffith, former Triangle-Keystone comedian, who was called to the colors three weeks ago, was rejected on account of his near loss of speech, and has started back to the Triangle--Keystone lot.

Roy Del Ruth, of the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff, who was drafted and departed for the training camp at American Lake, three weeks ago, has been rejected on account of defective eyesight, and is back on his civilian job again. MacNamara has occupied the same office with Del Ruth for so long that they have become inseparable friends, and he and the other members of the Keystone "brains department" was overjoyed at his colleague's return.

Vitagraph Engages Hedda Nova for Features

President Albert E. Smith Plans to Star Her in Productions Under His Personal Direction—Scored in "Bar Sinister"

Hedda Nova (Vitagraph)

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, has announced that he has engaged Mlle. Hedda Nova, the young Russian actress, on a long term contract and will star her in super-features to be produced under his personal direction. Hedda Nova created a mild sensation in the role of Belle Davis, the supposed negress, in "The Bar Sinister."

The announcement of the acquisition by Vitagraph of this young star is one of the most important that has come from the Blue Ribbon company's president in many months, and equally important is his statement that he will assume personal direction of her features. Mr. Smith, pioneer of the motion picture industry and inventor of many of the photographic devices that have modernized picture-making, has always given close personal supervision to every product of his company, and in many cases he has personally directed important features. However, the announcement that he is to get into directorial harness regularly carries special significance to exhibitors and the public, because it means that entire production from script and cast to final release will be the work of one of the recognized creators of cinema art.

In selecting Hedda Nova for special Blue Ribbon features exclusively, Mr. Smith seems to be inaugurating a new policy in this branch of Vitagraph productions. In the super-features hitherto made by the company he has employed stars of the regular program, using at various times Anita Stewart in "The Girl Philippa," Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in J. Stuart Blackton's production "Womanhood," and likewise in "Within the Law"; William Duncan and Nell Shipman in "God's Country and the Woman," etc.

It is understood that Hedda Nova will appear in a number of features each year, with a splendid company, the subjects to be taken from big stories by noted authors. The first feature has already been chosen and Mr. Smith and Mlle. Nova began conferences on the script the latter part of last week. It is stated that the title of the picture and the full cast to be used in it will be announced shortly.

Artcraft Presents Elsie Ferguson in "Song of Songs"

IT was announced last week that the motion picture rights to Edward Sheldon's play, "The Song of Songs," have been acquired by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for Artcraft release.

"Miss Elsie Ferguson will be the star in 'The Song of Songs,'" said President Greene of Artcraft, "which is a powerful sociological drama. The play was produced three years ago by A. H. Woods, who thought so well of it that he engaged a star cast that made Broadway gasp, including Maud Allan, Irene Fenwick, John Mason, Dorothy Donnelly, Thomas A. Wise, Wm. Stone, Florence Winant, Ernest Glendinning, Eleanor Seybolt, Helen Rapport, H. C. Lewis, Josephine Robbins, A. Romaine Callender, Claus Bogel, John Coss, Cyril Kneightley, Francis M. Verdi, Rita Otway and Grace Wall.

"The play opened at the Eltinge theatre, and proved a veritable sensation, though the limitations of the stage could not do justice to this virile and broad subject. The adaptation for the screen has been made by Charles Maigne.

"Miss Ferguson has completed her work in 'Rose of the World,' which is another strong story in which her emotional acting will no doubt cause much comment, and has already started work on 'The Song of Songs.' The play is intensely human, and in film form should prove much more popular than the stage presentation. Motion pictures are the great popular amusement and entertainment of the masses, and in Lily Kardos, the daughter of a poor musician, which is the part played by Miss Ferguson, they will see a character who begins life's battle in the same manner as millions of girls.

Domestic Flavor Permeates Mutual Stars' Subjects

There appears to be a strong domestic flavor to the present activities of Edna Goodrich, Ann Murdock and Olive Tell, Mutual's triumvirate of stars.

Miss Goodrich is engaged in the production of Hamilton Smith's play, "Her Second Husband," Olive Tell has just completed "Her Sister" and Ann Murdock is at work on "My Wife."

"Man Without a Country" Gets Big Money in Week

"The Man Without a Country," which Jewel Productions announces, is backed by every patriotic organization in the country, is said to be attracting so much attention that large box office receipts and pleased patrons form the subject of almost every letter that pours into the central office of the company.

At the Strand theatre in Minneapolis the attraction is said to have played to $4,004.15 gross in one week. Jewel announced last week that Manager Charles Branham, of the Strand, concluded his letter with "thanks for the splendid co-operation given by the Jewel staff."

Metro Engages Wheeler Oakman for Storey Subject

Wheeler Oakman, the well-known leading man, was engaged this week by B. A. Rolfe to appear opposite Edith Storey in her forthcoming Metro wonder play, "Revenge," from the scenario by H. P. Keeler.

Mr. Oakman had the leading role opposite Mae Murray in her recent picture, "Princess Virtue." He has lately been identified with several of the West Coast producing organizations.

L'Estrange Appears with Emily Stevens in "Daybreak"

Julian L'Estrange, it was announced last week by Metro, is appearing in the leading male role in support of Emily Stevens in the Metro picturization of "Daybreak," by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. Albert Capellani, who adapted the story for the screen, is directing.

Julian L'Estrange, Leading Man with Emily Stevens in Metro's "Daybreak"

In motion pictures, Julian L'Estrange has been leading man for Pauline Frederick in the Famous Players' production, "Zara," "Sold" and "Bella Donna." He was co-starred with Katherine Kaelred in Pathe's "The Girl With the Green Eyes."

New Hart Pictures Grow in Demand Through Re-Issues

The Artcraft Pictures Corporation last week asserted that as a result of the abundance of William S. Hart re-issues on the market the new Thomas H. Ince productions starring this actor and released by Artcraft are now in much greater demand than every before. Everywhere throughout the country Hart pictures are now being shown, bringing about a wave of popularity for the well-known delineator of Western characters. The demand for new Hart subjects by photoplay patrons has caused no little competition among exhibitors for bookings on "The Narrow Trail" and "The Silent Man," the first and second Hart-Ince films to be released by Artcraft.

In speaking about the bookings on Hart-Ince pictures, Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures, said: "From every exchange in the country we are receiving enthusiastic reports on the manner in which requests for bookings on William S. Hart pictures are pouring in. Houses that ordinarily run pictures in one and two day bookings are requesting extra runs, and the rebookings on 'The Narrow Trail' far exceed our expectations."

Lockwood Completes Interiors for "Avenging Trail"

Harold Lockwood is now well under way with the production of his forthcoming Metro wonderplay of his "The Avenging Trail," a Northern woods story adapted by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo from Henry Oyen's novel, "Gaston Olaf."

The photographing of the interior scenes has been completed, and the star with Director Francis Ford and a company of over twenty is near N. Conway, N. H., putting on exterior scenes.

"The Avenging Trail" is set in a lumber camp of the North. It is a drama of love and adventure and provides Harold Lockwood with the most powerful vehicle of his career.

American Selects Cast of Second Fischer Play

The complete cast of the American-Mutual production entitled "Molly Go Get 'Em," has been selected. This is the second Fischer feature, in which Miss Fischer will have, it is said, a widely different role from any that she has yet done. True Boardman has been engaged by the American Film Company for a principal role. Emma Kluge has a prominent part and others in the cast are Hal Clements, Margaret Allen and Alfred Ferguson. Jack Mower will play opposite Miss Fischer, who as Molly Allison, a mischievous girl, manages to gather a remarkable amount of fun in life at the expense of a long-suffering family. Lloyd Ingraham will direct it. Mr. Ingraham also directed Miss Fischer's first picture, under the working title of "A Daughter of Joan," but which will be released under "Miss Jackie, the Army Girl." Beatrice Van wrote the story of "Mollie Go Get 'Em," and Elizabeth Mahoney adapted it for the screen.

Paralta Gets Good Notices on Kerrigan Film

Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles Shows "A Man's Man" to Capacity Audiences—Critic Reviews the Feature Favorably

Lois Wilson, with J. Warren Kerrigan in His First Paralta Play, "A Man's Man"

PARALTA PLAYS, INC., announced last week that it has received congratulatory notices in reference to "A Man's Man," which, if there is any doubt in the mind of exhibitors as to the merits of the production, should set all minds at rest.

"A Man's Man," with J. Warren Kerrigan as the star, had a prerelease booking a short time ago at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, where the Paralta Studios are also located. This theatre has a seating capacity of over 3,000. During the entire week the production played to capacity audiences and on the day of the final performance Mr. Clune states that he was compelled to turn away more people than the theatre would hold. In a letter addressed to the New York offices of Paralta Plays, Mr. Clune writes, in part, as follows: "Clune's Auditorium, having had the premier presentation of the world's greatest pictures, such as 'The Clansman' or 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Ramona,' 'The Eyes of the World,' etc., we are particularly gratified that 'A Man's Man' should have approximated the business of those pictures." It is especially interesting that this first Paralta Play, "A Man's Man," while playing at the regular scale of prices, should approximate the business of larger productions.

In the review of the picture, written by the dramatic critic of the Los Angeles Express, it states that "if the initial offering of Paralta Plays, Inc., one of the newest members of the motion picture colony in Hollywood, is to be taken as a criterion, the show-going public will be justified to any future Paralta output. Yesterday's audiences at the auditorium were practically unanimous in pronouncing this picturization of Peter B. Kyne's dashing story of South American intrigues and revolution one of the corking films of the past two years. It has magnificent sets that were apparently built with no regard for expense. 'A Man's Man' looks like a sure-fire hit. Its action is swift, its story convincing and graphic, its interest cumulative and its quality of acting better than the average. The acting is invariably good and the types well chosen. Mr. Kerrigan is fitted with a role obviously to his liking and he makes an attractive hero, with his personality and screen experience standing out at all times."

Metro and Frohman Merge in Barrymore Films

Star Expects to Begin Season of New Plays Following Completion of Metro Series—Will Read Scripts in Leisure Moments

ETHEL BARRYMORE, according to plans, will have the co-operation of Metro Pictures Corporation, and the Charles Frohman estate in making out the program of her activities for the year.

Miss Barrymore is now completing her latest series of Metro productions with a screen version of the Kellett Chambers comedy, "An American Widow," and at an early date will begin her season of new plays and dramatic revivals of the speaking stage, in accordance with the plan arranged for in advance by the late Charles Frohman. One of the most important features of this program will be Miss Barrymore's creation of the leading role in the new version of "Camille" adapted by Edward N. Sheldon, not from the old stage productions, but from the book itself by Dumas.

The star's screen career, however, will not be forgotten during the development of this program, for in her leisure hours during the daytime at her home in Mamaroneck, Miss Barrymore will read manuscripts of new screen productions, and pass on their merits, deciding upon the program of feature motion pictures to follow. One activity is thus made the relaxation from one and the preparation for the next. Miss Barrymore's list of screen appearances for the coming year will include stories by American novelists and scenario writers, and some of the most notable directors in the screen world will prepare these stories for public presentation.

Some time ago it was announced that Miss Barrymore had permanently given up the stage for the screen, and she began a long series of feature productions under the management of Metro, the only motion picture company with which she has ever been associated. Later this program was varied by the appearance of the star in a revival of Barrie's one-act play, "The Twelve-Pound Look," the leading role in which Miss Barrymore created in this country, although she did not interrupt her screen work for the purpose.

Pathe Plays Prove Their Value to Exhibitors

Fannie Ward in "Innocent" Is Expected to Surpass Other Pictures She Has Made—Seven Studios Used in Production

Fannie Ward Is in the Midst of Production Work for Her First Pathe Play, On the Coast

REPORTS from all sections of the country tabulated in a statement from Pathe indicate that the new Pathe plays are looked upon as a big, important feature proposition by leading exhibitors.

"The Pathe plays now booking are getting unusually high rentals because they are showing that their drawing power makes them profitable for the showman," said an official in this connection, "and we are literally deluged with requests for particulars concerning the others to come. It is clear that the Pathe plays are going over and that the pictures on the way will prove the equal of any on the market at the present time. 'Box-office value and drawing power' is our aim, dictated by long experience.

"Such producing facilities as we have in our seven studios assure artistry in photography, lighting, setting, etc., and these Pathe plays will disclose new achievements along these lines, but a hit depends mostly on story and acting, and the following announcement discloses what we are accomplishing in this regard."

Probably the biggest of the big things Pathe has in course of production is "Innocent," with Fannie Ward starred. This is considered a very valuable theatrical property, deserving big handling.

This picture gives Fannie Ward, it is said, the best part since her triumph in the title role of "The Cheat" and is expected to prove an even bigger success because "Innocent" is a play which was originally accepted by one of the shrewdest judges of box-office values in America, A. H. Woods, and it is now being produced at the Astra-Pathe Studios by George Fitzmaurice.

Bessie Love is at work on "Spring of the Year," from Henry Kitchell Webster's "The Painted Scene," and scenarioized by Agnes C. Johnston, author of some of the biggest comedy-drama hits of the past year. This production is under the direction of Madame Alice Blache. It is looked upon as Bessie Love's best vehicle to date.

Pauline Frederick Stars in Allegorical Play by Hobart

PARAMOUNT, in an announcement last week, intimated that a complete departure from Pauline Frederick's usual style of photoplay will be found in the forthcoming production of "Jealousy," a new allegorical drama written by George V. Hobart, author of "Experience," in which the Paramount star will have the title role.

No production of recent months, it is said, offers greater opportunity, not alone for exceptional dramatic action, but for striking settings, startling photographic effects and elaborate production.

According to Paramount, the screen affords a field for the depiction of a story of this character of far greater scope than the limited confines of the stage provide. In this production the ingenious use of every new and, in many cases, unprecedented photographic novelties are expected to render it exceptionally interesting. In the preparation of settings, the invention of the scenic artists at the studio has been taxed to its utmost. For example, there is shown "The House of Heavy Hours," a bizarre boudoir, with decorations indescribably weird and at the same time fascinating. As a contrast will be shown the "Garden of Delight" where exquisite examples of scenic investiture are said to be employed. The characters will embrace various emotions of the human mind as well as such industries as commerce and finance.

The date of release has not yet been announced, but it will be, no doubt, some time after the holidays. The production has been directed by Robert G. Vignola and Ned Van Buren is responsible for the camera work.

Director Walsh Gets Boosts in Daily Newspapers

In an announcement last week the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation suggested that nothing can be taken as a better index of R. A. Walsh's popularity with the public than comments in the daily press upon the announcement that he has joined the Goldwyn forces.

As an example, Goldwyn quoted from a recent issue of a Denver paper as follows: "Now we may expect still other new types of productions from the versatile Goldwyn organization—dramas of great power; things dynamic and chock full of manstuff and action."

A Salt Lake City paper remarked, Goldwyn announced, that "R. A. Walsh is a director of tremendous force. He is a master of the action-drama and his screen children have a certain sweep and possess a certain dramatic impetus that are not found in pictures made by anyone else."

Goldwyn Changes Plans for Mabel Normand Films

According to latest developments in the Goldwyn camp, Mabel Normand is quite likely to find her second Goldwyn picture, recently begun under the direction of George Loane Tucker, the first of her releases under the Goldwyn banner.

As previously announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Miss Normand's first Goldwyn picture, "Joan of Plattsburg," has been shelved immediately following its completion because, according to Goldwyn, it contains material of a military character that should not be flashed on the screen at this time.

It is said that even before Goldwn had "Joan of Plattsburg" in completed form Miss Normand was working with Mr. Tucker in her next picture, which is claimed to be a most unusual one. Nothing concerning its nature has emanated from the Goldwyn offices, not even the title.

World-Brady Names Next Kitty Gordon Picture

"Diamonds and Pearls" is announced as the name of the next Kitty Gordon contribution to World-Pictures Brady-Made. This photoplay was formerly titled "The Hour Glass." As a fact, she was a lovely Southern girl whose impoverished planter father was a hard, overbearing citizen and would not let her participate in the innocent frivolities of maidenhood. So that when he finally became sufficiently considerate to die he left her penniless and yearning for a glittering life. She marries a rich man, hits up too fast for him, and nearly ruins her own life before a very trying lesson causes her to pull up.

Mae Murray Begins Her Third Bluebird Production

Mae Murray, it was announced this week has started her third Bluebird photoplay. "The Eternal Columbine" is the title, and Robert Leonard, under whose direction "The Princess Virtue" and "Face Value" were filmed, is staging the production. The story is by H. Sheridan Bickers, known in England as a former dramatic critic of prominence, who has been engaged especially to write for Miss Murray.

In "The Eternal Columbine" devotees of the stage, Bluebird insists that those who failed to see any of her Broadway performances, will have a chance to realize how fully Miss Murray is entitled to her fame as a dancer, for she appears as a down-to-date Columbine and several of the dances which won the acclaim of theatre audiences are executed for the camera.

The production includes a short prologue founded upon the romantic tragedy of Pierrette and her suitors, Pierrot and Harlequin. This incursion into the realm of classic pantomime marks a new advance, it is claimed, in the art of the photoplay. Kenneth Harlan, who has been featured in several recent Bluebird productions, will appear opposite Miss Murray and Albert Roscoe will play the heavy role.

Paramount-Artcraft Publications Merged in One

The two weekly publications issued by Paramount Pictures Corporation and Artcraft Pictures Corporation, called Paramount Progress and Artcraft Advance, have been merged into one magazine and will appear weekly hereafter under the name of Progress—Advance, it was announced by Famous Players-Lasky last week.

According to plans, the new publication will number twenty pages, and will pursue the same policy as was characteristic of the house organs in the past.

B. P. Fineman, editor of Paramount Progress, has been appointed editor of Progress—Advance, and Charles Kenmore Ulrich has been named as associate editor.

Cohan Permits Use of "Over There" Song with Picture

George M. Cohan, who extended to Charles Richman permission to use the title of his song, "Over There" as the title of the six-part photodrama which is being distributed by Select Pictures Corporation, has granted permission, it was announced by Select last week, for the use of the song as the musical theme accompanying the presentation of the screen production.

James Kirkwood, who directed the feature, maneuvered so that his co-stars, Anna Q. Nilsson and Charles Richman, figured prominently in many scenes in which New York streets provided backgrounds. The setting of "Over There" is almost entirely in New York and vicinity.

Metro Uses Old New York Theatre for Scenes

The old Garden theatre, at Twenty-seventh street and Madison avenue, New York, the scene of many stage successes of a decade ago, was used recently for the staging of scenes in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "An American Widow," under the direction of Frank Reicher.

This story called for scenes showing the premiere of a comedy success on the stage with a capacity first night audience, and the presence of the author and his wife in a lower box. Scenes were also taken of a panic of the audience at the supposed call of "fire." For the photographing of these various scenes in the theatre a score of high powered studio lights were installed by Frank Detering, Metro Electrical Director, and his staff.

Frank Packard Joins Goldwyn Literary Forces

To the long list of writers who have furnished the literary material for Goldwyn Pictures has been added Frank Packard, whose novel, "The Beloved Traitor," is now being filmed with Mae Marsh as the star. He thus takes his place beside Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn, Irvin S. Cobb, Roi Cooper Megrue, Basil King, Porter Emerson Browne, Edward Childs Carpenter and Anatole France in the motion picture ranks of Goldwyn.

Theodore C. Dietrich, President of the Newly Formed De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and His First Star, Doris Kenyon, Who Will Head Her Own Company

Deitrich Announces Formation of New Company

Will Be Known as De Luxe Pictures, Inc., and Plans to Star Doris Kenyon in Features—Production Starts in February

THEODORE C. DEITRICH, who retired last week as advertising and publicity director of the International Film Service Company, Inc., has announced the formation of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., a $200,000 concern, which will produce high-class feature photoplays with Doris Kenyon as the star. Miss Kenyon is at present with Pathe, starring in the new serial, "The Hidden Hand." She will sever her connection with Pathe, it is said, about the first of the year, upon the completion of the serial.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the new company, Mr. Deitrich was elected president and general manager; William L. Chilvers, vice-president and secretary, and Edward V. Goerz, treasurer. The board of directors consists of the officers and D. M. Kenyon, of this city, and Assemblyman Raymond Kenyon, who represents Essex County in the State Legislatlre. He is a brother of Miss Doris Kenyonfl The new concern is now fitting up executive offices at 516 Fifth avenue, which will be ready for occupancy on December 1.

In outlining the policy of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Mr. Deitrich said: "Miss Kenyon and I have decided that there is a growing demand for clean, wholesome, artistic, human interest pictures. We have reached this conclusion after watching and carefully weighing the reports from exhibitors all over the country. We propose to make this kind of pictures in five, six and seven-reel features exclusively. Miss Kenyon will appear as the star in all of the first productions of our company. It is our intention, however, to take on other stars as rapidly as possible and present them in the same manner as Miss Kenyon will be presened.

"We have many splendid stories in hand, which I have been collecting during the past two years. Some are book adaptations, some are original scripts. I have also commissioned two of the best known authors before the public to-day to write original stories for Miss Kenyon.

"We expect to start making pictures in February or March, but we will not start until I am fully satisfied with my stories. My long experience in newspaper and magazine writing and editing, and more recently my film experience fits me, I believe, to judge the quality of stories the public wants. Titles will be given the most serious consideration, and no picture will be released until the title is satisfactory. We are negotiating now for one of the best-equipped studios in the East, although some of our work will be done either in Florida or California.

Mary Pickford's New Picture Nears Completion

Mary Pickford's newest photoplay to be released by Artcraft Pictures is now rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky studio in Hollywood. The new production is an adaptation from William J. Locke's novel, "Stella Maris," prepared for the screen by Frances Marion and staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan. Miss Marion and Mr. Neilan have been respectively responsible for the scenario work and the staging of Miss Pickford's last two features, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "The Little Princess."

The story of Stella Maris, it is felt by both director and scenario writer, gives to Miss Pickford the most tenderly appealing role in which she has ever appeared on the screen. For the first time in her career the Artcraft star portrays two roles in the same production. The two parts that Miss Pickford enacts are those of Stella Maris, who has been a paralytic for ten years, living in a home of wealth, surrounded by every luxury and with the tender and devoted care of the circle of friends, who are worshippers at the "Court of Stella Maris," and that of Unity Blake, a veritable Ugly Duckling, the slave of an orphanage, living on the scraps and dressing in the rags which are given to her in the name of charity.

Bluebird Promises "Spoken Title" Innovation

Violet Mersereau Release Will Inaugurate Carl Laemmle's New and Interesting Idea of Having Characters Read Titles in Story

NOT only lip readers, but others will no doubt be interested in the experiment Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird photoplays, has ordered undertaken in the production of Violet Mersereau's next release. The titles will all be rehearsed and "spoken" into the features as it progresses. The characters will thus speak the titles, and the printed word will serve as a confirmation of what has been said during the production of the scene, immediately preceding the title.

To further develop the public interest, the advertising and press work will make reference to the "spoken" titles, and there will be printed lists of the complete set of titles provided for the use of exhibitors in distributing them to their audiences. No less a benefactor than "Constant Reader" is responsible, in a letter to the editor of one of New York's dailies, for the idea that will be worked out by Mr. Laemmle in the forthcoming Bluebird.

The newspaper reader, in his expressions to the editor, related how he was able from the last row of a theatre to clearly hear the dialogue when his eyes were open; but declared that with his eyes shut the lines spoken by the actors on the stage were a mere jumble of sounds.

"Constant Reader" went on to say: "I was greatly interested in this experience. The eyes take in at a glance a conversation; they note from the expression on the face of the person speaking whether what he says is serious, amusing or otherwise, and, in many instances, without previous training, they recognize the actions of the visible speech organs, interpreting the word pictures formed by them with the aid of the mind into spoken language, even if the sound of the voice cannot be heard. Many of us are unconsciously doing just the same thing when attending a moving picture play and are, perhaps, startled by the sudden voices coming from the silent screen."

Mr. Laemmle proposes to have these "voices from the screen" speak in absolute harmony with the action that has led to the title being inserted.

Zukor and Rothapfel Register Joy Over New Feature

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, last week received from Adolph Zukor and S. L. Rothapfel, who are now in California, two enthusiastic telegrams concerning the new Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Reaching for the Moon."

Both Mr. Zukor and Mr. Rothapfel viewed the new Fairbanks picture at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, and immediately upon conclusion of the showing wired Mr. Greene their appreciation of the merits of the film. "Just viewed Douglas Fairbanks' latest picture, 'Reaching for the Moon,'" read Mr. Zukor's telegram. "He hits the bull's-eye more vigorously than ever in a typical up-to-the-minute American vehicle. Mr. Fairbanks' versatility, coupled with a splendid story, will add new laurels to his already inimitable fame. Reviewing this picture is one of the high lights of my trip to California."

Mr. Rothapfel's wire was as follows: "I feel like a two-year-old boy, full of the old pep and vitality. Just attended a projection of Douglas Fairbanks' new picture, 'Reaching for the Moon,' which I think tops the already monumental Fairbanks standard. Even though I am out here in California, 3,500 miles from the Rialto, I will revel in the enjoyment of those who religiously turn out to smile with Old Doc Cheerful. My enthusiasm prompts me to exhaust all my superlatives."

Paul Scardon Urges Meeting the War Tax in the Studios

According to Paul Scardon, under whose direction many of the current Vitagraph successes have been produced, the Federal war tax on motion picture films can be made up in the studio by every one "doing his bit." Mr. Scardon has studied the problem from the angle of the studio, and in an interview on the subject, said:

"I believe from personal experiments in facilitating production, that the tax imposed upon the production of pictures can be made up to the producing companies in their own studios, if all directors and heads of departments, who are given a free hand, will inject a little patriotism and a deal of system into their daily work. If they do," said Mr. Scardon, "the war tax will not only be met, but the business efficiency of the studios will be increased as well.

"A company of players remaining idle for one day, as a result of the failure to plan the work ahead, results in the loss of enough money to pay the war tax on at least thirty-five reels of film. This loss can be avoided if the director is given his script in time and the work is intelligently planned, and if the errors in system are corrected as a result of the present emergency, the war tax will eventually be classed as a blessing in disguise.

"The average director in the personnel of the producing forces is hard working and conscientious, but improvement is always possible and if we all get right on the job with a firm resolve to do our bit by increasing efficiency, the present menace to the industry will be met and conquered at its source. Delay exists in all studios and all efforts should be directed to eliminating the evil."

Mae Marsh Draws New Phrases Concerning Personality

It appears that Mae Marsh, sometimes termed the "enigma of the screen," and sometimes referred to through other phrases equally as descriptive, if baffling, is about to get a corner on the phrase market. Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, for whom Miss Marsh appears in features, has tabulated a few of the terms used by writers and others in reference to Miss Marsh's personality, and it cannot be denied the whole makes interesting reading.

Goldwyn cites Miss Marsh as an exception to the supposedly established rule that stars must stick to the "artistic and temperamental personality," and backs up its claim with phrases taken at random from reviews and other literary efforts of writers. To one she is "the quaintest girl in pictures." Another hails her "eerie charm." In one picture a writer finds her "deliciously amusing;" in the next she "wrings the heart with the pity of angels." A critic once called her "the girl who has everything."

Another dubbed Miss Marsh "the chamelion of the screen." Her facial expression drew from R. J. McCoy the nickname, "the girl of a thousand faces." Janet Priest dubbed Miss Marsh "the whim girl of the films."

Dorothy Dalton's Stardom Results from Inborn Desire

THE stellar heights to which Dorothy Dalton, the Thomas H. Ince star, has risen are not the result of mere chance, accident, opportunity or any of the other names by which players sometimes reach the topmost goal of the profession.

A story of Miss Dalton's life, if related truthfully, would prove that even as a schoolgirl the dimpled star evinced a strong desire for a dramatic career, and after a course at an academy was given her first opportunity through a professional engagement with Virginia Harned during a season of stock at a Chicago theatre. The Windy City was Miss Dalton's home town.

Associated with Miss Harned was Wright Huntington, and when, the following season, he established a stock company of his own in a mid-Western city Mr. Huntington procured Miss Dalton to play the ingenue roles. Her work with the Huntington players was so uniformly good that she received numerous offers for other stock engagements, all of which she refused for a chance to play a prolonged engagement over the Orpheum circuit in a vaudeville sketch called "The Smugglers." Having achieved no little distinction as an actress Miss Dalton was anxious to test her ability as an authoress, and the fact that "The Smugglers" was continued for two entire seasons was sufficient proof of a literary talent.

Following her vaudeville engagements Miss Dalton went to Denver, where she played leading ingenue roles with Elitch's Garden stock company, from which organization she went to Portland, Maine, the following season as leading woman for the B. F. Keith stock company, where she scored pronounced success in a wide range of dramatic parts.

From the Keith company Miss Dalton went to Los Angeles on a visit and was immediately engaged by Thomas H. Ince to appear under his direction in photoplays. Her first camera work was in "The Disciple," in which she supported William S. Hart.

"Nan of Music Mountain" Claims Good Story

For the patrons of the motion picture theatre who maintain that the "story is the thing" in "fillums," Paramount, in an announcement this week, heartily recommends "Nan of Music Mountain," adapted from Frank H. Spearman's novel of that name, and which is scheduled for early release with Wallace Reid in the star role.

As an example, Paramount cites a quotation from a Boston daily, as follows: "Western stories are as plentiful as strawberries in June, but a good Western story is as rare a thing as a strawberry in December. 'Nan of Music Mountain' attains the latter classification."

In regard to the supporting cast, it is hardly necessary to make further comments than to state the fact that Theodore Roberts, considered the premier character artist of the screen, is "in it." James Cruze, Raymond Hatton, Charles Ogle, Hart Hoxie, Guy Oliver, Henry Woodward, Ernest Joy, H. B. Carpenter, James Mason and Alice Marc complete the cast.

Greene Asserts Women Take Lead in Industry

Declares Scenario Field Has Improved Since Gentler Sex Stepped In—Amazed at Their Usefulness in Film Business

THAT the woman in business is here to stay, and that the gentler sex in the motion picture industry will stay as long as, if not longer than, any in other industries, is the opinion of Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, in an announcement issued from his office last week.

In addition to declaring that women writers are usurping the scenario field and are excelling their male brethren, Mr. Greene, whose organization includes as stars Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart, Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson and George M. Cohan, and such wizards of the screen as D. W. Griffith, Cecil B. De Mille, Thomas H. Ince, John Emerson, Allan Dwan and Marshall Neilan, said: "I have never realized how important a part the women of the country were taking in national affairs until the recent election set me thinking, and I was amazed to find to what extent we have been dependent upon the brains of women in conducting our vast business.

"The selection of vehicles for our stars is of paramount importance, and a subject that is given the utmost consideration. On each play depends the success or failure of a production running into six figures. The stars know that their continued popularity—and their big salaries—are dependent upon the pleasure of the public, and they and their directors analyze and dissect the material offered by playwrights. It is a fiery crucible in which these scenarios are tested, and but few survive the ordeal. And we have found that our best stories are coming from women. In the great majority of cases a woman has written the original play or book, or the work has been adapted to the screen by a woman.

"The stupendous Geraldine Farrar spectacle, 'The Woman God Forgot,' is from the pen of Jeanie Macpherson, who has also written the scenario of 'The Devil Stone,' Miss Farrar's next photoplay. Miss Macpherson was the author of two of Mary Pickford's successes, 'A Romance of the Redwoods' and the patriotic subject, 'The Little American.'

"Miss Anita Loos has been writing scenarios for Douglas Fairbanks for some time, being responsible for such productions as 'In Again—Out Again' and 'Wild and Woolly.' Douglas Fairbanks' latest picture, 'Reaching for the Moon,' is also one of her contributions."

Universal Exploits Several Special Features

One Said to Be Exceptionally Well Fitted for Holiday Showing Is "Beloved Jim"—"Bucking Broadway" Features Harry Carey

OUT of the production work at Universal City has come several features that are considered by Universal of special merit, and to fittingly exploit them an effort to advertise and promote these attractions, not alone to exhibitors but before the general public, has been inaugurated. Universal producers seem to have found uncommonly good subjects for a group of attractive releases, and this fact will be heralded, it is planned, through a campaign for increased publicity that will draw attention to these particular offerings.

Stuart Payton has made a feature said to be especially suited to the holiday season, in "Beloved Jim," featuring Harry Carter, Priscilla Dean and Joseph Girard. The full cast employs Morris Foster, Charles Hill Mailes, Frank Dachio, Sidney Dean, Ed Brown and Mrs. A. E. Witting.

Jack Ford's production, reflecting both the East and West, engages Harry Carey as the star of "Bucking Broadway." Molly Malone will be featured as Mr. Carey's leading lady in George Hively's latest work. Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon are featured in "The High Sign," an Elmer Clifton production created by Waldemar Young and J. Grubb Alexander. Hayward Mack, Ed. Brady, Mark Fenton, Nellie Allen, Frank McQuarrie and Harry Mann provide the support.

"The Wolf and His Mate," an offering shown during the current days at the Broadway theatre, New York, is another production Universal is advancing as a subject for extra advertising and exploitation. Louise Lovely is the star in Julia Maier's play, directed by Edward J. Le Saint. Hart Hoxie heads a supporting company that also includes Hector Dion, John O'Dell, Betty Schade and Baby Georgia French.

When Harvey Gates had finished his presentation of "Madam Spy," in which Jack Mulhall, Donna Drew and Claire Du Brey will be featured, what is said to be another unusual offering developed in Lee Morrison's story of intrigue and adventure. The scenic equipment and the supporting cast are declared to be elements that contribute to the conspicuous merits of "Madam Spy."

Louise Lovely, in "Painted Lips," a production made by Edward J. Le Saint, and still another Harry Carey feature, "Phantom Riders," created by Jack Ford, are among the Universal productions that promise to attract more than the customary exploitation and profitable attention.

Vampires Flock to Theda Bara Matinee in New York

Theda Bara, William Fox star, gave a matinee at the Lyric Theatre, on November 19, to her man-snaring sisters of the silent and speaking stage in honor of Cleopatra, their old-world preceptress. Vampires, amateur and professional, real and imaginary, filled the playhouse and witnessed historic competition as exemplified by the siren queen who changed the history of the globe.

Miss Bara was the cynosure of curious attention in a stage box. She could not be prevailed upon to do more than bow her acknowledgements during the intermission.

Most of the fair, frail and fascinating vampire role stars in the city's theatres were present.

"Within the Law" Books Briskly in Chicago

Exhibitors of Windy City Make Rush for Feature After Court Rules Against Funkhouser—Orpheum First to Book

THE stampede of Chicago exhibitors to book "Within the Law," following the court victory against Major Funkhouser by Greater Vitagraph, continues unabated, according to reports received by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization the cause of this stampede being as follows:

Greater Vitagraph, through a legal fight directed by Irwin and Albert E. Smith, president of the company, obtained an order of mandamus against the city officials, but they refused to recognize it and appealed from the order. Vitagraph then went into court and applied for an order restraining the police from interfering with the showing of the picture. On October 26 an injunction was granted which barred the police from interfering with the picture pending the decision of the city's appeal in the first case, and immediately there was a rush of exhibitors to book the big Blue Ribbon Special.

The Orpheum theatre on State street was the first to book the feature. Following the completion of the Orpheum run, the picture is to play through the entire Ascher Brothers Circuit of sixteen theatres. Other theatres which have booked the feature for runs of varying lengths are: Strand, Twentieth Century, Crawford, Madison Square, Newberry, Franklin, Kimbark, Vision, Lyric, Curtis, Avon, Rosewood, Playhouse, Chateau, States, Lincoln, De Luxe, Tiffin and White Palace.

These bookings almost equal the record set by "Within the Law" at the time of its release in New York. Then it was booked and played simultaneously over the Loew, Moses, Keith, Poli, Proctor, Fox and Mayer and Schneider theatre circuits.

Paramount Credits Serial Success to Novelty

Tries Out Original Idea in "Who Is Number One?" by Avoiding the Obvious—Keeps Audiences Guessing All Way Through

ONE of the many reasons for the success of "Who Is Number One?" according to a recipe announced last week by Paramount's serial department, is that Paramount has been careful to keep away from the obvious throughout the entire action of the serial starring Kathleen Clifford.

Concerning this Paramount said: "When Kathleen, in her war upon the conspirators led by "Number One," gets into a predicament she always escapes by some new method. And Paramount has avoided the old "nick of time" rescues that have lost their thrill now that the motion picture fan is educated in melodrama and knows that when the ordinary heroine is in peril, somebody is going to happen conveniently around and save her.

"In the fourth episode, for instance, Kathleen is locked in a room and one of the conspirators is smashing down the door. Kathleen writes a message for help on her cuff and throws it out of the window. A child finds it and goes to a policeman. The spectators guess that the policeman will see the message, call for help and rush to the rescue. But that isn't what happens. The child borrows a pin from the policeman and he helps her fashion the cuff into a cape for her doll, then walks away, leaving the child to play with the message that would bring aid to Kathleen. Thus, crossing the guessers and throwing Kathleen's scheme awry.

"In a later episode, Kathleen is in danger of death from a dynamite blast. A rescuing party is on the way. The fans guess that the rescuers will arrive in time to prevent the blast. But they don't. The blast is shot, the building is wrecked and in an astonishing closeup of the falling wreckage, Kathleen is buried and crushed by falling timbers.

"It is this sort of treatment, the departure from the obvious, the introduction of continual surprises that is making "Who Is Number One?" a serial with a powerful pull that is holding the big following it has created."

General Tabulates Film Rentals by Machine

Prodigious Weekly Accounting Task Now Easily Accomplished by Auditor Gulick's Department—Tries Out System First

AFTER more than six months of successful operation General Film Company has adopted as permanent an advanced method of tabulation for its volume of accounting details with bookkeeping machinery. General Film Company is probably the only moving picture organization that employs such a labor-saving aid in its auditing department, and, in fact, it is said so far to be the only one with operations so extensive as to oblige it thus to handle clerical details by wholesale. The system in use is the same as that used by the U. S. Census Bureau in tabulating its myriad of statistics.

By the use of several sets of machines consisting of three units in each set, General Film makes weekly a minute and separate accounting of its every film rental—by serial number, manufacturer, subject, date, branch, exhibitor and price throughout the United States. Auditor W. M. Gulick estimates that the machines dispose of from 14,000 to 16,000 ordinary bookkeeping entries per week, and that it would need about forty clerks to do the same work that the machines are doing.

What swells the volume of necessary entries in the General Film Company auditing department is the company's position as the distributor for a dozen different motion picture manufacturers. The data required about film rentals is virtually multiplied by the number of manufacturers, whereas it would be comparatively simple to keep account of the film rentals as a whole Each separate manufacturer, however, is entitled to an accounting of each day's rental of each reel of film in each of the company's twenty-eight exchanges, and this accounting General Film Company successfully undertakes to render.

With the use of the machines it is possible, promptly and regularly, to give each manufacturer a report presenting in exact detail the performance of each reel of film in dollars and cents.

A force of four or five girls and as many young men, as the work varies, are kept on the tabulation of film rental charges by General Film. This work is under the management of C. H. Coburn, an expert in this sort of accounting. The completeness and accuracy of the history of each piece of film among the thousands handled each week, make the machine system regarded as indispensable by the company.

Frank Lloyd Directs Jewel Carmen for William Fox

It was announced last week from the William Fox offices that Frank Lloyd will supervise the direction of Jewel Carmen's first starring production under the Fox banner. Among films Lloyd has directed are "A Tale of Two Cities," "When a Man Sees Red" and "Les Miserables."

For exterior scenes in Mme. Sonia Markova's second Fox production, the Russian star and her company have gone to a point in Massachusetts. In the cast are David Herblin, Eric Mayne, Bradley Barker, Stanley Heck, Wu-Soy-Fa and Charlie Fang.

Essanay Shows Lake Louise in New General Release

Lake Louise, said by some to be the most beautiful spot in North America, is the subject of the second release in the new Essanay scenic, released by General Film Company. This one-reel feature is said to be literally crammed with some of the most wonderful scenery ever caught by the camera, presenting novel and interesting views never before screened.

Petrova Delays Scenes to Get Proper Atmosphere

Madame Olga Petrova has exerted the utmost personal attention in making "Daughter of Destiny," her first production for the Petrova Picture Company, as nearly perfect as possible, and, according to reports this week, her efforts will surely meet with full success.

The initial offering of the star's own picture organization is said to contain several important scenes which required the use of the Royal Grenadier Guard. Petrova, refusing to attempt a "studio imitation," caused, according to news this week from her publicity department, the picture to be held up until the city was combed for ex-members of the European regiment.

Clara Kimball Young Secures Rights to Curel Novel

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has secured the rights for the screen to "La Fille Sauvage," by Francois Curel. This work, which is variously known as "The Barbarian Woman" and "The Daughter of the Wild" in its English translation, should present to Miss Young a wonderful opportunity for characterization in a role in which the primal passions and appetites are ever contending for mastery of a soul endowed with the love of beauty. While in the original French, "La Fille Sauvage" proves what might be considered somewhat strong meat for Anglo-Saxon taste, the screen adaptation made for use by Miss Young will, it said, contain nothing offensive.

An elaborate production of this work will be made by Miss Young in the West Indies—probably in Jamaica—during the winter months, it is announced. She will be directed in this play, as in all others in the future, by Emile Chautard, who has signed a long term contract as Miss Young's director. Jacques Bizuel will again do the camera work.

In the meantime, Miss Young and Mr. Chautard are busily engaged bringing her production of "The Marionettes" into shape. It is expected that another week will complete the screening of this play.

Louella Parsons Pays Visit to Brenon Studios

Louella Parsons, writer on motion pictures, spent a day at the Brenon Studios on Hudson Heights recently.

Although Mrs. Parsons has been in the East for several weeks, and it is by no means her first visit, it was the first time that she and Mr. Brenon had met. Mrs. Parsons watched Mr. Brenon and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson at work during the filming of some scenes of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." Afterwards she and Mr. Brenon had a long chat on the scope and possibilities of the silent drama, a subject which, of course, held much in common for the writer and the director.

Mrs. Parsons remarked before leaving the studios that the studio was run on almost an entirely different basis to any she had visited before, and that she would remember her visit to the Brenon Studios as one of the pleasantest experienced during her stay in the East.

Mary Miles Minter Starts Fifth American Subject

Mary Miles Minter will start work on her fifth American Film picture immediately, it is announced. The new play makes its bow as "Mademoiselle Tiptoe," and was written by Arthur Barthelet. Henry King will supervise the direction. Miss Minter is so interested in it that nothing but a base ball game—of which she is very fond—took her away from the studio the other day when she wanted to study the script for her new play. But Bill Russell offered her the chance to throw the first ball at a benefit game for the Santa Barbara boys who are in camp and promised to knock it to kingdom come if she would pitch for him.

Fox Changes a Standard to Special Feature

"Babes in the Woods," with Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, Named as Year-End Gift to Wm. Fox Exhibitors

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, Youthful Stars in "Treasure Island," a William Fox Production

WILLIAM FOX claims credit for having added three weeks to the holiday season this year. As a year-end gift to exhibitors, and particularly to those who have contracted for his special features, he announces that one of his most elaborate Standard Pictures—the one he had selected for his Christmas release—will be transferred December 2 to the special features classification.

The production is "The Babes in the Woods," in which Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin are starred under the direction of C. M. and S. A. Franklin. It is a six-reel feature in the same class as "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

"Our intention had been to handle 'The Babes in the Woods' on exactly the same basis as the other Carpenter-Corbin productions," Mr. Fox explains. "We had set it down for release as one of the Standard Pictures on December 23. We had prepared all the elaborate advertising material, press sheets, lobby displays, lithographs and exhibitor helps which we have been accustomed to furnish with out extra-special attractions.

"We had been planning also to give practical expression during the holiday season of our appreciation of the hearty support we have had from exhibitors this year. The idea of releasing a Standard Picture as a Fox special feature suggested itself and 'The Babes in the Woods' was selected as being the production which would prove the most generally satisfactory to exhibitors and at the same time permit of carrying out our idea of making the transfer early in December so that all the theatres might have an opportunity to profit from the gift before the first of the year."

International Plans New Animated Comedies

Insists That as Much Pains Will Be Taken with Them as with Five-Reel Feature—Katzenjammer Kids Subjects Ready

FOR the past two years, the International Film Service Company, Inc., which controls the cartoons of all the comic artists of the chain of Hearst newspapers, has been striving for bigger and better animated cartoons, with such subjects as the "Katzenjammer Kids," "Happy Hooligan," "Jerry on the Job," "Krazy Kat," "Bringing Up Father," "Jimmy," and Tom Power's fanciful "Joys and Glooms" at their command.

Edgar B. Hatrick, who has direct charge of the Animated Cartoon Department of the International, announces this week the bigger and better animated cartoon, which in future will be known as "animated comedies." The present animated cartoon is usually 500 feet in length, and is issued as a part of a split release, in association with a scenic or educational film. Two of the latter will shortly be released, one of them, entitled "The Tale of a Monkey," and the other, "The Last Straw." Both of these comedies have the Katzenjammer Kids as the principal actors. The scenarios were written and the animating done under the direction of Gregory La Cava, director of the Animated Department of the International.

"We are taking as much pains with these animated comedies as is ordinarily taken with a five-reel feature," declares Mr. La Cava. "The scenarios are written and rewritten with the utmost care, and each character is faithfully worked out by some different artist, so that each one of the little actors has an individuality of his own. A number of critics who have just been shown 'The Tale of a Monkey,' declare that it ranks as strong in delicious comedy as the famous story of 'Androcles and the Lion.' It is the desire of the International to impress upon the exhibitor as well as upon the public that these comedies have long since passed the experimental stage and are worthy of a place on any program."

Mr. La Cava, director of the department, is one of the best known cartoonists in the country, having for many years been associated with the Hearst papers, the New York World, the New York Herald, the American Press Association, and other publications. He has been making animated cartoons, however, for more than six years.

Among other animators employed by International are John Foster, Frank Moser, Edward Grinham, George Stallings, Jr., William Powers, the younger brother of Tom Powers, and Gil Martin. The news cartoons are animated by Bert Green, considered in a class by himself for that character of work. In addition to this force of artists International has more than twenty-five tracers and assistants in its Animated Department.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

Lina Cavalieri, Whom Paramount Numbers Among Its Most Lovely Stars, Promises Many Unusually Dramatic Moments in "The Eternal Temptress," Announced for Release on December 3

Paramount Dazzles Trade with December List

Lina Cavalieri Makes First Appearance on Program with Billie Burke, Marguerite Clark, Jack Pickford and Others

FROM all appearances Paramount is planning to make December its banner month, concerning releases, for in an announcement last week the organization named enough stars and features of the highest calibre to trim the Christmas tree of every exhibitor in the country who considers himself hard, or easy, to please.

One of the features is the presentation of Lina Cavalieri's first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress," by Mme. Fred de Gresac, the senario by Eve Unsell. This production was directed by Emile Chautard and is said to be one of the most exquisite examples of the perfect photoplay ever released.

Billie Burke will be presented in "The Land of Promise," in which she also starred upon the stage. This play is by W. Somerset Maugham and it is said to be one of the best pictures in which Miss Burke has appeared.

Christmas is Marguerite Clark's own month. Following an annual custom, begun last year with "Snow White," Miss Clark will appear in a new fairy play, "The Seven Swans," directed by J. Searle Dawley, from all accounts to be the most elaborate production of its kind ever attempted. As a delicious little princess of a mythical and mystical kingdom, Miss Clark will assuredly appeal alike to young and old.

Another picture in the nature of a Xmas gift is "Tom Sawyer," in which Jack Pickford will create upon the screen Mark Twain's immortal hero of boyhood's happy days.

Wallace Reid, screen hero of manly and virile type, appears in "Nan of Music Mountain"—directed by George Melford—a story of the spreading West, written as a novel by Frank Spearman.

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince star, is the youthful heroine of a dramatic story by Shannon Fife, called "Love Letters," the production of which was supervised by Mr. Ince.

Charles Ray, also an Ince star in Paramount pictures, is to be seen in "His Mother's Boy." Victor Schertzinger directed this picture, which was also supervised by Mr. Ince.

Sessue Hayakawa will play the role of a Japanese detective in "The Secret Game," directed by William C. De Mille.

Vivian Martin is heroine of "The Fair Barbarian," from a story by Frances Hodgson Burnett; the scenario by Edith Kennedy, and directed by Robert Thornby.

Humor Combined with Strong Situations in "Uneasy Money"

"Uneasy Money," Taylor Holmes's newest vehicle, soon to be released by George K. Spoor as a special feature, is said to combine a rare bit of humor with strong and fascinating situations.

The picturization has lost none of the verve and humor, it is claimed, that emphasized the original story in the Saturday Evening Post. Taylor Holmes is cast as Lord Dawlish, the polished, though quaintly impractical, Englishman, whose love for justice overbalances his desire to be a "vulgar millionaire."

Lord Dawlish is bequeathed the enormous fortune of an American millionaire whom he had taught to overcome a difficulty in golf. But although the riches would enable him to gain the hand of Claire Edmont, a fortune-seeking actress, Lord Dawlish determines to make proper distribution of the money, giving at least half of it to Elizabeth and "Nutty" Nutcomb, American niece and nephew of the millionaire.

Lillian Drew plays Claire Edmont, the fortune hunter, who finally weds a fat, pudgy new-rich. Frederick Tiden, Rod La Rocque, Virginia Bowker, Charles Gardner and Arthur Bates are others in the cast.

Pathe Promises Ingenue-Vampire in Russian Film

The most wonderful "ingenue-vampire" ever seen on the screen is promised in the title rôle of "Her Sister's Rival," which Pathe announces for release December 9. This is a Russian Art Film, in five reels, and marks the first appearance here of Vera Colodna. She is expected by Pathe officials to prove such a sensation that arrangements have already been made looking toward surmounting the difficulties to be encountered in bringing her to this country.

"Her Sister's Rival" is looked upon by Pathe as the best of the Russian Art Films yet released, the others being "The Painted Doll" and "The Queen of Spades," both featuring Ivan Mozukin.

Helen Holmes Flirts with Death in "Daring Death"

Helen Holmes is said to do the most risky bit of business of "The Lost Express," her new fifteen-chapter Mutual-Signal photo-novel, in "Daring Death," chapter twelve, which is scheduled for release December 3.

"The Lost Express" is nearing completion at the Signal Studios, near Los Angeles. Chapter fifteen will reveal the mystery of the lost express train which disappeared in chapter one.

Victor Moore Takes Gas in December 3 Release

The perils and pleasures of laughing gas are said to figure very prominently in "Toothaches and Heartaches," the Paramount-Klever Komedy, starring Victor Moore, scheduled for release December 3. It was written by Thomas J. Gray and was directed by Chester M. De Vonde.

The story is said to carry the comedian from a wife whom he picked in the lemon garden to the dentist's office to have a fractious tooth pulled. Gas being the order of the day, Vic consents to be put to sleep, and floats through a fairy kingdom entirely surrounded by pretty girls. This happy state of affairs took the sting away from the dentist's fifty dollar bill, but Vic's wife spoils the whole symphony in laughing gas by appearing on the scene.

Petrova Inaugurates Department in Women's Magazine

What is said by the Petrova Picture Company to be probably the only department of its kind in the fields of the national magazines has been inaugurated by Madame Olga Petrova. Commencing with the December issue of The Ladies' World, the star will conduct an intimate department devoted solely to the dispensing of advice and helpful hints to the girls and women who believe they possess the vital spark necessary to the accomplishment of great things in motion pictures. Madame Petrova, it is said, will give the benefit of her extensive experience as a picture star to the readers of her articles. She is said to have contributed to other magazines under the name of Estelle Baird.

Chester Conklin Emulates Spy in Sennett Comedy

Chester Conklin, in the guise of a foreign spy, is one of the leaders of the fun-making in "An International Sneak," a Paramount-Mack Sennett creation due to flicker across the screen for the first time December 2, bringing a wave of hilarity in its wake. Ethel Teare will donate her presence to the picture in the character of a female detective, and William Armstrong, Lillian Biron and Earl C. Kenton are cast in parts that are said to go a long ways toward lifting the lid from the Sennett box of reserve laughs.

Billy Ruge Plays Detective in His Latest Comedy

Will Huntem, a shrewd and calculating detective, who isn't afraid of anything from bombs to gunpowder, is introduced in the current Sparkle comedy of General Film Company, "The Detective." Billy Ruge, as Huntem, no sooner emerges from one triumph than he is plunged into another laugh-making adventure. He saves himself from an untimely fate by weeping copiously upon the fuse attached to the barrel of powder upon which he is tied, and returns to the pursuit of the captors of Jennie Million.

In the current Jaxon comedy, "Disappointed Love," Burns and Stull are said to present some of their liveliest fun-making stunts as heartbroken suitors.

Fox Schedules Nine Releases for December

William Farnum, Annette Kellermann, Jane and Katherine Lee, George Walsh, June Caprice, Jewel Carmen and Others Are Stars

William Farnum, in the Quality Production, "Les Miserables," of William Fox

NINE releases, four Standard Pictures and five Special Features are scheduled by William Fox during December. William Farnum, Annette Kellermann and Jane and Katherine Lee will be represented in the Standard Pictures, and Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, George Walsh, June Caprice, Jewel Carmen and Virginia Pearson in the Special Features.

"A Daughter of the Gods," the Kellermann production, which had a run at the Lyric theatre, New York, and which since has been shown and advertised in all parts of the country, will be released December 2 as a Standard Picture. On the same date the Carpenter-Corbin picture, "The Babes in the Wood," originally scheduled as one of the Standard Pictures and to have been available December 23, will be offered as a Special Feature, a 52-a-year issue.

"Troublemakers" will be the Standard Picture released December 9, and in which Jane and Katherine Lee perform pranks. The Special Feature of the same date, a war drama, "The Pride of New York," tells a story beginning with the draft and ending in the trenches. The star is George Walsh.

William Farnum will be seen in a December 16 issue, "The Heart of a Lion." This is a visualization of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor," a tale of the Canadian Rockies. At the same time there will be released the Caprice picture, "Unknown 274," in which is told the story of a foundling's troubles, ending in her unexpected restoration to her father.

The week of December 23, the only one of the month in which there will be no release of Standard Pictures, has been exclusively reserved for Miss Carmen, who will make her debut as a star in "The Kingdom of Love," a production dealing with a young woman's career in a mining camp and especially with a minister's interest in her.

The last releases of the year, December 30, will be an interpretation of the character of "Du Barry," mistress of King Louis XV of France, and a Virginia Pearson picture entitled "Stolen Honor." The latter tells of the theft of a painting and the attempt to fix the crime on an innocent woman. The "Du Barry" picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

Geraldine Farrar, Stripped of Armor, Feathers and Jewels, is Just a Simple Sea-Coast Maiden in "The Devil Stone," Her Next Artcraft Picture, Which Is Expected to Accent her Versatility

De Mille Returns to California—and Work

Is Putting the Finishing Touches on "The Devil Stone" Geraldine Farrar's Next Artcraft Feature, Released Shortly

AFTER a month's vacation, during which time he visited New York, Cecil B. De Mille, the director of Artcraft pictures, has returned to the Lasky Studio, in Hollywood. Immediately after his arrival at the studio, Mr. De Mille took up the work of finishing the new Geraldine Farrar production, "The Devil Stone," to be released by Artcraft next month.

The newest Artcraft vehicle for Miss Farrar is said to be considerably different from any of the film plays in which she has thus far appeared. In this production the diva creates the role of a simple Breton fisher woman, removed after the early part of the story to America as the wife of an unscrupulous milliionaire owner of the fisheries, Silas Martin. The similarity of the man's name with that of Silas Marner, the miser of fiction, is particularly appropriate because Martin, who meets the fisher girl in Brittany, whither he has gone to subdue his employees who are clamoring for higher wages, demonstrates his miserly impulses by marrying the girl in order to get possession of a valuable emerald which she has found along the seashore. This stone, in her simple, superstitious belief, is a relic of the legendary Queen Grenelda, of Norse folk lore.

The underlying theme of the narrative, namely, the sinister effect of the world-old stumbling block of man, superstition, furnishes the basis of the story.

The scenario of "The Devil Stone" was written by Jeanie Macpherson, author of "The Woman God Forgot" and "Joan the Woman," and based on the story by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun. Miss Macpherson, who also recently visited New York with her mother, has just returned to the Hollywood studio and has commenced work on a new script for Artcraft.

Mr. De Mille is now putting the final touches to the new Farrar production and it is expected that this film will be finished within a week.

Detail Is Not Overlooked in This Scene from "The Tenderfoot," a Wolfville Blue Ribbon Feature by Vitagraph

"France in Arms" Leads in Ranks of War Films

"France in Arms,' 'the French official war picture produced by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army, seems established as one of the best of the war pictures yet shown in this country, the reason being chiefly that it is an impressive historical document chock full of human interest without any attempt at sensational presentation of the war.

The best testimony to the worth of this picture, as pointed out by Pathe, is the fact that a number of the best houses throughout the country have already played it and numerous others are booking it for long runs.

Madge Kennedy Feature Plays Strand This Week

Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star in "Nearly Married," is the feature attraction at the Strand theatre, Broadway, this week.

Vivian Reed Makes Candy for the Soldier Laddies

It will not be the fault of Vivian Reed if the U. S. soldiers warriors are not bountifully supplied with all kinds of candy, for this young Universal star is spending all her spare time in making candy at her home in Hollywood for the boys, and she has interested more than a score of others in this worthy cause. Miss Reed started the campaign in behalf of the young soldiers now in Europe a month ago, when she made known her plan to a number of her girl friends.

She and several others formed a committee, the members of which served notice upon their friends that they must dig down into their jeans for the wherewithal to purchase sugar, butter, nuts, and other ingredients for the candy that was to be made for the boys away from their homes.

New York Priest Writes Brady About "Over Here"

William A. Brady announced last week that he has received from a Roman Catholic priest in New York a letter concerning the new cantonment picture, "Over Here," distributed by the World Film Corporation, that speaks volumes for the timeliness and appeal of the picture.

The letter, which was quite lengthy, said in part: "This film is to be an important factor in the education of our people. It teaches the masses the necessity of a little sacrifice "here" to prevent greater ones "over there."

Mutual War Spectacle Shown at Minnesota School

"Heroic France, Our Allies in Action," the eight-reel Mutual war spectacle, was shown to capacity audiences recently at the State Normal School, at Moorhead, Minn.

The auditorium of the Moorhead Normal seats 1,000 people. The Moorhead chapter of the American Red Cross received a perceritage of the ticket receipts and Mutual donated a share of the film rental to the local Red Cross organization. Tickets for the show sold at $1 each.

Triangle Engages New Players on West Coast

Three new players have been engaged by Casting Director Arthur Hoyt for the new Triangle production, "Mr. Butterfly," on which Director E. Mason Hopper has begun work. Teddy Sampson will appear in the leading feminine rôle as a Japanese girl, and two Japanese actors, Thomas Kurihara and Jack Abbe, will also have important parts in the picture. Darrell Foss will appear in the tile rôle.

Audelle Higgins, well-known stock actress, who was recently a member of the Morosco company in Los Angeles, has also been engaged for a prominent rôle in the new Triangle production, "Evidence," from the pen of Jack Cunningham.

Lillian West, who has a large following among fans of both the legitimate and the pictures, has been added to the Triangle playing forces at Culver City, and has been cast in an important rôle in Director Wyndham Gittens's latest story, which was begun this week.

Metro Offers Two Lockwood Subjects in December

During the month of December, Metro will offer Harold Lockwood in two Metro wonderplays, "The Square Deceiver," released December 3, and "The Avenging Trail," released December 31. The two vehicles are said to differ widely in type and nature, the former being a comedy-drama while the latter is frankly melodramatic.

This variance is in accordance with the policy of the producers to avoid sameness is subjects. Each picture, therefore, comes to the exhibitor with the interest creating possibilities of new material. The wisdom of this policy is shown in the steadily growing popularity of Harold Lockwood and his greatly increasing value as a box-office attraction.

Mae Marsh, Goldwyn's "Whim" Girl, is Said to Add Even More Enigmatical Twists to Her Screen Personality in "The Cinderella Man"

Mary Miles Minter Makes a Charming Mariner, Pants and All, in "The Mate of the Sally Ann," Mutual-American Star Production, Released by Mutual This Week

Edna Goodrich Heads Mutual List December 3

"American Maid" Is Fourth of the Series of Features Star Is Making for Mutual—Billie Rhodes in Comedy December 4

MUTUAL'S schedule for the week of December 3 is led by Edna Goodrich in "American Maid," which is the fourth of the series of feature productions in which Miss Goodrich appears for Mutual. It was directed by Albert Capellani, at Mutual's Long Island studios.

"American Maid" is the story of a typical American girl, doing "her bit" behind the trenches in France, who falls in love with an American doing "his bit" in the trenches. He is wounded and retired from active service, returns home, discovers the social gulf which separates them and goes back to the West.

Appearing with Miss Goodrich in "American Maid" are mauy well-known players, chief of whom are George J. Henery, who played the judge in "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford, and William B. Davidson, who has had a long and successful screen career with Vitagraph, Fox, Metro and Mutual.

Billie Rhodes plays the rôle of a little girl in "Just Kidding," the one-reel Strand Mutual comedy scheduled for release on December 4. She wears a Buster Brown suit, plays with a Teddy Bear and gets her face smeared with blueberry pie. The plot affords many laughable situations, it is said, and ends in a romance.

"Jerry Takes Gas" is the subject of the Cub comedy, released by Mutual, December 6, which shows George Ovey with suicidal inclinations and results with a mistaken dose of gasoline. A match, a tube and—puff.

From the first-line trenches, where the news is thickest, comes Mutual Weekly Number 153, released December 3. This newsy one-reel subject is said to be gladdening the hearts of parents, whose boys are at the front, for it shows, in vivid living pictures what letters never could.

"Hidden Hand" Seems Assured of Ultimate Success

From the reported reception accorded "The Hidden Hand," Pathe's Big Four Serial, released November 25, by the exhibitors who have seen the first episode and from the number of bookings on this serial, the success of this continued photoplay seems insured.

It takes its name of the Big Four Serial from the fact that Pathe claims it is the first serial ever released which contains stars of such magnitude in the cast. They are Doris Kenyon, the star of the production; Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton.

"Spooks and Spasms" Big V Comedy for December 3

"Spooks and Spasms" is announced as the title of the Big V comedy to be released by Greater Vitagraph the week of December 3. It was written and directed by Lawrence Semon, who also plays the leading comedy role. With him are Florence Curtis, the little dancer, Joe Basil and Pietro Aramondo.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Annette Kellermann, the Shapely Slave Girl in William Fox's Production of "A Daughter of the Gods," Would Induce Any Miser to Part With His Gold

Fox Points Out Interesting Phases of Kellermann Film

"A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS," probably one of the best advertised pictures in America, and which will be released to exhibitors Dec 2, has been before the public for more than one year, during which time it has been shown in all parts of the country. It is a fantasy of the sea—a fairy story—and its keynote, as one reviewer has said, is, beauty. The cost is said to have been in excess of $1,000,000, and the total number of persons appearing in the picture is placed at 21,218 Most of the scenes were taken on an island in the Caribbean According to William Fox, the producer, 223,000 feet of the film were used, but only about 7,500, or eight reels are shown.

There is an unusually large assortment of publicity material available for this picture. This includes two styles each of one, three, six and eight-sheets and a twenty-four-sheet; lobby display photographs, press sheets, rotogravure heralds, cuts and mats varying in size from one to four columns, piano score, music score, a variety of slides, an assortment of forty by sixty paintings, several sorts of flashy window cards and other suitable material.

Annette Kellermann is the star of the production, doing spectacular diving and swimming, and among the very large supporting company are Jane and Katherine Lee.

Baby Marie Osborne Stars in Pathe Program December 2

BABY MARIE OSBORNE in what is said to be one of the best pictures she has ever made, the second episode of "The Hidden Hand" serial which is starting out as another "Elaine," the twelfth chapter of "The Seven Pearls," a Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy, and another installment of the Argus Pictorial are announced as features of Pathe's program for the week of December 2.

Baby Marie Osborne's play is entitled "A Little Patriot." It is a five-reel Gold Rooster play, produced by Diando, scenario by Lela Liebrand, story by John W. Grey and directed by William Bertram.

Doris Kenyon stars in "The Hidden Hand" No. 2, entitled "Counterfeit Faces," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton, produced in two reels by Pathe.

Mollie King is seen in "The Seven Pearls" No. 12, "Buried Alive" with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra.

The Lonesome Luke two-reel comedy is called "We Never Sleep." It was produced by Rolin, with Harold Lloyd appearing as Lonesome Luke. Harry Pollard is Snub.

"Fishing in Japan" and "Along the Tagus" (Portugal), form a split reel.

The four articles in Argus Pictorial No. 2, the unique screen magazine in one reel, are "Fighting Forest Fires," "Spearing Eels," "Stenciling" as demonstrated by Professor Thatcher, Department of Fine Arts in Columbia University, and "Pride Goeth Before a Fall," a sad tale of Helena Smith Dayton's "Clay Folk."

An International Cartoon and Educational and Hearst Pathe News No. 98 and No. 99 complete this program.

Tom Mix Begins Work as Fox Star in Western Dramas

Tom Mix, termed by some the horseman extraordinary, began work last week, it was announced, as a star in Western dramas for William Fox. Wanda Petit will be the leading woman in the company. Miss Petit has a list of successes to her credit, her last appearance having been opposite George Walsh in "This Is the Life."

Mix's director will be Edward J. LeSaint, who had a long stage career prior to his entrance in the motion picture field. Mr. LeSaint has screened dozens of productions for several of the leading film producers. Tom Mix's photoplays will be made in the Fox studios on the West Coast.

Tom Mix holds a unique position in the screen world. He is not only a cowboy, but is recognized as a player of talent and individuality. As a portrayer of a distinct phase of American life he is said to stand among the foremost in a rapidly disappearing class.

Mr. Fox has, it is said, provided a new and absorbing drama for Mix, written by George Scarborough. The action of the story commences in the middle west and leads to the more rugged territory of the mountains themselves. It is said to be replete with thrilling incidents and adventure and tells a deeply human tale.

Prominent in the supporting company, in addition to Miss Petit will be Verne Messereau, Al Padgett and Dick Crawford.

Big Set Erected for Metro's Feature, "Daybreak"

A large five-room set was erected at the Metro Studios for the staging of important scenes in "Daybreak," the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, which is being made into a five-act Metro wonderplay under the direction of Albert Capellani. The stage play was adapted for the screen by Jane Mathis and Mr. Capellani.

This pretentious set was designed and erected under the supervision of Edward J. Shulter, technical director for Metro. It represents the first floor of the Riverside Drive residence of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Frome (Julian L'Estrange and Emily Stevens), and much of the vital action of this play takes place in these rooms.

Vivian Reed and Eddie Polo Are Stars of the New Universal Serial, "The Bull's Eye"

Pathe Promises Thrills in Irene Castle Release

In addition to an interest-holding story of high finance and society, and the clothes worn by the star, "Vengeance is Mine," the release of the Irene Castle-Pathe plays series of five-reelers scheduled for December 16, is said to offer some of the best thrills yet seen in the Castle pictures.

Probably the most daring feats yet accomplished by Mrs. Castle in making her Pathe features are shown in this picture.

To prove her father's innocence of a crime of which he was accused by unscrupulous financiers, she goes under an assumed name to the home of the man who ruined him. His daughter, whom the heroine knew at school, loses her paddle and her canoe is carried down the stream and over the dam. In these scenes Mrs. Castle dives thirty feet into the rapids near Boonton, N. J., and rescues Helene Chadwick, who plays the other role. The pool in which she does this is said by the natives to be bottomless.

"Seven Pearls" Holds Interest of Audiences

That "The Seven Pearls," Pathe's serial featuring Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, released in September, holds the interest of audiences throughout the country, is evident from reports from the exhibitors in all sections. The manager of the Beacon Theatre, Boston, Mass., reports as follows: "'The Seven Pearls' very good; interest well retained."

The work of Leon Bary has received favorable comment, and his followers in "The Shielding Shadow" and "Mystery of the Double Cross" have transferred their interest to "The Seven Pearls." He is known as one of the most versatile "screen villains" of the day. Audiences of the legitimate theatre remember him for his work as leading man with Sarah Bernhardt in some of her tours of America.

Broadway Theatre Shows Bluebird and Butterfly

The Broadway Theatre, on Broadway, New York, is this week presenting "The Scarlet Car" and "The Wolf and His Mate." The former, a Bluebird production, is a picturization of the novel by Richard Harding Davis. The story is said to abound in stirring adventure and mystery with romance enough to keep the dashing hero on the jump. Franklyn Farnum plays the leading role. "The Wolf and His Mate," for which Louise Lovely acted before the camera, is a Butterfly production in five reels.

The usual short subjects, the weekly news events, scenic and educational pictures and a comic are also given.

Vitagraph Engages Louise Du Pre for Williams Film

Louise Du Pre, well known in stock circles, has been engaged by Tom Mills for the part of Rosa in the next Earl Williams feature, "The Stars and Their Courses," it was announced last week by C. J. Giegerich. While this will be the first Vitagraph picture in which Miss Du Pre appears, it is not her first attempt at pictures.

Louise Lovely and Hart Hoxie Are the Popular Leads in "Wolves of the North," Universal Subject

Vitagraph Begins Billboard Drive in December

Arrangements Made to Post Twenty-four Sheets in All Towns Over 10,000 Population—Smaller Towns After January 1

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the distributing organization for Greater Vitagraph, makes the announcement this week that the nation-wide billboard campaign in connection with "Vengeance—and the Woman," the new fifteen-episode serial, will begin early in December. Arrangements have been made to post twenty-four sheets in all towns of 10,000 population and upward between Dec. 15 and Jan. 1 and after the later date posting will begin in towns under 10,000.

Mr. Irwin declares that the company proposes to cover twice as many stands as were covered in the campaign for "The Fighting Trail," double and in many cases triple the amount of space being leased all over the country.

The twenty-four sheet, Vitagraph officals believe, is one of the most effective ever gotten out in conjunction with a serial. It is printed in five colors, the background being exceptionally light and bright so that the figures and the lettering stand out with sharpness. William Duncan, star and director, and Carol Holloway, heroine, of the serial, are the dominating figures of the picture presented on the sheet, the sketch showing Miss Holloway on horseback furiously riding to escape capture by two outlaws who pursue her. One of the outlaws has sent a lariat whirling through the air and the noose is poised above the girl's head, seemingly about to fall and pinion her. On the opposite side of the stand is an heroic figure of Duncan just coming out on the plain and apparently halted in horror as he sees the predicament of the girl.

The lettering on the twenty-four sheet describes "Vengeance—and the Woman," which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, as "A Stupendous Melodramatic Photoplay Serial." At the bottom of the twenty-four sheet, in the left-hand corner, a space is provided in which the exhibitor may snipe the name of his theatre and the date of the serial's showing.

In addition to posting these thousands of sheets Vitagraph has arranged for a surplus of them to be given free to exhibitors who desire to supplement the posting in their immediate neighborhood.

Brenon Completes Cast for Forbes-Robertson Film

Herbert Brenon has been putting the finishing touches on the cast of his forthcoming production of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which Sir Johnstone Forbes-Robertson is to appear in his characterization of the Stranger.

In addition to Sir Johnston and Molly Pearson, whose engagements have already been announced, Ketty Galanta, who made her screen debut in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," and is soon to be seen as "Maryla" in "Empty Pockets," will play Vivian, and Grace Stephens and Ben Graham are to be the Major and Mrs. Tompkins, respectively. Miss Kite, the painted lady, will be played by Ricca Allen, and Mrs. Sharpe, the landlady, by Augusta Haviland. Dora Mills Adams has been chosen for the part of the aristocratic Miss de Hooley, while Germaine Bourville is to be the sister.

The rôles of Jape Samuels, Larkoom and Joey Wright will be played by Sydney Golden, Thornton Bastion and Robert Fisher.

This comprises the entire company, with the exception of Christopher Penny, the young artist, who has yet to be cast.

Emily Stevens, the Well Liked Emotional Star, Is Said to be Given Ample Sphere for Her Exceptional Talent in "Alias Mrs. Jessop," a Metro Feature

Metro Chooses Unusual Cast for "Gaston Olaf"

Harold Lockwood Is Star of the Production, Which Fred J. Balshofer Adapted to Screen—Francis Ford Is Directing

WHAT Metro describes as a superb cast has been engaged to appear in support of Harold Lockwood in his forthcoming Metro production, "The Avenging Trail," an adaptation by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo of Henry Oyen's novel of the North Woods, "Gaston Olaf," now in course of being screened under the direction of Francis Ford.

Mr. Lockwood, of course, plays "Gaston Olaf," and in this he is said to have the most powerful rôle of his eight years before the camera. Gaston Olaf is a man of the woods, a fine specimen of physical manhood, with a well developed sense of justice and of undaunted courage when pitted against wrong-doers.

Mr. Lockwood's leading woman is Sally Crute, whose six years' experience both as leading woman with Lubin, Edison and other companies and as a player prominent in Metro wonderplays, notably "A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro and "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana, have made her name familiar with picture followers throughout the country. Miss Crute plays Rose Havens.

Joe Dailey is cast for the part of Tom Pine, Gaston Olaf's partner. Mr. Dailey is an old stock favorite and also a picture player of note, having appeared in Biograph, Metro and other company's productions.

The heavy rôle of Taggart is interpreted by Walter Lewis, another player with long stage and picture experience.

Warren Cook, who has been seen in support of many of the screen's biggest stars, and who was prominent in Metro's "Draft 258" and "The Snowbird" is cast for Dr. Saunders.

William Clifford, remembered for his old tutor in Mr. Lockwood's recent picture, "Paradise Garden," plays Hale, the storekeeper, while Art Ortego, who has played in many Metro productions, is also cast for an important part.

Still another Metro players cast for "The Avenging Trail" is Tom Blake, who played throughout the entire Bushman and Bayne serial, "The Great Secret" as "Bull Whalen," one of the secret seven. Mr. Blake's most recent Metro picture is "Blue Jeans" starring Viola Dana.

Fairbanks' Next Artcraft Comes in December

"The Modern Musketeer" Is Scheduled for Release on Last Day of the Old Year—Is Allan Dwan's First Artcraft Film

FOLLOWING the current Douglas Fairbanks release, "Reaching for the Moon," Walter E. Green, president of Artcraft Pictures, has announced that the next Fairbanks picture, "The Modern Musketeer," has been scheduled for release on December 31.

This production is now being staged at Grand Canyon, Ariz., and is expected to prove the most beautiful picture, in the way of natural backgrounds, in which the acrobatic actor has ever appeared. In the new photoplay Douglas Fairbanks has the role of Ned Thacker, a youth from Kansas who inherited the spirit of D'Artagnan through parental influence, his mother having been an ardent reader of Dumas works. The self-reliance of the modern woman as compared with her sister in past generations, is said to be strikingly shown, for in many cases the chivalry of the modern D'Artagnan is mistaken, and his gallant attempts to assist ladies in distress lead to rebukes from the independent maidens who are on the alert to squelch flirtatious youths.

In addition to its other features, this production will mark the initial efforts of Allan Dwan as a director of Douglas Fairbanks pictures for Artcraft release. Not only is Mr. Dwan staging the picture, but he is the author of the story as well.

Prior to Douglas Fairbanks's affiliation with Artcraft, Mr. Dwan staged several photoplays for him. He has an enviable reputation as a producer of cinema features, and is himself an athlete of no little repute. In the cast of his first Fairbanks-Artcraft subject are Marjorie Daw, Kathleen Kirkham, Frank Campeau, Eugene Ormonde and Tully Marshall.

Paramount-Bray Show Mounted Police in Action

In the ninety-fifth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "The-Magazine-on-the-Screen," the training of the mounted police of New York is shown in detail and it is said that the film is one of the most interesting that has ever been released. The work of stopping runaways, and similar dangerous feats, are shown in this subject.

J. V. Leventhal, of the Paramount Bray Studios, Inc., with the assistance of the Popular Science Monthly, has animated for the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, ninety-fifth release, drawings portraying the operation of the gasoline motor in all its various functions.

Blackwell Completes Second Year as World Star

On Wednesday, November 14, Carlyle Blackwell completed his second year as a star of World-Pictures. "And," said Mr. Blackwell by the way of showing what an unusual figure he is in the moving picture world, "I expect to be where I am for another year or longer. In my next contract I hope to figure on not quite as many pictures (this year I have acted in thirteen, which makes the work rather too constant), but I do not wish to change bosses. Another thing is that I am not going to ask for more money. In the first place, I get all I want, and in the second, if I received four times as much as I do I'd be broke most of the time anyway—so why fret about more?"

Essanay Completes Short Comedies for General Film

Three of a series of Essanay one-reel comedies have been completed for release through General Film. These are of the slapstick variety, inaugurating what are said to be some new types of rapid-action comedy, and are titled "Hard Luck," "The General" and "All Aboard."

Featuring Amedee Rastrelli, the French comedian, they are produced by Arthur Hotaling, whose theories regarding light comedy are said to be out of the ordinary. It is claimed Mr. Hotaling does not underestimate the importance of plot. Along with the rapid action and rough and tumbling in each comedy, he believes in a story that is farcical and complicated.

Holmes Returns to Chicago for Spoor Feature

Taylor Holmes, former stage comedian, now being featured in Essanay sanay comedy-dramas, has returned to Chicago from New York where he has been at work, since completing his last picture, in selecting the cast for the George K. Spoor special production, the picturization of "Ruggles of Red Gap," by Harry Leon Wilson, which ran as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post and was published in book form, and in which Mr. Holmes will take the part of "Ruggles."

For the part of "The Honorable George" Mr. Holmes has engaged Lawrence D'Orsay, known for his parts in "The Earl of Pawtucket," "The Embassy Ball," "The Rented Earl" and other productions.

Frederick Burton, the comedian of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Sky Farm" and other successes, will be seen as the "Cousin Egbert" of the production. Mr. Burton, at the time of receiving Mr. Holmes's offer was engaged in a stellar rôle of "The Arabian Nights" at the Punch and Judy theatre, in New York, but an amicable agreement was reached with his management and he will start work with Essanay immediately. Both Mr. D'Orsay and Mr. Burton will have the part they had in the Shubert dramatization of the story for the stage.

Edna Phillips, also widely known to legitimate stage, will be seen in the part of "Klondike Kate," and Miss Lillian Drew, an Essanay player, will have the part of "Miss Effie."

A number of parts still remain to be chosen and Mr. Holmes is securing the stage and picture world for the best possible support for his part of "Ruggles."

The entire company will leave soon, it is said, for location in Arizona where the exteriors will be taken under the direction of L. C. Windom.

Director Edwards Begins "Evidence" for Triangle

Director Walter Edwards, Triangle director, who recently completed "I Love You," a story of life in southern Italy and France, in which Alma Ruebens has the leading role, has begun work on the West Coast on "Evidence," a new play by Jack Cunningham, which promises to be one of the most interesting of the forthcoming Triangle productions. Cunningham also did the continuity.

J. Barney Sherry will appear in "Evidence" as a lawyer and will be supported by Audelle Higgins, Pauline Starke, Eugene Corey and Howard Davies. Miss Higgins and Davies are new faces at the Triangle studio.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Triangle Starts December with Desmond Film

Will Follow "The Sudden Gentleman" with Marine Feature Called "The Ship of Doom"—Comedies Round Out Program

TRIANGLE plans to open its December program with two features which will probably make a wide appeal. "The Sudden Gentleman," featuring William Desmond, with Mary McIvor and Jack Richardson in the supporting cast, is scheduled as the first release of the week of December 2, followed by a rapid-action marine called "The Ship of Doom," which will present Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading roles.

Desmond, who has nineteen Triangle features to his credit, has come in for a large share of admiration from the ladies' side of picture houses throughout the country, and his muscular personality has a certain genial quality which also appeals to male critics of the screen. In "The Sudden Gentleman" he is said to have an opportunity to do some character work which is right in line with his early training, and it may be expected that the genial Bill will smile the better for the background of his newest play.

In "The Ship of Doom," written and directed by Wyndham Gittens, Triangle has produced, it is said, some remarkable photographic effects. The story is based on the rash action of a jealous suitor whose affection for the coquette of a fishing village leads him into a struggle in which his rival is fatally stabbed before he loses his balance and falls from a high cliff into the sea. To escape punishment, Martin Shaw accompanied by the girl, rows out to sea, and manage to get aboard a derelict launch just as a terrific storm breaks.

Supporting Monte Blue and Claire McDowell in the leading rôles are Aaron Edwards, Frank Brownlee and a capable cast of assisting players.

Lovers of the ridiculous will no doubt find great satisfaction in the way Mal St. Claire makes things hot for Eddie Gribbon, the stalwart hero of "An Iceman's Bride," by Keystone comedy for the week. As the eccentric soda-mixer, Mal falls in love with the alluring cashier, Alatia Marton, and mixes up more than plain sodas in the complications which follow.

"An Officer's Mess" and "Sauce for the Goose" will also be released on the regular program for December 2 as one-reel Triangle Komedies.

Essanay Completes Entire December Schedule

In List Are Two Comedy-Dramas, Featuring Taylor Holmes and Little Mary McAlister—Novelty Picture Is Included

ESSANAY announced last week that it now has ready for exhibitors its entire December program, and work is well under way on the first pictures of the new year. In the December list are two comedy-dramas, "The Small Town Guy," featuring Taylor Holmes, and "Sadie Goes to Heaven," Little Mary McAlister's latest picture, and "The Dream Doll," a novelty picture with "living" dolls.

"The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes's fourth picture, is said to show the comedian in a new role, that of a rube, as the title implies, and offers new opportunities for his art. The play is from the novelette, "A Picture of Innocence," in Munsey's Magazine, and has a screen time of sixty-five minutes. It is a Perfection picture, and will be released December 3 through branches of the George Kleine System.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven" also offers, it is claimed, new opportunities for six-year-old Mary McAlister, in that she plays the part of a child of the tenements, and then is seen in the home of a rich matron. "Sadies Goes to Heaven" is from the pen of Dana Burnet, and was published in Good Housekeeping. It has a screen time of sixty-five minutes, and will be released December 24.

"The Dream Doll," in which dolls have a major part of the screen time, is the work of Howard S. Moss, an expert dollmaker and the inventor of the system by which the manikins appear as lifelike on the screen. Essanay players also have parts in the picture being used to carry out the plot of the play. "The Dream Doll" is a Perfection Picture, and will be released December 10. It has a screen time of approximately sixty-five minutes.

Other Essanay December releases are an Essanay-Chaplin, "In the Park," and a weekly scenic, and a slapstick comedy to be released through the General Film Company. "In the Park" will be released December 8.

The fifteen-minute scenic releases are "Lake Louise," for December 1, and "Banff National Park," for December 8.

William Fox Releases "Troublemakers" on December 9

It was announced last week by William Fox that "Troublemakers," a Standard picture, will be ready for release December 9.

Jane and Katherine Lee are presented as the "troublemakers," and reports from Fox Studios indicate that in this comedy-drama, as in their other pictures, they have lived up to the title. A cast of adults support the little stars.

"Troublemakers" was written especially for the Fox youthful stars by their director, Kenean Buel, and deals with the life story of a widow and her two children.

Superb Fight Figures in New Metro Pictures Release

What is described by Metro as "one of the most superb fights ever shown on the screen," will be uncovered in "God's Outlaw," the Metro wonderplay starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which is scheduled for release in December. In this five-act feature production, Mr. Bushman plays the part of a country sheriff, Andrew Craig, a man whose trusty "right" carries a punch as strong as his convictions. The sheriff has an encounter with the "bad man" of the village, a blacksmith with muscles "strong as iron bands," like those celebrated by Longfellow.

Bruce Returns to New York with Travel Films

Journey of Fifteen Thousand Miles Netted Remarkable Negatives Which He Plans to Release During Next Three Months

ROBERT C. BRUCE of the Educational Films Corporation of America, whose many extraordinarily interesting scenics and travelogues have been a feature of this company's since its inception returned to New York on Monday, November 19, after being gone for nine months on a 15,000-mile journey on which he approximately encircled the United States. Mr. Bruce returns with between twenty and twenty-five thousand feet of negative which he will prepare for release during the next two or three months.

Some few of the pictures taken on this trip have already been whipped into shape and issued by Educational, but as Mr. Bruce believes that half the merit in his releases lies in the subtitling and editing, the majority of his negative has been preserved in its original form safely in the vaults of the Educational awaiting the editing of the producer himself. It will be remembered that Mr. Bruce was probably the first producer of scenics to instill in them the human interest and comedy touches that have since been extensively copied by other firms.

The first leg of Mr. Bruce's trip took him south from New York to Florida. From here he headed west through the southern states, across the waste stretches of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona and north through California. This portion of the trip was made by automobile but when the mountain ranges of the northwestern states were reached the car was generally discarded for the pack team, by means of which he penetrated deep into the distant recesses of the wilds. It was on this part of the journey, Mr. Bruce says, that he procured some of the best stuff on his trip.

"A sample is 'Me and My Dog,' added Mr. Bruce, "a little novelty in which a man and his dog, a Great Dane, wander up mountains and down, first ascending the highest peaks and gazing into the valleys below."

The trade, part of it at least, has already had the opportunity of seeing this magnificent picture, which has been universally pronounced the finest of its kind ever shown. It comprised an important part of the bill at the Rialto theatre two weeks ago and the beautiful photographic effects secured by Mr. Bruce were heralded by outbursts of applause from an unusually enthusiastic audience.

There will be more reels of the same calibre, Mr. Bruce asserted, secured in the states of Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. That these will be eagerly awaited by a trade which has come to realize that Mr. Bruce is not only a maker of scenics but an artistic creator with a sound appreciation of human interest values, is a foregone conclusion.

Physical Culture Film Proves to Be a Success

The Bernarr Macfadden "Physical Culture Screen Magazine," issued by General Film Company, has already, it appears, established itself as a high-grade program feature. Many bookings have been received for the first issue, chief among which is that of the New Grand Central theatre of St. Louis, reported by H. E. Elder, branch manager for General Film. Each month's issue of the "Physical Culture Screen Magazine" will be shown for a week in this theatre, which features only high-class productions. The first issue had a very successful reception there the week of November 19.

Hearst-Pathe News Shows Touch of Gold Fever

One of the scenes included in the Hearst-Pathe News, No. 94, announced last week, is laid in the gold region around Sacramento, Cal., and shows through what minute processes gold-bearing earth passes in the steady search for more gold. One day's find is estimated to be worth ten thousand dollars.

Other scenes in this reel are taken at Washington, Travers Island, N. Y., in France, in Italy, Los Angeles, Plattsburgh, N. Y., St. Louis, and in Pennsylvania.

Universal Weekly Proves Variety Spice of Life

Variety is the keynote of the Universal Animated Weekly No. 99, released November 21, with the scenes proving to be among the most interesting the reel has presented in some time. In addition to the war subjects, other things of timely interest are shown.

Among the titles are: "Soldiers of the Sea Enlist Army Mules of Steel," "Enthusiasm Marks Minute Men's Opening Drive for More Marines," "Labor's Chief Arbiter Sees Wonders of Filmdom," "Skidding for the 5:15," "War Dims Lights on Broadway," "Apostle of Humanitarian Creed to Eliminate Needless Misery," "All's Well, Pershing," and cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Smith and Remington Join E. I. S. Corporation

L. G. Harkness Smith and Emory B. Remington, it was announced last week, have joined the sales forces of the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, at 203 West Fortieth street.

Mr. Smith was vice-president of the Motion Picture Specialty Company, and Mr. Remington was for twenty years with the J. Walter Thompson Advertising Company.

A Novel, Unique and Interesting Scene in Universal's Screen Magazine No. 50, Called "From Paris to Peru for Fashions"

Argus Pictorial Widely Varied in Subjects

Argus Pictorial No. 2, released by Pathe on November 25, contains four subjects of varied interest. The first shows the cause and prevention of forest fires.

This is followed by a story showing how eels are caught in winter. Starting with a diagram which shows how eels hibernate in the soft mud under eight or ten feet of water, the picture goes on to tell how the eels are caught through the ice and by a multi-pronged spear the eels are rudely awakened from their winter's sleep.

Professor R. H. Thatcher of the Department of Fine and Applied Arts of Teachers' College, New York, demonstrates in a very clear manner the ancient art of stencilling, and compares the modern work to that of the Japanese by whom it was originated.

Gaumont-Mutual Keeps Up with Advance of War

Keeping abreast of the times, the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is apparently pleasing its patrons by devoting a big part of every issue to scenes of preparation for and actual fighting in the great conflict.

Number 152 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which was released November 25, contains several pictures relating to the conduct of the war "behind the lines." The Ordnance Department and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing show two extremes: the former making big guns to annihilate the enemy, and the latter turning out Liberty Bonds which make possible the actual "sinews of war."

Many thousands of extra clerks have been employed to handle the enormous mass of detail connected with the formation of a big army, and Uncle Sam has found it necessary to erect many huge buildings in Washington to house this increased force.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

A SCENIC THAT'S DIFFERENT

The title card that is not merely a picture, but a picture in motion is something new and very pleasing. The cameraman responsible for "The Land of Enchantment" (Educational Films Corporation) didn't leave the titling of his various beautiful pictures of the Yosemite to the man who makes the cards. He rigged up, or perhaps he found ready to his hand, signboards of rough-barked timber where wise little owls sit blinking and tiny squirrels frisk through knotholes.

But his interest in wild life doesn't prevent his doing full justice to the magnificent vistas and famous waterfalls of the Park. One splendid picture follows another, and a gorgeous whirl of rapids and flying spray forms a fine climax.

THE TRACTOR TWO-STEPS

And more than that! The Government isn't taking any chances of its caterpillar tractors falling down on the job for lack of experience, so no detail of difficulty is omitted from the tests to which the machines (Paramount-Bray Pictograph, No. 94) are put. They crash through a forest of young trees, dive into trench holes, and haul themselves out, careen over the rough ground like a ship in a heavy sea, and anon stand on their hind wheels and paw the air.

One of the most practical of the "Hints to Housewives" is a demonstration of how to preserve eggs for future use. Eggs "laid down" in a preparation of water glass will be absolutely fresh six months or more later.

"A hat in a hurry" might be the motto of the West Indian natives, who make headgear of slit palmetto leaves. So dexterous are they, however, that the result—a loosely braided hat adorned with flowers fashioned from the same material, is not only pretty but becoming.

Fido Bumps entertains a few friends at a birthday party. The feast is not an unmixed joy.

MOST ESPECIALLY FOR YOUNGSTERS

Paramount-Bray Pictograph, No. 95, is so very, very thrilling and interesting that we have no wish to class it exclusively as a juvenile, but just the same there isn't a boy or girl, especially a girl of to-day, who wouldn't enjoy every inch of it.

First of all, there is a combination Wild West show and medieval tournament, the actors being New York City Mounted Police. Then there are some very interesting pictures showing how boys and girls devote their after-school hours to making trench candles, twelve cents' worth of tallow and a package of old newspapers making thirty candles, each of which will burn an hour and light up a trench for a lonely poilu or enable the surgeon of a base hospital to perform the operation that may save a life.

Last, but most wonderful, are J. F. Leventhal's drawings illustrating the principle and operation of the gas engine. After all, a cylinder is nothing but a cannon stood on end, and the explosion that takes place in the latter is exactly like the little explosions that propel the piston of the former. Theoretically, every one knows this, but we doubt whether the most learned and expert could demonstrate it as cleverly, as clearly, and as entertainingly as Mr. Leventhal.

GLIMPSES FROM "OVER THERE"

If it is only a peep behind the curtain that hangs over Russia, still, the scenes in Hearst-Pathe News, No. 93, showing crowds in Petrograd gathering to hear Kerensky are timely and vividly interesting. More optimistic in tone are views along the liberated sections of France on the occasion of a visit by President Marchado, of Portugal. In contrast to the physical desolation is the spirited bearing of the French troops as they march in review, helmets on heads and long rifles over their shoulders.

Domestic activities are illustrated by pictures of the large rice harvest in Arkansas and the ostrich farms of California.

If any exhibitor fails to find the ostriches on his reel, it is because there has been substituted a picture of life in the army camp located near his own exchange.

FOR FOOD, SO THEY SAY

May be it's true, as Gaumont Weekly, No. 151, tells us, but begging its pardon we doubt it. To wit, that the big flocks of ostriches out in California that used to furnish us with feathers are now to take their place on the meat stalls in the markets.

Be that as it may, we certainly do appreciate the toothsome dates that California is sending us. Here they are being gathered by pretty young girls, who perform their Oriental task in costumes as appropriate as they are becoming.

Among the many activities of the army, Gaumont shows us how our boys are learning to manipulate the useful observation balloon from the ground up, as it were. We see them laying out the great silk bag and making connections to inflate it. Soon after, it is "All aboard," and, with the camera, we go sailing into the clouds with them. Over in France work becomes harder, and trench life the real thing when the boys not only construct the trenches, but spend three days at a stretch in them, eating and sleeping in the cramped quarters. The "trench crouch," very amusing to watch, as it is practised in the open, is exercise of the most strenuous for the men who take it.

Beauty and the Beast

¶ Contrast is all right in its place.

¶ For example, after a harrowing melodrama you usually brighten your patrons' spirits by giving them a rip-snorting comedy.

¶ During the melodrama you play harrowing, quivery music.

¶ During the comedy you play jazz or lively ragtime.

¶ But you don't mix up the music and pictures—do you?

¶ You don't accompany a tender love scene with music fit for a wild night on the ocean.

¶ At least, you don't make these mistakes if you follow the suggestions and cue-sheets in the Music Department as every live exhibitor should.

¶ It's in the back of the book, waiting for you—

COURAGE OF SORTS

The ever-fascinating caterpillar "mules" appear to excellent advantage in Universal Animated Weekly, No. 99, where they trample down young forests in the service of the United States Marine Corps. Artillery practice follows quickly, while over at the rifle range the rows of targets display a fine lot of bull's-eyes.

William Wood, of New Bedford, Mass., though deprived of both legs, lacks nothing in pluck and ingenuity. With a little contrivance on wheels he gets over the ground in fine shape and makes a dash for his train, that even a sound-limbed man might hesitate to take.

Dr. Haiselden, who has consistently and boldly proclaimed that the highest humanity permits the death of infants born only to suffering and idiocy, is pictured in loving intimacy with the little girl who by adoption has become his own daughter.

The only Hy Mayer, who has no equal among cartoonists either in technique or in trenchancy of thought, fittingly celebrates the attainment of the "Height of Liberty" by New York State.

BOYS, BOATS, AND BALLOONS

A pleasant sight, indeed, is the company of Boy Scouts who (Hearst-Pathe News, No. 94) march out abreast, right face, and fall, not upon real or imaginary enemies, but a field of fine corn-stalks, the result of the boys' own summer toil. A 10,000 bushel crop of splendid corn, if one may judge by the sample ears shown, is the patriotic result.

Boys less fortunate in their early years and sent to the National Training School in Washington, D. C., are seen at military drill, passing in review before visiting French officers. They appear a fine battalion.

Most Zeppelins are destroyed, if hurt at all, in mid-air, falling in a mass of blazing wreckage. But one monster was recently brought to French earth practically intact. A number of pictures display its huge bulk and the contrivances which guided it.

Ships of the sea are more than ever urgently needed. Pictures taken in Italy show how she is pushing the work of construction and what speed is attained by her scouts and destroyers. Thirty-eight miles an hour is the record of the one here shown in action.

EFFORT AND CONSECRATION

Universal Current Events, No. 28, is so uniformly interesting that we don't know just what bits to choose for special mention. Our thrifty soul enjoyed the sight of ordinary "scrap"—tin foil, old rubber, and the like being collected by the Red Cross to sell for its own ends. Also we approved the knitting firemen, who between spells of turning on the hose turn out sweaters and mufflers for the boys in camp.

The interior of a railway hospital parallels those pictures previously shown by Universal of dental ambulances and field kitchens. Each train carries its own operating car; each hospital car is provided with comfortable beds and wide windows admitting the healthful sunlight.

The tragedy across the sea comes nearer every day. Again we are reminded of that gallant spirit, the Aviator Guynemer, when his favorite plane, "Old Charley," is honored with floral wreaths by the little group of American fliers, Thaw, Lufberry, and others, who shared honors with him. Following immediately on this pathetic scene are views of devastated, but triumphant France, the ruins of a famous castle, the last rites over the body of an unknown poilu. The never-dying exhortation of Lincoln at Gettysburg are eloquent commentary on these scenes of desolation and consecration.

GOOD TITLING PLAYS ITS PART

He has no lime light other than the evil flare of the forest fires that he fights, but nevertheless there is no braver man and few more capable than the Government Forest Ranger. In Universal Screen Magazine No. 47 we get picturesque glimpses of his busy life in the vast wooded districts of the West. All as part of the day's work he strings telephone lines, dams streams and builds bridges from home-trimmed timber. When evening falls and finds him many miles from home and family he must perforce turn cook and bottle washer. The film is the first of a series taken by the Universal Company, with the cooperation of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The wonderful machinery that is helping us rush supplies to the Allies is shown in a very striking manner in pictures dealing with the shipping of iron ore from Minnesota to the Pennsylvania smelters. Great unloaders, handling seventeen tons at a swing, lift the ore from the vessel to the weighing hopper, whence it is dumped to the railroad cars or taken up by buckets across the great cantilever bridge. The intelligent and witty titling of the foregoing subjects adds very much to their interest, filling out by suggestion or direct information the subject illustrated

A film on corset making, pictures of petrified sea lilies twenty-five million years old, and the entertaining Miracles in Mud complete the reel.

NEWS NOTES FROM CANADA

Manager Cronk Opens New Theatre in Toronto

The new Allen theatre, the first downtown theatre in Toronto to be erected exclusively for the presentation of moving pictures, was opened on November 10 under most auspicious circumstances, great crowds filling the amphitheatre for two performances.

There was no special ceremony to commemorate the birth of this theatre. Mr. Cronk, the manager, states: "The people I want to see at the first performance are those whom I may expect to see in the theatre the following week and the following, I do not want to have it said that our prospective patrons were not given a lookin on the opening night. If the theatre is good enough for them afterwards, it is good enough for them when the first picture is screened."

Luigi Romanelli has been appointed musical director and has an orchestra of sixteen pieces. Roland Todd, an artist of renown, is the organist. A feature of the opening musical program was a pianoforte number by Estell Beder, the young Russian concert pianist. The feature film of the opening program was Mary Pickford in "The Little American," while a Christie Comedy was shown and the "Allen Library of Knowledge and Current Events," which included the Universal Screen Magazine and Gaumont views.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Breezy Items

E. R. Fauser, managing director of the Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., of Vancouver, B. C., distributors of Fox productions, announces that the Fox comedies are being distributed throughout western Canada and a strong demand for them is evidenced.

The exchange managers in Winnipeg have announced that commencing on Monday, November 12, all exchanges in this city are putting into force the C. O. D. or advance system for all service.

Mr. Thompson, who has been manager of the Rialto in Montreal since its inception, has severed his connection with that theatre and is now looking up several prospects.

Dave Mandelson, formerly salesman with the Montreal Famous Players Film Service, has severed his connection with that firm and has been appointed assistant to A. H. Fischer, general sales manager of the Independent Film Service.

Private Roland Bottomley of the Canadian Army, now stationed in Toronto, is earning a proud name for himself locally because of his generous spirit in helping out with various patriotic entertainments. The former Pathe star has been seen of the boards two and three times a week during the past month.

The nearest semblance to a Sunday patriotic entertainment in a Toronto theatre for many months was the sixth annual Christmas Mail and Naval Festival Service at the Strand theatre on Sunday night, November 4. A number of war films and several pictures of naval cadets were screened, after which picture postcards were distributed to be sent to relatives and friends in the British Navy.

The Globe Film Company, Limited, which has branches in the six important cities of the Dominion, announce that they have obtained the Canadian rights for the six-reel release "Libertine," which was produced by John Steger.

Many applicants are in the field for the position on the Manitoba Censor Board, rendered vacant by the recent death of W. J. Horne, chairman of the board.

A. Cohen, formerly chief operator at the Allen theatre, Calgary, Alta., has been appointed in a similar position with the new Allen theatre, here, which opened on November 10.

The Imperial theatre, Montreal, has a new and distinguished orchestra leader in the person of Henri Delcellier, a veteran of the French Army in the present war and winner of the Croix de Guerre. He was formerly musical director of two theatres in Paris, France, the Theatre De Varieties and the Casino. He has also been the choir master of the Montreal Opera Company.

The managers of thirty-four theatres in Montreal have offered the use of their houses at any or every performance to the Victory Loan Campaign Committee of Montreal for five-minute patriotic speeches by prominent speakers. The offer was quickly accepted.

Herb Allen and Louise Rosenfeld, both of the Toronto office of the Famous Players Film Service, were in Montreal recently looking over the film situation.

Harry Price of the Monarch Film Co., Montreal, went to Quebec last week on a business trip.

J. Bedard of the Olympia theatre, Quebec, was in Montreal last week.

Vancouver Exhibitors Educate Public in Tax

The new Exhibitors' Association of Vancouver has already made a start in its campaign to educate the public in the matter of the new war tax, which is going into force in that province. The association is going into this matter very thoroughly, and there is no doubt that the industry as a whole will benefit by its action.

War Tax in U. S. Hits Canadian Industry Hard

The announcement by the United States Treasury Department that the United States War Tax, as provided under the War Emergency Revenue Act of October 3, is to apply on all export as well as domestic films, came as a blow to the Canadian film industry.

For practically three years, the Canadian film industry has been laboring under a heavy tax levied by the Canadian Government, and the exchangemen, as well as the exhibitors, realize that with the new United States war tax added, it is going to make the burden almost unbearable. It is common knowledge that in average cases, the duty, war tax, censor shipping and other charges on a reel of film amounts to a greater sum in Canada than the original cost charge made by a film company to its branch in the Dominion, even before the United States war tax was levied.

In Ontario, the annual license fee for an exchange is $150. In Quebec the same fee is $250. In five other provinces there is also a stiff license fee for all exchanges, as well as theatres. In Quebec the fee for the censoring of pictures is $2.50 per reel. In Ontario the charge is $2.00 per reel. If a film distributing company opens branches in the six important cities in the Dominion, which is usually the case, the total fee for exchange licenses runs up to $1,500. In addition city license fees for exchanges are charged in St. John, Montreal, Winnipeg, Regina and Vancouver. The censor fees in seven provinces vary from 50 cents to $2.50.

This new United States war tax which has been imposed on the Canadian industry has brought a crisis to the trade in Canada, which will have to be dealt with, with the utmost care and which will no doubt mean the cutting off of a number of the short reel subjects.

Dominion Exclusives Does Well with Fox Film

Dominion Exclusives, Ltd., of Vancouver, Calgary and Winnipeg, distributors of Fox productions in western Canada, report that "A Tale of Two Cities" continues to be a powerful drawing card. This spectacle has been booked to show in all the leading theatres in western Canada and is being received with enthusiasm by both exhibitor and picture public.

In Vancouver, "A Tale of Two Cities" was used together with "The Birth of a Nation," by the Debating Club of the King Edward High School on the subject of whether or not "The Motion Picture Shows Were an Asset to Education." The judges of the debate gave the decision to the affirmative.

It was an intensely interesting debate, almost every possible feature of educational value being dealt with.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Censorship Holds Stage in the Windy City Loop

The question of censorship in Chicago last week was rather a burning issue, as a subcommittee of the City Council Committee on Judiciary heard its justification from Major Funkhouser and his clubwomen cohorts, and listened to its condemnation from William A. Brady and other producers and exhibitors.

The Committee on Judiciary is holding a series of hearings to get the varying views of the different factions on the censorship problem before reporting back to the City Council. The ordinance which was introduced into the council at its last meeting, prior to the summer vacation, by Alderman Walter P. Steffen, provides that where a picture is judged immoral or obscene, a permit cannot be refused until the picture has been submitted to a board of ten censors, none of whom shall be connected with the police department, and a majority of the board condemns it. The first deputy of police would still issue the permits, but this is hardly enough power to suit the Major.

The first of the hearings, held on Tuesday, November 20, at the council chambers in the City Hall, resolved itself into a vicious drive against the Chicago system of having a board of censors and a man in control with the power to set aside the findings of the board. Mr. Brady fired the opening guns for manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor, and characterized censorship a la Funkhouser as a farce. He branded as libel recent statements made by the Chicago censor before the Irish Fellowship Club, to the effect that the men in the motion picture industry were "dollar mad."

"The motion picture industry does not need censorship," said Mr. Brady. "Give the film manufacturers a chance to display their wares uncensored and the producers will prosecute any man who displays anything immoral or obscene.

"And as for the industry being "dollar mad," it is a libel on an industry that is serving the Government in its crisis without hope of reward and with great effect. The motion picture industry is making happy homes everywhere. In the city of Scranton it has closed up 40 per cent. of the saloons and disorderly houses. In some places it is doing more good than the Y. M. C. A.'s or the churches. It is flashing the Government's food propaganda on 50,000 screens and is co-operating with the army, navy and Red Cross.

"When President Wilson wanted to do something to offset the work of the German spies in southern Russia he turned to the motion picture men. He asked for three men in the business to volunteer to go to France and arrange for the exhibition of reels showing that the United States is in the war and to prove to the Russians that the stories told them by German spies are lies. It was the only way in which the President could reach the Russian armies.

"The three men who were selected gave up positions paying them from $25,000 a year up and receive only a moderate stipend for their government services. Does that sound as though the moving picture men were money mad?"

Herbert J. Friedman, attorney for Chicago Film exchanges, and Lewis F. Jacobson, argued against censorship. Tom Furniss also spoke against the indiscriminate use of the censorial shears. Joe Hopp, president of the Chicago chapter of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, used his knowledge of the film industry in the early days to good advantage in telling how censorship started in Chicago.

Mrs. Guy Blanchard of the Chicago Political Equality League spoke for censorship, and declared that she would produce evidence at the next meeting that would show that film censorship was a necessity.

Pathe Appoints Proctor Branch Manager in Chicago

Ralph O. Proctor, who since January, 1916, had been general manager of the Standard Film Company in Chicago, has been appointed and has taken over his duties as Chicago branch manager for the Pathe Company. Mr. Proctor is one of the most competent and best known film men in the Central West.

Mr. Proctor made his entry into the film business with the old Burton & Webster theatres in Chicago. For two years he remained with them. This initiatory process proved so interesting that he decided to learn the exhibiting game from the bottom up. In consequence, after leaving the Burton and Webster Company, he spent some time as a motion picture operator. After his term of service and acquiring the rudiments in full, he went with the General Film Company, and served in all capacities, ranging from inspector to branch manager in Chicago for two years. He was manager of the office until December, 1915. He then went to Des Moines as special representative there and in Omaha and Kansas City. He later took charge of the Kansas City exchange until May, 1916. He received an offer following that to go with Metro, and he was given the managership of the Chicago office. Leaving Metro he went in as the head of the Standard Film Company in Chicago, distributing Art-Dramas programs throughout the Central West. It was here he was located with R. C. Cropper, head of the Standard Film Company in the Central West until November 19. Quietly, and with much surprise to his friends, he suddenly announced his appointment as branch manager in the Pathe offices, succeeding C. W. Bunn. In Mr. Proctor's place at the Standard Film offices Frank B. Rogers has been installed.

Ernest Reed Stops in Chicago on Tour of Branches

Ernest Reed, managing director of Fox Film Corporation for Great Britain stopped off at Chicago a few days last week while on his annual tour of the Fox centers in the United States. Accompanied by W. H. Engholm, publicity manager for Fox in England, Mr. Reed was observing American methods of distribution and exhibition and giving a few British ideas in exchange.

When asked as to the condition of the picture industry in England, and especially with regard to the exhibiting end, Mr. Reed declared that it was in a very good state, and predicted that it would be just as good in this country as soon as the exhibitor got the scare out of his head.

"We have the tax over there, the same as you have it here," said Mr. Reed, "but we have grown used to it. We've quit worrying about it and as a consequence it doesn't bother us. People have got to relieve their minds from the depressing influence of the war and the moving picture theatre is the spot where they find this temporary respite.

"As for the place of Fox throughout the British Isles, he is looked upon as the exhibitors' friend. I am expecting big things from Standard Pictures over there. We release the first of the Fox kiddie pictures, 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' December 17 and it will have a three weeks' run at one of the largest picture houses in London."

Felton Latest Addition to Wolfberg Sales Forces

William C. Felton has joined the sales forces of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh. Mr. Felton will operate from the Cleveland office, it is announced.

Leaks in the Loop

John R. Freuler, head of Mutual Film Corporation, spent last week in New York casting appraising eyes at several stars with whom he is negotiating. He declares, however, that he is not yet ready to make an announcement, but thinks he may have something to say a little later.

Jackson J. Rose, former Essanay standby on the camera firing line, has completed his first picture for the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, featuring Charlotte, the skater, during the making of which he installed a number of new devices on his Bell & Howell camera. Now when he goes out to shoot a picture it takes a brave actor to keep from running away from the machine; it looks so much like a Gatling gun.

H. E. Granpp, manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Rockford, Ill., was in the Metro Exchange last week on business. He reports that the soldier boys at Camp Grant have increased the patronage of his house a great deal, especially around the week-end periods.

M. J. Mintz, manager of Unity Photoplays Corporation, is back at his desk in his offices in the College Building after a very successful ten-day trip on the road.

Cress Smith of Metro reports that all Ascher and Lubliner & Trinz houses have booked the big patriotic feature production, "Draft 258."

Nate Erber, proprietor of the Lincoln Square Theatre, Decatur, Ill., said to be the largest and finest house in the town, was in Chicago last week booking features and vaudeville acts which he hoped would please his townsmen.

Blaser & Cohen Pictures Corporation are handling the anti-capital punishment film, "Who Shall Take My Life," for Illinois. This story, produced by William N. Selig, opened at the Bandbox Theatre last week for an indefinite run.

J. Milo Slousky, owner of two of the largest houses of Des Moines, Iowa, the Palace and the Family, was in the city last week buying an organ and materials for the remodeling of the Palace. Mr. Slousky, besides being a very successful showman. is also in the automobile business, being the head of the Overland agency on the North Side in Chicago.

J. E. Gerlick, of the J. P. Seeburg Piano Company, in the Republic Building, is on a trip to the West Coast, where for the next four or five weeks he expects to be calling on the trade.

Pathe has a new salesman, John Wessel, who joined them a week ago. He is working Indiana and Michigan, and though new to the game, he says that he likes it very much.

Hazel Daly, who has been spending a few weeks in Vicksburg, Miss., where, under the direction of Harry Beaumont, she has been working on a new state rights feature for Selig, fell off a horse recently and was laid up for three or four days. She is reported better now and the company is expected back in Chicago the latter part of this week.

Another little duty has developed upon the head of W. K. Hill, chief of the service department of Paramount. He was recently asked he would take over everything that has to do with service for the exhibitor, including advertising helps and campaigns, paper, etc., and last but not least, the inspection of films, and Mr. Hill accepted the job. He has shifts now running day and night working the Rex Cleaner in an effort to put all Artcraft and Paramount prints in first-class condition.

Frank Flaherty, pilot of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange in this city, got back in town last week after a five-days' stay in Minneapolis, where he went to establish a branch exchange.

George Gibson and Fred Neiman, formerly at the Rothacker Studios, on the North Side, are now in government service in the photographic laboratories at Washington, D. C.

Arthur Hotaling, new comedy director at Essanay and previously with Lubin, is now directing Amelee Rastrelli, the French comedian, in one-reel comedies.

Abe Teitel, film cleaner, with offices at 112 North La Salle Street, last week received a splendid letter of commendation from the company handling "Intolerance" for his work in virtually making new prints out of the old ones.

H. Tipton Steck, scenario writer for Essanay, with numerous successful stories chalked up to his credit, among the latest of which is "Gift o' Gab," left for New York last week to be gone four or five days.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, delayed his trip to New York last week in order to take his old friends, Alderman Maypole and Alderman Steffen, to the Brady banquet last Monday night. Both men are on the judiciary committee handling the censorship matters of the city. Mr. Rothacker left the next day for New York.

J. S. Skirboll, district manager for Metro, with headquarters in Pittsburgh, was in Chicago last week on an inspection tour. He left here for Kansas City.

Blaine McGrath is the new managing editor of Motography. He is taking the place formerly occupied by Arthur E. Curtis.

Jack Gardner, former musical comedy star, has left Essanay. His last picture, "Gift o' Gab," was ready for release November 26. Mr. Gardner, after a trip to New York, was back in Chicago for the banquet tendered William A. Brady by the Chicago members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Monday, November 19.

Sales Manager E. H. Philippi, of the Rothacker Film Company, is planning on spending his vacation at Excelsior Springs, Mo.

Hamilton Thompson, New York representative and assistant general manager of Fox Film Corporation, spent a few days in Chicago last week while Ernest R. Reed, managing director of Fox in Great Britain, was in the city on his annual tour of the large film centers of America.

Chicago newspapers commented very favorably last week on the moving pictures of the Grand Opera stars, which were made by the Rothacker Film Company under the personal supervision of Vice President M. J. Baumer, who for many years was the official photographer for Chicago Grand Opera.

Fred Wright, successful director, who until a few days ago was with Essanay, is now with Pathe. He left for New York the middle of last week, but expects soon to be working at the Pathe studios on the West Coast.

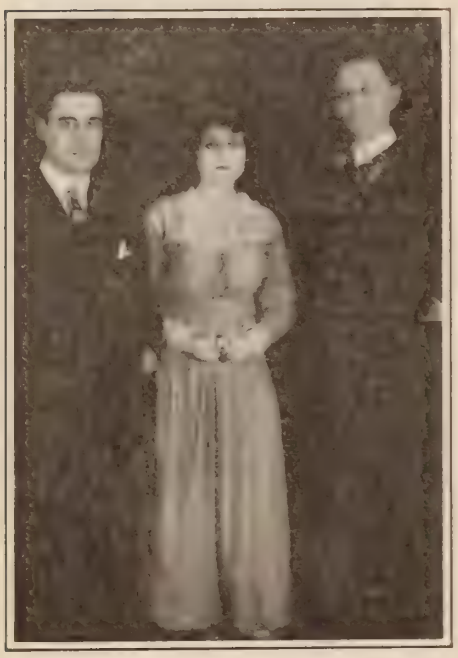
"Rose of Blood," a Fox film, featuring Theda Bara in a story dealing with I. W. W. machinations in this country, was turned down cold last week by the Chicago censors. It is not known yet what action the Fox Company will take to get the picture through.

Dorothy Phillips, Charming Star in the Jewel Production Called "The Grand Passion"

Schlaifer Attractions Gets Four-Reel Feature for U. S.

L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, Seattle, Wash., anounce that it has purchased of the American Lifeograph Company, the exclusive rights for the United States for the four-reel production, "Where Cowboy Is King." The company will distribute this feature in the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana. Rights to the balance of the United States territory will be disposed of on the open market. The picture is of the western type. The same company announces the purchase of the rights for Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana, to the independent production, "Hate." The picture will have its first run in this territory at the Star theatre, Portland, Oregon, owned by the Peoples Amusement Company, the first week in December.

Rex Weber Receives Injuries in Auto Accident



Rex Weber, director of the Titan Pictures Corporation, Chicago, and who is a cousin of Lois Weber, has been laid up in bed at his home as a result of a recent automobile accident.

The American Military Relief Association has completed a series of five one-reel Titan comedies in which popular stage stars are featured. The scripts were prepared by Jo Swerling, formerly of the Chicago Tribune, and the proceeds will be devoted to purchasing comforts for the American soldiers and sailors in the service. As soon as Mr. Weber is able to be about again the filming of Titan comedies will be continued.

THE WORLD MARKET

William [Fox] Doubles His London Office Space

Ernest Reed, Representing Fox in Great Britain and Ireland, Declares War Has Benefitted Exchange—Returns After Visit

Ernest Reed, Fox Managing Director for the United Kingdom; Theda Bara and Harry Engholm, Reed's Publicity Man, Snapped at a Fox Eastern Studio

ERNEST REED, the Fox Film Corporation's managing director for Great Britain and Ireland, who sailed a few days ago for England after having been here with Harry Engholm, his publicity manager, in conference with Mr. Fox and General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan regarding expansion policies, made some interesting statements concerning the war and the film industry before he departed.

Coming to the point, Mr. Reed said: "Perhaps I can explain by citing our own experience. The William Fox offices in London were opened in June, 1916, and although we had very large and commodious quarters at the outset we since have found it necessary to take another building. Our United Kingdom headquarters now occupies the whole of two buildings. That is the way the war is affecting us.

"It is true," Mr. Reed explained, "that at the outset of the war there was a sort of general panic in English business circles, and that the motion picture industry was affected in common with other lines of trade. But this was of short duration. Like water, conditions sought their level, and since then changes have come so gradually the public has been prepared for them.

"The situation at first, I suppose, was somewhat as it probably now is in the motion picture business in America. I do not know a great deal about conditions here, but I assume the imposition of taxes on films and admissions has developed a temporarily unsettled state of affairs. We have been through all of this in England and have not found it as serious as some exhibitors thought it would be. Indeed, there just now is going into effect a new and higher schedule of amusement taxes.

"Foreign trade, of course, has been affected. England has placed a ban on commercial relations with Norway and Sweden, and a special license is required for doing business in France. But within the United Kingdom the motion picture trade, so far as Fox is concerned, has been growing steadily. 'The Tale of Two Cities' is the film of the year in England.

"One effect of the war," Mr. Reed explained, "has been to cause the public to turn to cinema productions for relief from the depressing atmosphere with which it sometimes is surrounded. In this respect the motion picture theatres seem to have profited in greater proportion than any other form of amusement."

While in this country Messrs. Reed and Engholm visited all of the Eastern offices and studios of the Fox organization and watched the filming of numerous pictures. At the studios in Grantwood, N. J., Theda Bara posed with them in a group photograph.

Just What Britishers Want

¶ Alexander Stewart of 89 Wardour Street, London, just arrived in New York, stopping at the Hotel McAlpin and here to buy serials, comedies and super productions for the British field, gives voluntarily this cheering information:

¶ That the renters in London regard MOTION PICTURE NEWS as the premier American trade paper. They like its "get-up" and live, reliable information.

¶ That the Managers of all of Mr. Stewart's sixteen British houses subscribe to the NEWS and rely greatly upon its weekly service.

¶ That the box-office reports in the NEWS are just what the British exhibitors have been looking for in an American journal.

Piedmont Secures Rights to All Selburn Comedies

Felix Malitz, general manager of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, announced last week that his company has secured all rights on the Selburn comedies, featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby. They are produced by the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles, and the director is Horace Davey.

Blumenthal Buys "Ocean Waif" for Entire World

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., announces that in conjunction with J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., he has bought the entire world's rights to a six-reel feature entitled "An Ocean Waif," starring Carlysle Blackwell and Doris Kenyon.

Japan Puts Ban on Certain Sorts of Productions

Drastic regulations are being enforced by the Tokyo (Japan) police department, which has assumed censorship control of films, according to latest advices.

While the regulations apply only in that city, it is expected that they will spread all over Japan, as the police of other cities follow the lead of Tokyo's police force. The new regulations will curtail the marketing of a certain class of the films commonly known as "triangle plots," which have been a prominent feature of programs.

Love scenes that go beyond the ordinary bounds of chaste propriety; films that feature certain social problems that have a tinge of Socialism; pictures that expose persons in authority, such as police and school teachers, to ridicule and those that seriously disturb the peace and good order of society will be barred.

Films censored and passed are divided into two classes, A and B. The former class of films can be exhibited only to persons beyond the age of fifteen years, while the latter class can be shown to those under that age.

General Manager of Select Takes Extended Trip

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, was making plans last week to leave New York Tuesday of this week on an extended trip in the interest of his company, visiting chiefly the cities in which the Select Exchanges are established in the central and mid-western territories. His trip will carry him as far West as Omaha, as far South as St. Louis and as far North as Minneapolis. Chicago is slated as the first stop, where Mr. Kane will confer with Fred Aiken, manager of that branch. In Omaha Mr. Kane will probably be joined by C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager for Select Pictures.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Mutual's Minneapolis Manager Has Varied Career

Dan Donnelan, recently appointed branch manager of the Mutual Exchange in Minneapolis, has probably had as varied and interesting a career as anyone in the industry, according to a tabulation of his endeavors in the motion picture field and elsewhere.

Mr. Donnelan's list of activities which eventually led into the picture industry began with three years' experience in newspaper advertising in Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Dallas, Seattle and San Francisco, and proceeded to one year as private secretary of a railway general manager. Following this he spent five years in the lumber business, and then branched to the automobile trade, in which he spent two and one-half years as salesman, later selling books and carbonating machines. His picture experience began with Vitagraph, in Seattle, as salesman, and gained momentum as sales manager and editor of V. L. S. E. Pals. This was topped off with one year with Triangle in Seattle and Denver, before joining Mutual.

Stanley Philadelphia Bureau Takes Army Pictures

Mo Greenwald, of the Stanley Advertising Bureau, a part of the Stanley interests in Philadelphia, is to take three thousand feet of film at Camp Meade, Admiral, Md. It will show the activities of the National Army at work and during their resting hours.

It was from this same bureau that many of the films used by the newspapers for election night screens was obtained. Their chief work, however, is the manufacture of commercial motion pictures.

Here and There

Glowing tributes to the character and pulling power of Christie Comedies have been received by A. E. Golden, of the Boston Photoplay Company, it is said. The Boston company distributes the Christie Comedies in the New England States. Manager Golden is said to be very much in favor of "Betty's Big Idea," featuring Betty Compson.

Joseph Partridge, division manager of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has departed on a trip to the Pacific Coast in the interest of the new concern headed by Frank Hall and William Oldknow. Mr. Partridge is stopping at all important cities along the route. It is reported he will arrange with a long-established exchange system for the distribution of U. S. Productions in the Western territory.

The initial drive of the "Bee Hive" salesmen started last Monday. Three of the best known salesmen on the staff are going through New York and New Jersey to sell Billy West King Bee comedies.

Branch Manager Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, representing Goldwyn, received a mighty fine letter recently concerning Mae Marsh's first Goldwyn picture, 'Polly of the Circus." The exhibitor, who happened to be none other than Manager Raper, of the New Theatre in Elizabeth City, N. C., declared the film went over so big he almost needed a dray to haul the receipts.

William Alexander, serving in an executive capacity for the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has gone to Detroit on what is said to be an important mission. He will establish the U. S. exchange system in that territory, it is said, and may later go to the Coast.

Benjamin Harris, shipper of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, in Philadelphia, plans to embark upon the sea of matrimony with Sarah Le Bor. The sailing is set for December 23. Morris Weiss, former shipper of the company, has been promoted to assistant manager to B. Amsterdam.

Jack Delmar has returned to his former duties as booker with the Stanley Booking Corporation in Philadelphia. He has been managing one of its many theatres.

Jay Emanuel, manager of the Park and Jefferson theatres, Philadelphia, was given a birthday surprise party by his wife and friends recently.

Al Lichman, of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, was a visitor for two days recently at the Philadelphia branch. He was a guest of William E. Smith, district manager.

Charles Henschel, former salesman for Paramount-Artcraft Pictures, has been made publicity director of the Philadelphia office.

Allen May is in charge of the Philadelphia territory of the U. S. Exhibitors' Corporation, distributing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" in that section. Mr. May is said to be the first man to sing in theatres of Philadelphia at the time illustrated songs were popular.

Standard Film Opens New Exchange in Arkansas

The Standard Film Company, of Dallas, Texas, recently opened an exchange in Jonesboro, Ark., with H. Rittenhouse as manager. Mr. Rittenhouse was formerly with the Central Film Company, of St. Louis.

Jewel in Kansas City Moves to New Quarters

The Jewel Productions, Inc., of Kansas City, recently secured a lease on the fourth floor of the Boley Building, at Twelfth and Walnut streets, and will install the Kansas City branch of the Jewel Company there on or before the first of the month.

Pathe Seattle Exchange Now in New Building

A further step in the efficiency of handling Pathe films on the Pacific coast is the erection of the special building in Seattle to house Pathe Exchange. It is said that this exchange is one of the finest and the best equipped in the Northwest, and beginning November 15 exhibitors who heretofore received their Pathe films from the Portland office, will do so from Seattle, since the Portland branch has been closed and its force consolidated with the Seattle force.

The former Portland territory will be handled out of Seattle and any matters concerning it must be taken up with the Seattle manager, C. E. Endert. W. W. Kofeldt, the manager of the former Portland branch, remains with Pathe and goes to Minneapolis as manager. Salesmen will, of course, still be maintained in the former Portland territory, though they will travel outside of Seattle.

Gilman Represents U. S. Exhibitors in Pennsylvania

F. H. Gilman, formerly of the Famous Players' sales staff of Philadelphia, has resigned to represent the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in the western Pennsylvania territory. Mr. Gilman will cooperate with Allen May in the management of the U. S. Philadelphia branch. Mr. Gilman has had long experience in the film business and has served with many of the largest concerns during the last ten years.

He is at present engaged in giving a series of trade showings of the first U. S. release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," in the western Pennsylvania district.

Mentz Withdraws from Jewel at Cleveland Branch

A. J. Mentz, according to MOTION PICTURE NEWS's correspondent in Cleveland, O., has withdrawn as manager of the Cleveland branch of Jewel Productions, Inc., and thus far no one has been named to succeed him. It is expected that announcements concerning the changes in the office will be made this week by Jewel.

H. M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel, who has been making a tour of inspection of local offices, stopped in Cleveland recently, and found things in a very satisfactory condition, it is said.

Lannon, of Seattle, Pleased with Christie Reels

Jack Lannon, manager of the Greater Features Company of Seattle, who has recently acquired Christie Comedy releases for the States of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, is said to be greatly pleased with the success he is meeting with in booking Christie Comedies in his territory.

WHAT EXHIBITORS ARE DOING

Barnes, of Casper, Wyo., Likes Jewel's "Come Through"

R. D. Barnes, manager of the Hub theatre, Casper, Wyo., is very elaborate in his praise of "Come Through," according to an announcement from the Jewel offices last week.

In a letter to headquarters, Mr. Barnes said: "Jewel Productions need very little advertising to do the desired business. We did $7.35 in advertising on 'Come Through' and packed 'em to the front seats at 25 cents per head. The fact that this picture was not a cut and dried love story of the usual kind but something with a punch in every scene sent the patrons away telling us, how much they liked the picture and advising their friends to attend the next day."

Pathe's "Les Miserables" Pleases Small Town

Sam Parrish of the Picture theatre, Huntsville, Texas, said recently in a letter to Path: "'Les Miserables' got up the money. We did just about twice as much on it as I thought I would when I booked it. The people were all well pleased. Wish I could get one as good every week."

Turner and Dahnken to Film Activities at Camp Lewis

Turner & Dahnken Circuit, it is announced, has secured from the War Department at Washington, a permit to take motion pictures of the activities at Camp Lewis where more than 40,000 men are in training. Ray Ewell, who has been a photographer in the United States Navy, has been sent by Turner & Dahnken to make these pictures. The scenes which are being taken will show how our young men become soldiers. The different contingents from the various cities will be taken separately. Prints of these pictures will be sold by Turner & Dahnken throughout the United States.

Hiller and Wilk Note Misstatement Concerning "The Whip"

Hiller and Wilk announce that territorial rights to "The Whip" for Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico have not been sold. This is in contradiction of statements alleged to have been made to the effect that Foursquare Pictures had secured these territories for this production. The rights to these territories have not been sold, it is announced.

In addition to the above territories Hiller and Wilk announce that Colorado and Texas remain to be sold. They say that negotiations are now under way whereby these territories will be sold within the next few days. The reports that have been received by Hiller and Wilk from buyers who have handled "The Whip" indicate that this production is a strong box office success.

Personal Jottings

CALIFORNIA.—L. H. Baumgartner of the Downey theatre, Downey, has purchased the Santa Paula theatre and moved there a few days ago.

R. W. Lamphere has bought the Crown theatre at Sawtelle from Foster Jackson and is now managing same. Mr. Lamphere was for ten years manager of the Opera House at Junction City. He is described as a progressive and enthusiastic showman and not a total stranger to southern California, which he will shortly make his home.

ILLINOIS.—Joseph Erber of East St. Louis has leased the Washington and Annex theatres, Belleville, and recently assumed active management in lieu of Louis Landau, resigned. Mrs. Sadie Erber is conducting the East St. Louis house during her husband's absence.

The old Bijou theatre on West State street, Laurenceville, is open again after a few months of total darkness. Clarence Waggoner purchased the house and has employed Roland Johnson as operator.

Fred Snell has purchased the Pastime theatre from F. L. Tanner and took possession a few days ago.

Herb Jenkins of Dahlgren is now the owner of the Elite theatre at McLeansboro, he having bought the good will and operating outfit from C. J. Price. Mr. Price and wife will move to Effingham.

G. W. Hill, the new owner of the Court theatre, Peoria, is retaining Harry Dittmer as operator.

William Rance has entered the motion picture theatre business at Peoria and severed his connection with the Logan Coal Co.

INDIANA.—The Royal theatre, Fairmount, is now owned and operated by Miss Grace Cleveland and Miss Kate Holliday, the latter having charge of the music. It is their intention to cater particularly to the women and children of the town.

IOWA.—Frank King has bought the motion picture and vaudeville theatre at Ida Grove.

Charles Barger having recently purchased the Star motion picture theatre at Washington has now assumed active management.

The Lyric Amusement Co. has purchased the interests of Oscar Strine in the Lyric theatre, Boone, and placed Ben B. Wiley in charge as manager.

NEBRASKA.—L. H. Martin has opened a motion picture theatre at Blue Springs.

Harry Highley has sold his interests in the Hardware theatre, Fremont, to Frank Creely.

A Van Housen has bought the Favorite theatre at Schuyler.

C. R. Shandy is the new owner of the Folly theatre at Sterling.

The Elite theatre at St. Paul is now owned and operated by J. W. Crough.

Manager Crowningshield of Scenic Temple, Glens Falls, is making extensive improvements to this playhouse. The interior of the theatre is being painted and the aisles will be carpeted with rubber matting. The theatre presents a most inviting appearance. The work is being done by John Tucker.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Louis Gass and Eugene Trapp has bought the Grand theatre at Noonan.

TENNESSEE.—J. L. Davis, manager of Dreamland theatre in Maryville has accepted the management of the Ocoee theatre in Copper Hill.

WISCONSIN.—O. W. Rice of Marshfield has leased the Idle Hour theatre at Phillips. F. E. Avery, the former lessee, having joined the army.

The Idle Hour theatre at Sheboygan is now under the management of Otto Koch and George Froehlich, who will assume personal charge.

F. H. Saderson and A. R. Dahma are planning to open a motion picture theatre in the village of Brooklyn to give performances twice weekly.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Philadelphia Hopes for Sunday Shows Shortly

Philadelphia is gradually coming into its own in regard to the showing of motion pictures on Sunday. It must be said, however, that the public is not as yet allowed to participate in these screenings, but there is hope that it will be in the near future. At present, only the exhibitors and their friends have been thus entertained. Up to date there have been shown on consecutive Sundays of "The Warrior," "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," Florence Reed in "Today" and Theda Bara in "Cleopatra."

Pittsburgh Cameraphone Shows Ince Spectacle

After what was said to be a week of spirited bidding, the management of the Cameraphone, one of the largest picture theatres in Pittsburgh, has obtained first run on the new Thomas H. Ince spectacle, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," released by the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

New Vitagraph Comedies Reach Screen Each Week

Greater Vitagraph announced last week through President Albert E. Smith that the new series of short comedies, for which the brand name of "Vitagraph Comedies" has been selected, will be released weekly and will be a regular unit of Vitagraph service to exhibitors. With its regular five-reel Blue Ribbon feature, two reels of a serial episode, one reel of the "Big V" slapstick comedies, one reel of the new Vitagraph Comedies and three reels of favorite film features, Vitagraph thus is providing exhibitors with a complete show each week.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

ALBERT CAPELLANI'S assistant at the Metro Studio is George De Carlton. His first work for Metro is the preparation of the production of "Daybreak," with Emily Stevens as star.

HERBERT BRENON and the principal members of his company spent the greater part of last week at Greenwich, Conn., putting the finishing touches on Mr. Brenon's forthcoming production of "Empty Pockets." In the company were Barbara Castleton, Susanne Willa Ketty Calanta, Malcolm Williams and others

THE same icy blasts and downpour of rain that struck Manhattan Island one morning recently not only destroyed property here but over on the Jersey side blew down an entire Grecian city that had been erected at the Goldwyn Studio for Mary Garden's forthcoming production of "Thais." The whole set was rebuilt, at what was said to be a considerable outlay of cash

FROM the studios of Madame Petrova comes the announcement this week that the star has discovered, after years of research and experiment, the exact formula for facial make-up which will blend perfectly with the harsh rays of the studio lamps. It is claimed that up to this time all work on this line by others has proved futile.

IT is doubtful if ever in the history of motion picture production there has been a time when producer and author were more thoroughly en rapport than in the case of J. Stuart Blackton and Sir Gilbert Parker. For several weeks, off and on, the British writer was a guest of Commodore Blackton at the latter's country estate, Harbourwood, at Oyster Bay, L. I.

"JOE" FORSYTH has returned to Metro in his old "job," that of assistant cameraman to R. J. Bergquist, photographer to Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. He assisted Bergquist on the production of the Metro wonderplay, "The Voice of Conscience," and endeavored to equal the photographic work done by them in Metro's "Romeo and Juliet"

Motion Picture News,
New York.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find our check for three dollars for one year's subscription to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Please start with copy of November 17.

You have caught us with the EXHIBITORS' BOX-OFFICE REPORTS. Best thing in any magazine yet. Stick to it.

Yours truly,
TORRIE AND WINTER.
Per F. W. Winter.

PEDESTRIANS in the vicinity of 90th street and Broadway, New York, on their way to work last Thursday morning, could hardly believe their eyes at the strange sight of a fleet of automobiles that lined both sides of the street in front of the Standard theatre and dropped off hundreds of men and women in evening dress. The unseemly attire for that hour of the morning, and the matter-of-fact way that the "society folk" carried themselves, made many of the on-lookers pinch themselves to see if they were still abed. To add to the mystery, the display boards of the Standard theatre did not announce any morning matinee; and then, again, if there was a show, why the strange orgy of evening dress? The answer is simple. The "audience" was nothing more than the cast and supernumeraries of Harry Rapf's forthcoming photoplay, "The Struggle Everlasting," in which Florence Reed is the star and Edwin Milton Royle is the author. Incidentally, this piece, which was originally supplied to Florence Roberts as a stage vehicle by Mr. Royle, has the distinction of being the first allegorical play to come to the screen. The result should be interesting.

IN Norma Talmadge's next Select production, "Ghosts of Yesterday," in which she will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, an oil painting was slashed to pieces in a scene because a "dupe" was lost, or mixed with the genuine, or something. The scene promises much realism.

TWENTY-FIVE members of the Metro-Yorke company, headed by Harold Lockwood and Director Francis Ford, have gone to New Hampshire for scenes in

Earl Williams, Vitagraph Star, in His New Packard Roadster

"The Avenging Angel." In the party are Sally Crute, Joseph Dailey, William Clifford, Warren Cook, Walter Lewis, Art Ortego, Edward Draham, Louis Walheim, Floyd Buckley, Harry J. Russell, Robert Carson, Austin Beattie, Russell Hubley, Tom Blake, Harry Cabot, Assistant Director John Waters, Cameraman Antonio Gaudio and a violinist.

AGNES AYRES, the Vitagraph star shortly to be featured with Edward Earle in comedies, is wearing an engagement ring. No wedding bells are anticipated as the ring is a "prop" presented to her by Director Graham Baker.

THE home life of June Elvidge in her apartment overlooking the Hudson is the subject of an article in a "fan" magazine for January. The story is well supplied with illustrations.

IT is said folk around the Fox Studio at Fort Lee had the tables turned on them recently when they tried to perpetrate a joke on Katherine Lee, the kiddie star. She put it over like a veteran, according to reports.

RITA DANE, formerly prima donna in "Pom Pom," the musical operetta, was an extra in the banquet scene in Goldwyn's "Thais," starring Mary Garden. Adolph Klauber, casting director, wished to see how Miss Dane would screen.

THE Sidney Drews have a brother, on Mrs. Drew's side, who is mastering aviation with the intention of bringing down some German planes. Hartley McVey, the flyer-soon-to-be, was formerly assistant to Mr. Drew in the Metro-Drew comedies.

Taylor Holmes, Whose Smile-Personality Has Landed Him in the First Division of Picture Stars, Tries Polishing the Stove, But Loses Not His Smile, in "Uneasy Money," a George K. Spoor Special Feature

EDDIE JAMES, assistant to Larry Trimble, director of Madame Petrova's second starring subject, was injured a few days ago when an auto in which he was riding collided with a truck. It was the second mishap he had experienced within the week. His nose felt the shock most.

ALICE BRADY, whose first Select picture was made at the Paramount studio in Fort Lee, came over to Select's studio in Fifty-fourth street for her second feature, "Jane Eyre." This eliminates the delays in crossing and re-crossing the Hudson.

FLORENCE CURTIS, the little toe dancer who for several years appeared in Cohan's Revue and with Kosloff, is playing leads opposite Larry Semon in Vitagraph comedies directed by Semon. She has been with Vitagraph four months.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

THE Screen Club Ball was as per usual particularly gala and eventful and all that. The most notable thing about it was the grand march. There wasn't any. Instead there was a Paul Jones or Nantucket or "mob stuff" as someone remarked. And all the participants seemed and did have a much better time so indulging than they would have had parading round and round the Astor Gold Room for an hour and looking pleasant for the flash light man.

AS usual all dancing honors of the evening were carried off by Daniel Frohman who tripped the conventional light fantastic constantly and held out longer than even "Conky," the professional. On second thought Jim Moff also proved effective on the dance floor, but he always is despite the fact that he's an editor.

PRESIDENT JOE FARNHAM presided off and on. He introduced a lot of stars including "Cuba" Crutchfield, a cowboy from the Y 6 ranch out Wyoming way who twirled a rope dexterously, and later presented both Billy Quirk, the retiring president and Jules Burnstein with gold plates indicating life memberships.

Perhaps they have cut things down to a two-meal-a-day basis and out-Hoovered Hoover.

To continue complaining.

It strikes us that the producers should refrain somewhat from using the same locations so often. Certainly the regular picture audience knows a good many of them like home by this time.

There's that one in the West, on one of the beaches near Los Angeles, with a pyramid or needle of rock jutting out of the waves only a few feet from the wall of rock on the shore. One day it is the background for a group of comedy bathing girls, another it is representing a South Sea island shore, still again it is part of a fisherman's village, with either a love scene or a murder going on at its foot. The greatest and the humblest of picture players have trod the sands there.

This is paralleled in the East by that pretty waterfall scene that was discovered so long ago that it used to appear regularly on the General Film program via Edison pictures. That water has splashed on while love, murder and rape were staged before it. It knows the camera so well that it almost kicks when told it has been badly photographed.

Surely there are other places on the Western coast that are as available as that cross between the pyramid and the needle, others in the East as pretty as the Edison-discovered waterfall.

"Raffles" to Have Trade Showing This Week

"Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," Adapted from Famous Stage Play, with John Barrymore in the Leading Role, Handled by Hiller and Wilk

HILLER and Wilk will show their latest offering, "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," to the trade Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Joseph R. Miles projection room, 220 West 42nd street. The showing has been delayed for several weeks due to the fact that a number of details essential for a successful trade showing were not completed.

"Raffles" is the first big special feature to be produced by the L. Lawrence Weber Photo Dramas, Inc., and is to be followed by other high class productions, it is announced. John Barrymore has the leading role in this production. In the supporting cast are: Frederick Perry, H. Cooper Cliffe, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent and Mike Donlin. The picture represents six months of concentrated effort on the part of George Irving who directed. "Raffles" was one of the big successes on the stage, about ten years ago. In novel form it was one of the "best sellers." It is said that the screen version is destined to meet the same success that has been the lot of the stage play and the novel.

Hiller and Wilk announce that territory for this production has been sold, notwithstanding the fact that a trade showing will not be given until this week.

The Special Features Company of Knoxville, Tenn., has purchased the rights for the states of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, and the Dawn Masterplay Company has purchased the rights to the state of Michigan. Both of these purchasers took the picture without seeing it. From now on, Messrs. Hiller and Wilk suggest that every purchaser view the picture in order that they may know just exactly what they are purchasing and have explained to them the wonderful possibilities for its promotion.

Pathe Saves Books and Records in Detroit Fire

The fire starting at seven o'clock on the evening of November 16 in the General Film vault, fifth floor of the New Film Building, Detroit, totally destroyed the General office, badly damaged Fox, Mutual, Vitagraph, Bluebird and state right companies, according to a report from the Midwest city.

Manager Fuller, of the Pathe office, with his cashier, was leaving for the day when the fire started. The two men carried out all books and records, thus saving them from ruination by water.

About two hundred reels on the lowest shelf were wet by water but they dried them off immediately after the fire with practically no film loss. Water was a foot deep on the Pathe floor, and it damaged furniture and stationery to a considerable extent. There was little damage to posters and the Pathe total loss will not exceed $1,000. No one was hurt and there was no interruption to the service to exhibitors.

Arrow Film Corporation reports that its production of Hall Caine's novel, "The Deemster" is being received in the South with great enthusiasm.

Colonel William E. Condell, of the firm of Condell and Greenfield, Liberty Feature Film Company, Shreveport, La., writes the Arrow Film Corporation the following letter, which bears out the statement made as to "The Deemster" reception in the South:

"We bought the Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana rights to 'The Deemster,' less than three months ago. The picture is a remarkably fine booking proposition. Hall Caine's fame is a great asset. In these times a great feature like 'The Deemster' is, I consider, as sound an investment as you could have."

Sheer-Bernstein Enterprises Take Large Offices

William A. Sheer, of Sheer-Bernstein Enterprises

WILLIAM A. SHEER, players' representative, announces that new quarters have been taken at 1604 Broadway and that in the future he will be associated with M. M. Bernstein and that the firm name will be Sheer-Bernstein Enterprises. Mr. Bernstein had been active in commercial enterprises in Macon, Ga. and Detroit, Mich., before entering the new firm.

The new organization will handle the business of players, the casting for various producing concerns with whom they have arranged to supply artists, and, in addition, will maintain a publicity bureau to look after the exploitation of such players as they represent.

Mr. Sheer's entry into the artist supply end of the industry began with the World-Equitable concerns several years ago, after which he branched out as an independent agent.

"I am going to devote my time," said Mr. Sheer, "to supplying, only people with screen experience and those, only, who can back up their claims with proof of past accomplishments."

Harry Reichenbach will be in full charge of the exploitation department.

An announcement of the personalities in the motion picture field who have already designated Mr. Sheer as their exclusive representative, and the companies with whom he is to affiliate as the casting master in so far as supplying talent is concerned, will be made shortly.

December Ball Plans Complete

Arrangements have been completed, it was announced last week, for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Ball, to be held at Terrace Garden on December 7, under the auspices of the Manhattan Local of the M. P. & E. L. of America.

An orchestra of sixteen pieces will supply the music in the main ballroom. A jazz quartette of colored musicians and entertainers will provide dance music and singing in the upper annex ballroom. Invitations have been sent to all motion picture stars, and it is said that already many of them have accepted. Nearly all of the producing and distributing companies, it is said, have subscribed for boxes.

"Fillum vs. Service"

By H. J. Shepard

THE problem of modern distribution resolves itself into two questions: Are the program and independent exchanges selling to the exhibitor properly, and are the exhibitors buying properly? Are they getting the maximum results? Here we have the food for a very interesting discussion of a topic which crops up daily in the industry.

To get at the solution of any problem, the best method of making a beginning is through the process of analyzation. Let us, therefore, take apart the "works" of the exchange and the theatre, and see if they may not be put together with such corrections as to make a more efficient whole.

From experience and from investigation, we find that a large number of salesmen are not getting the proper results. The fault lies at the door of their exchange managers, who do not instruct them otherwise, and who make them feel that their jobs depend on the quantity of business that each brings in on Saturday night. These men don't sell pictures, they sell "fillum." Good, bad, or indifferent, the picture means nothing to them—their slogan is: "sales quantity," and it is simply a question of selling so many contracts each week.

Scraps of Paper

THAT isn't salesmanship. These men are not taught to study their territories or the conditions therein. If they sell an exhibitor a bad proposition, they are congratulated by the exchange manager, so long as they keep up their quantity. What is the result? In order to keep up that same quantity of their sales, they are forced continually to make new contracts for the old ones never last.

Many of them are good men, clever salesmen, who realize that the policy of their exchanges is all wrong, yet the management of each one's exchange insists upon conducting his business upon that basis, and there is nothing else to be done as far as they are concerned.

There is a way, however, to overcome this difficulty and increase the efficiency of film salesmen. Several of the larger organizations have adopted the scheme of putting their salesmen upon a salary—commission basis—but a step in advance would be to gives each salesman a fixed salary for his regular amount of sales and the commissions dependent upon business that "holds up"—quality that develops into quantity. This scheme would naturally inspire the men to study their territory, to collect data on how various releases go in different localities, methods adapted by exhibitors to make certain productions successful from the box-office standpoint, until they have arrived at a point of efficiency where they can become of material assistance to exhibitors. In other words the plan serves as an inspiration to dig, hustle and work.

Quality Business

WHEN an organization decides to adopt this salary-commission policy, the question arises, how to secure this quality business—and having got it—how to maintain the same. It is conceded that the profit on program productions depends largely upon second, third and subsequent runs of the releases. In the case of independent productions, the saving in the price paid for the territory and the returns on the second and subsequent runs form the basis of the profits. Therefore, it is readily to be seen that it is not the first run, but those which follow, which really determine the profits of a picture, and consequently it is vitally necessary to the success of any organization to work up this kind of business.

It has been the unfortunate neglect of this factor in the past which has been the sand in the gears of our distribution problems. Until very recently, the policy of the majority of exchanges was figuratively to make the "exhibitor work for the exchange," which means that exorbitant prices were charged, and burdens which should rightly have been borne by the latter were piled onto the former. However, with the advance of the industry, this policy must gradually change. The exchangeman's slogan should be "keep the film working for the exhibitor," for he should realize that this will be more remunerative for him in the long run than working the exhibitor for the exchange. In this way the exchangemen will build up the "quality business"—the exhibitors will have more confidence in these exchanges and will know that their interests are being watched, so that they will not get stuck with a bad proposition. This must be the first step toward better conditions; a spirit of "co-operation" between the exchange and the exhibitor.

Reissues

NOW let us look into the conditions which go to make the second and subsequent runs and the reissuing of good pictures more profitable to the exhibitor and to the exchange. In the first place, the exhibitor who makes use of only first-run pictures, must pay the top price for the releases; he must spend a quantity of money in advertising and exploitation. If a picture turns out to be a "flivver," his money is wasted, for if he has the picture for a two to four-day run, the attendance naturally falls off after the first day. In most cases he cannot afford to shelve a first-run picture, because the prices he has been forced to pay eliminate the possibility of a substitute and thus he is forced to run all of these pictures, some of which are sure to be bad.

On the other hand, the exhibitor who uses pictures which have already been shown has all the advantage. He can pick his shows from the releases which have gone best, and he can pick them to suit the type of audience to which he caters. The first-run man has done his advertising and the way for the popularity of the release is all paved. He knows just what it is worth beforehand. If he uses a program, due to the fact that he gets all of his releases so much cheaper than the first-run man, he can afford to shelve a bad proposition and substitute another picture. In fact, viewing the conditions from this angle, it would almost seem that in all fairness the second-run man should pay more than the first-run man.

From the viewpoint of the exchangeman, the second run of pictures is naturally more lucrative than the first run. The income from the first-runs does not approach cancelling the expense on the other side of the ledger. The overhead must be taken care of, consequently the first run doesn't mean much in the way of profits. It is from the quantity-quality business which pour in after the reputation of the picture is established which constitutes the real revenue of a release.

Profits All Around

THERE is also an extraordinary profit in reissues for the exchange and for the exhibitor—if they are handled in the proper way. A release may be one or more years old, but with re-editing and retitling and a supply of new paper and publicity, it is possible to make it more valuable than when originally released. The exhibitor knows just what the picture is worth and he can gauge his receipts accordingly. In its renovated form, it is a live proposition for him and he knows that he is making no mistake in booking it. Naturally, an exchange is not making any mistake in handling a good reissue.

These angles of distribution, then, are the most profitable for all concerned. Now is it possible to advance a step and make it more valuable? This resolves itself into a proposition of "Fillum vs. Film" or "Fillum vs. Service." The majority of salesmen sell the former—in its broadest sense—and they do it because they have been taught to do so. The exchange must realize that it must meet the exhibitor half way, on a basis of friendly co-operation. The film salesman is in a position to become a veritable encyclopedia of information for the exhibitor and also for his exchange. He is the man who comes into active touch with every phase of the business throughout his territory, and if he is keen and on the job, he can become a link to bind the two very closely together.

The exchange manager should teach his salesmen to adopt this attitude toward their work. He should have them follow up the drawing power of each release in each run so as to determine their comparative value for each exhibitor. By this display of interest in the welfare of the exhibitor, the revenues of the exchange will be built up and the exhibitor will receive real service, and the relations between them will be put upon a firmer and more efficient business basis. Thus, in some measure, will the problems of modern distribution be solved.

Schlaifer Attractions to Handle "Parentage" in Northwest

Frank J. Seng announces that "Parentage" will be distributed in the States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana by the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, Seattle, Wash. Mr. Seng wants the exhibitors to be served by the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions to know that he will give them the same personal attention and the same individual help through his New York office that he has extended to theatre managers in other sections of the country who have booked "Parentage." The deal was closed last week.

Superfeatures, Ltd., of Canada Reports Good Business

Charlie Stevens, general manager for Superfeatures, Ltd., Toronto, Canada, reports that this company has purchased the Canadian rights to George Loane Tucker's independent production, "I Believe."

Superfeatures, Ltd., is one of the newcomers in the independent field of Canada. Mr. Stevens says that it has established itself on a good foundation and that business is good. "The Whip," "The Crisis" and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" are some of the big features handled for Canadian territory, by this company.

Mr. Singer reports to Nat I. Spitzer, general sales agent of the Billy West Comedies, that he has booked "The Candy Kid" and "The Pest," the last two releases featuring Billy West, with more than a hundred exhibitors within the last week.

"Special Productions Should Be Exploited"

Herman Becker, of Master Drama Features, Convinces Mills of Showmanship Possibilities in Handling Big Features

HERMAN BECKER, general manager of Master Drama Features, is of the opinion that "Who's Your Neighbor," Master Drama Features production for the independent market should be exploited as a "show." Bernard H. Mills, Elk Photoplays, who purchased the Greater New York rights to this production, is convinced that Mr. Becker's argument is feasible after the following conversation was had, which discloses the why and wherefore of both contentions:

"Don't lease it," said Mr. Becker, "unless your customer consents to advertise it in a way that will get the money for him and keep prices up for you." All this, by the way, after the sale of the rights to Mr. Mills had been concluded; hence the suggestion was no part of a sales talk in behalf of the picture.

Mr. Mills, however, thought the "don't lease" direction too radical.

"Do you mean to tell me," he said, "as the purchaser of this subject, not to accept bookings as my regular figure?"

"That is my sincere belief," was the answer, "and if it seems revolutionary it is because picture showmen haven't the faith in their goods that theatrical showmen have in theirs. And I say that as one of the latter class, the picture, with few exceptions, has greater public appeal than the stage play, but the picture showman belittles his own goods. He simply won't give it what is its due. The theatrical showman goes the limit; the picture showman hangs back!"

"Now, if you don't let him hang back, you force him into the right track. You do him a favor, therefore, because real showmanship boosts his profits and he does you a favor by telling of the business he did with your feature and getting you new customers as a result."

But Mr. Mills was still unconvinced. Then Mr. Becker sent for one of Mr. Backer's personal assistants. Mr. Backer has purchased "Who's Your Neighbor?" for ten Western states and was playing it in them as a road show. The Backer representative showed that "Who's Your Neighbor?" had played as a road show, and what another good feature had earned in the same territory but not played in that way.

These records convinced Mr. Mills.

"There was no dodging the figures," he said, "and the figures were based on actual performance. The feature that had special playing up almost doubled the business of the other. As a consequence I will only exhibit "Who's Your Neighbor?" in Greater New York territory on the basis of a big show."

While General Manager Becker closed Manhattan with Mr. Mills, President Bob of the Master Drama Features sold Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Iowa and Nebraska to the Yale Photoplay Company, Kansas City, Mo., and Illinois, Indiana and Southern Wisconsin to Unity Photoplays, Chicago.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Carlton Gets Sole Rights to Ogden Productions

Albert Scowcroft, President of Ogden Pictures, Closes with Carle E. Carlton for Distributing Rights to All Walker Productions—Goldberg Resigns

ALBERT SCOWCROFT, president of Ogden Pictures Corporation announces that he has closed a contract with Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Pictures Corporation, which gives to Mr. Carlton the world's rights to Ogden's latest Lillian Walker production, "The Grain of Dust," the territory remaining unsold for the first Walker production, "The Lust of the Ages," and the sole distribution and negative rights to Ogden productions. Mr. Carlton, under the terms of this contract, will handle the distribution of all future Lillian Walker pictures.

In connection with this announcement, Mr. Scowcroft announces the resignation of Jesse Goldberg, who has been exploitation and sales manager for Ogden pictures since the completion of the first Lillian Walker production. Mr. Goldberg was instrumental in closing the deal that disposed of the distributing rights to Ogden productions. Commenting upon Mr. Goldberg's resignation, Mr. Scowcroft said:

"Mr. Goldberg held a contract with our company as sales and exploitation manager which had about a year yet to run and that contract as well as Mr. Goldberg's interest in the Ogden Corporation was by mutual consent canceled for a cash consideration.

"While to some the closing of the transaction with Mr. Carlton may have been a business move contrary to Mr. Goldberg's interests since it would necessarily terminate his connection with the company, as much we desired to continue with him, yet Mr. Goldberg appreciated that it was the desire of the directors to enter into such a deal if it could be negotiated, particularly in view of the fact that the terms of the transaction are decidedly remunerative to the stockholders."

Lester Parks, vice-president of Ogden Pictures, will be associated with Mr. Carlton in the distribution of the Lillian Walker productions, operating from the present offices of the Crest Pictures Corporation in the Times Building.

Mr. Goldberg said: "As to my own plans they are yet to be made, excepting that whatever connections I make will, of course, be associated with the independent producing and state rights end of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Scowcroft expects to return to Ogden, Utah, within the course of the next week.

Two New Features Added to Renowned Pictures List

"Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed," Edward Warren Productions, Offered on Open Market by Renowned—Good Business Reported

RENOWNED PICTURES CORPORATION, prominent in the distributing branch of the independent field, have as their newest features for exploitation on the open market, "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed," two features produced by the Edward Warren Productions. With the addition of these two features, the Renowned Pictures Corporation have six productions now being exploited on the open market.

This distributing organization, although its activities in the independent field embrace, comparatively only a few months, has accomplished by new methods worked out through the experience gained in long association by its executives, with the most important producers in the industry. Maurice Fleckles, vice-president of the company, reports that he is meeting with success on every hand with the productions Renowned has placed upon the market for distribution.

Mr. Fleckles left last week for an extended trip through the Middle West in the interest of his latest features, "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed." He expects to visit the independent buyers in Omaha, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago before returning to the New York office, and expects to close the territory embraced by these cities as negotiations have been carried on which required only the signing of the contract to insure the disposition of the product in these territories. Before leaving, Mr. Fleckles announced that N. H. Gordon, prominent buyer of Boston, had purchased the New England territorial rights to "Weavers of Life" and "Souls Redeemed."

These two productions, it is said, are strong state rights subjects. "Weavers of Life" advances a theme that contrasts with vital appeal the sociological conditions that obtain in the world to-day. As a production that should encourage right thinking and helpful living, it is said to offer an agreeable contrast, as a theme of social importance, to diversify the dramas that are equally essential in maintaining the morale of a nation at war. John B. Clymer and Harry O. Hoyt furnished the story and scenario from which Edward Warren worked in creating the production. Superior direction and fine photography are points that are claimed for an intensely dramatic subject, acted by a large and capable company with Helen Hayes in the leading role. It is in six parts, and was produced by Warren Productions and especially for state rights distribution.

Allied Exchanges, Inc., to Announce Plans Later

THE first formal meeting of the Allied Exchanges, Inc., recently organized, was held at Hotel Astor last Thursday. The election of president, which was announced, last week, to have taken place at this meeting was postponed until the next meeting. The other officers, as announced in these columns, last week, are: Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger, J. L. Friedman, Lynn S. Card and A. J. Cobe.

A complete report of the meeting is not made, due, it is announced, to the fact that a series of conferences have been arranged and until these have been held, it is stated by an official of the company, that nothing definite can be given out. An official said:

"We have had to arrange several meetings in order that all members of the Allied Exchanges might be able to be in attendance. Until we can get the opinion of all, there will be no definite decisions as to the releasing made."

"Italian Battlefront" Pictures Shown Again in Boston

"The Italian Battlefront" pictures, under the direction of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, which were shown for the first time in Boston, at the Tremont Theatre, last August, played a return engagement at this theatre last week, and the management reports a big business. Boston has one of the largest Italian colonies in the United States. The fact that thousands of people were not in Boston when the pictures were first shown there, last August, was also repsonsible for the large attendance.

The Globe Feature Film Company is handling the official war pictures of the Italian Government for the Fort Pitt Italian Government for the Fort Pitt Theatre Co., of Pittsburgh, in New England.

Warde to Handle Foreign Sales for M. H. Hoffman, Inc.

Foreign-rights buyers desirous of securing Hoffman-Foursquare pictures for their respective markets will hereafter be able to get service through arrangements just completed by M. H. Hoffman, wherein Reginald Warde becomes representative for the product.

"As a particularly keen judge of pictures and their foreign values, Mr. Warde is also fortunate in having the confidence of the desirable purchasers of pictures who reside outside this country," said Mr. Hoffman. "This latter quality, which means so much in foreign distribution, is precisely what we have felt was required in the concern selected to represent us.

"Every motion picture purchaser hailing from another country knows that Mr. Warde insists upon giving him every consideration to which he is entitled.

"Aiming for the establishing of permanent relations with every foreign buyer possible, Mr. Warde and Pierre V. R. Key, sales manager for M. H. Hoffman, Inc., will work together to this end."

J. Frank Hatch to Exploit the Drury Lane Spectacle as He Would a Circus—Bought Rights from Hiller and Wilk

J. FRANK HATCH, pioneer showman, and one of the few men in the motion picture field who has had experience in the circus showmanship, will launch a new method of exploitating a big photodramatic feature when he starts on tour of the States of Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio with a circus tent, seats, orchestra and lighting system and the spectacular, photodramatic production of "The Whip," which, it is announced, he has purchased, recently for the above territories from Hiller & Wilk, sales agents for the Paragon Films, Inc.

This method of exploitation and exhibition of motion pictures, with a big feature, is new. Mr. Hatch's plans for exploitating "The Whip" in this territory are similar to those followed out by the manager of a circus. He will be independent of all theatres in the towns in which he exhibits the picture and will present it to the public exactly as a circus would be.

Mr. Hatch has had twenty years' experience as a showman and during that time he has studied the public's wants and knows how to supply them along amusement lines. He is the owner of a large theatre in Newark, N. J., and knows the business from the exhibitor's point of view. He has shown "The Whip" in his house and says that it will make a "hit" wherever shown It is not announced when Mr. Hatch will give his first exhibition under the new method of exploitation.

Expects Big Bookings for "Public Defender"

Harry Raver Reports That Exhibitors Throughout United States and Canada Anxious to Book His Production—Marketing Arrangements Nearly Completed

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are evidencing a lively interest in Harry Raver's late production for the independent market, "The Public Defender," it is announced. Mr. Raver, in commenting upon the numerous inquiries which he has received, said that they come from the owners of first-run houses and include many of the largest and most important picture theatres in the United States and Canada.

Among the prominent exhibitors who have evinced a desire to play "The Public Defender," as soon as released, is Tom Moore, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Moore operates the Garden, Strand and Plaza theatres in Washington, and in addition to being one of the leading film showmen of the country is rated as a keen judge of screen attractions of the sort which possess genuine box-office values.

The Miles theatre, of Cleveland, and the Crescent theatre, of Brooklyn, both of which cater to the best class of screen patrons in their respective cities have made a bid for first-run privileges for "The Public Defender." Mr. Raver, who produced and controls the world rights to "The Public Defender," has not yet determined as to how the picture will be marketed. He has written to the exhibitors who want to book the film, and informed them that he will apprise them of "The Public Defender's" marketing arrangements the moment they are completed.

"Macbeth" Among New W. H. Productions

Shakespeare's Greatest Tragedy, with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in the Title Role, on List—To Show Hart Picture to Welfare League

W. H. PRODUCTIONS announces a screen version of Shakespeare's "Macbeth," with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in the title role, among their new releases.

In speaking of the fact that this picture is among their new releases, an official of that organization said:

"In the production of Shakespearean plays lies an opportunity to link up educational to the entertaining values of a picture. Every high school boy and girl in the country, to say nothing of those who enter our colleges, study Shakespeare, and there is not a man or woman in the country who does not know and appreciate his work.

"It is certain that there can be no fear as to their favorable reception, as Shakespeare has never ceased to be popular and never will. It is simply a question of putting the plays on properly, for it is only in that, that they can fail.

"We have chosen 'Macbeth' as our first release, for the reason that it is one of the best known of his plays, and because it offers a particularly excellent opportunity for picturization. There is such a wealth of material for big scenes and action, that it dwarfs the efforts of the modern photoplay writer by comparison."

Arrangements have been made by the W. H. Productions to show their first release featuring William S. Hart as "the two-gun man" in "The Bargain," to the prisoners at Sing Sing. The entertainment will be held under the auspices of the Mutual Welfare League.

The principal character of the picture, Two-Gun Stokes, played by Mr. Hart, is a notorious bandit and desperado. Mr. Hart is justly famous for his portrayal of "good bad men." No character is so bad under his interpretation but that he has not some powerful instincts for good and which through some reaction or other, ultimately triumphs. As "the two-gun man" he begins as a highwayman, but underneath his lawlessness lies a very different character, and it only needs the proper influence to bring about the change to respectability.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

WORK on the production of the first Bryant Washburn subject for Pathe being made at the Glendale Studios, Los Angeles, is progressing very rapidly. Gertrude Selby is playing the lead opposite Washburn in this subject, and it is very probable she will be retained as permanent leading woman of this organization.

The third Baby Helen Marie Osborne subject for Pathe, by the Diando organization, was commenced last week when William Bertram made the first scenes for "Any Home." Lou Cody has been selected to play the leading man part, and Marion Warner will have the opposite role. Others in this cast are Katherine MacLaren and Herbert Standing. Ernest, the colored boy who formerly played with Marie Osborne, is also to be seen in this film, he taking the part of the ring master in scenes showing a children's circus in which Baby Marie becomes the bareback rider of her favorite Shetland pony.

Studios Donate Camoufleurs

During the past two weeks a nucleus for a camouflage company has been organized by Lee Lawson, former technical director at Universal City, and Monday, November 19 these men left for American University Training Camp at Washington, D. C., where they will have intensive training, and it is expected they will be on the way to France within sixty days. Prior to this time more than sixty men have been recruited from Los Angeles studios, and are now camoufleurs in the Liberty Army. The Lawson unit will later be increased to 250 men, and without a doubt the thirty-eight will at the end of their training receive non-commissioned offices in Company F of the 24th Engineers.

Following is a list of the names of the thirty-nine men: Lee Lawson, technical director, Universal Scenic Artists; George A. Robinson, Keystone-Sennett; George W. Stobo, Triangle-Kay Bee; W. F. Funnell, Universal; Clarence DeWitte, L-Ko; N. C. Aleon, Triangle-Kay Bee; George H. Robinson, American; F. J. Doyle, Lasky and George H. Neil, Triangle-Kay Bee. Stage carpenters: Earl Buck, Keystone-Sennett; C. S. Rockwell, Universl; Perry J. Moore, Morosco; Walter B. Ridgeway, Universal; Willis Drew, Lasky; E. B. Jackson, Universal; Ross B. Jackson, Morosco; Glen Garo, Triangle-Kay Bee; Robt. F. Snodgrass, Universal; V. C. Parker, Triangle-Kay Bee; Granville C. Bradford, Paralta; Floyd Porter, Triangle-Kay Bee; Otto O. Owen, Universal; George H. Polen, Chaplin; James Thomas, Morosco and C. W. Lester, Metro. Sculptors and papier mache workers: Robert F. Bonar, Universal; F. J. Lewis, Lasky; Walter L. Kilpatrick, Universal; Leonard F. Lercker, Selig; Orrin A. White, Alfred J. Scott, Chaplin; Walter D. James, Selig. Property men: Alex. Tierney, Universal. Metal workers: Earl D. Becker, Selig. Cameramen: Park J. Reis, L-Ko; Niles J. Burns, Universal and A. M. Davey, Triangle-Kay Bee. Architect: Guy C. Sherwood, Triangle-Kay Bee.

Fox Studios Active

The title selected for the first starring vehicle of Jewel Carmen by the William Fox organization is "The Kingdom of Love." This story is laid in the western part of this country, and in the Klondike, and is being made under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The cast includes Genevieve Blinn, Alfred Paget, Robert Milton, L. C. Shumway, Joseph Manning, E. Raymond Nye and Murdock MacQuarrie, together with a number of others.

The new Mix organization, which is making its first picture under the direction of E. J. LeSaint, had a number of additions last week. Besides Wanda Petit, who is playing the feminine lead, Alfred Paget, formerly at the Fine Arts Studio, and Dick Crawford have been engaged.

Settings representing scenes in Berlin at the time of the breaking of relations between the Kaiser's nation and the United States have been built at the Fox Studio for the subject now in the making under Bertram Bracken, which has Gladys Brockwell as star. No title has been selected for this. Charles Clary, Bertram Grassby and Willard Louis are the principal supports.

The Franklyn Brothers this week added the finishing touches to another child picture, "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," which will offer George Stone and Gertrude Messinger as leading man and woman. This child photoplay, with all of the scenes having a Persian atmosphere, is said to be the most beautiful made by this organization up to this time.

Henry Lehrman has selected players for another Sunshine Comedy which is now in the making. From all appearances no expense is being spared for this subject. Many of the settings are very elaborate, and most of the scenes will be laid in the interior of a high-class hotel of one of the large cities of the country. Lloyd Hamilton is to be the featured comedian of this organization.

Rothapfel and Zukor Hobnob

While here, S. L. Rothapfel of Rialto theatre, New York, who is on the coast for a short vacation, has spent considerable time with T. L. Tally of the First National Exhibitors' Association, conferring concerning matters of this organization. On one day Mr. Rothapfel was guest of President Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and together they visited the several producing plants where subjects for Artcraft and Paramount programs are made. At the Thomas H. Ince Studio a very interesting photograph was made which represents every phase of the film business. Wm. S. Hart in the photo represents the star, Thomas H. Ince the producer, Adolph Zukor distributor and Mr. Rothapfel the exhibitor.

"The Bloodhound," the third Wm. S. Hart Artcraft, was completed last week when final scenes were taken at the Hart Studio in Hollywood, and plans for the next subject have progressed so satisfactorily that the work of producing will be started within the week. John G. Hawks is author of the next photoplay for Mr. Hart, and the cast is now being selected.

The contemplated change of issuing "Flare-Up Sal" as the second Dorothy Dalton story on the Paramount program will not be carried out. Instead "Love Letters" will be released next, and following that will come "Flare-Up Sal," which is still in the making. At the studio those intimately in touch with production matters prophesy that this photoplay of early California days will be received with more enthusiasm than was Miss Dalton's recent Alaska story, "The Flame of the Yukon." William Conklin and Thurston Hall are the principal supports of Miss Dalton in this new picture, which is directed by R. Wm. Neill.

Fairbanks Company Returns

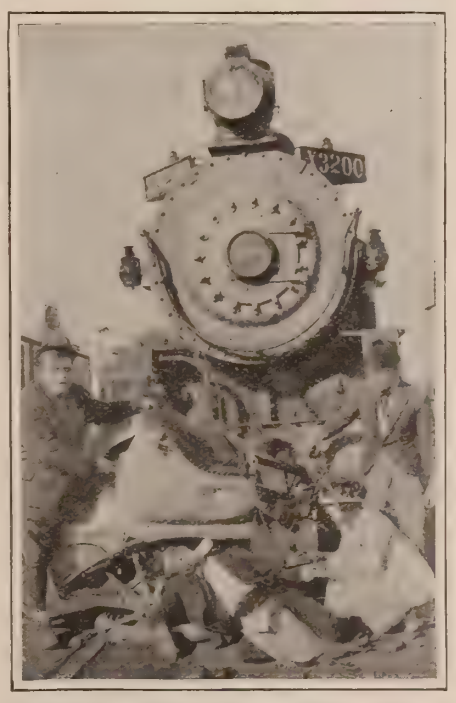
Douglas Fairbanks and company arrived home recently from spending ten days in the Grand Canyon and Arizona, and several days in the vicinity of Gallop, New Mexico, where exterior scenes for Fairbanks' coming production were taken. Marjorie Daw is playing opposite Mr. Fairbanks in this film, which is being directed by Allan Dwan. It was planned the subject would be finished by the twentieth, but owing to an accident which befell Miss Daw when two horses ran together, the production will be slightly delayed.

Director John Emerson and Scenario Writer Anita Loos, who have been East, are expected to arrive in Los Angeles within a day or two, and will then be ready to take up the filming of the next Fairbanks picture.

C. B. De Mille, director general of the Lasky Company, arrived home Friday, November 6, from a six weeks' vacation spent in the East. A greater portion of the time Mr. De Mille was in New Brunswick on a hunting trip where he went in search of a taste of winter weather, believing it would revive pep lost by the long stay in California. Mr. De Mille has already made plans for the filming of his next Artcraft subject which is to be an adaptation from a popular story of today. No information concerning the title is to be secured at the studio, but it is understood Jeanie Macpherson will prepare the screen adaptation. No information has been given out with respect to the star or players for this film.

William D. Taylor is completing the scenes for the screen version of "His Majesty Bunker Bean," a Saturday Evening Post story of the same title. This will offer Jack Pickford and Louise Huff as co-stars.

Seven Keystones Finished



Seven Triangle-Keystone comedies have been given their final title and have either been shipped or are now in the cutting rooms. The last made for the Triangle by Harry Williams is to be known as "His Hidden Shame." It has a cast that includes Max Asher, "Slim" St. Clair, Alatia Marton, Eddie Gribbon and Alice Davenport. Two of the completed subjects were filmed by H. Raymaker. One is to be known as "His Punctured Reputation." This features Bill Franey as a wrestler. Dale Fuller, Blanche Payson, Maude Wayne, Lallah Hart and Lloyd Bacon appear in this subject. "This Way Out" the other Raymaker Komedy has practically the same principals.

Mae Marsh, George Hill and Director Worthington on Location in Maine Shooting Scenes for Goldwyn's Feature, "The Beloved Traitor"

The western comedy recently made by Reggie Morris has been titled "Blood and Thunder." This features Ray Griffith who is now at Camp Lewis. Rose Carter and Frank Bond are other important players. Morris is now working on "Dimples and Dangers," a dancing master story with Harry Gribbon as the dancing master. Many of the Keystone beauties to be seen in this include Claire Anderson, Myrtle Lind, Dora Rogers, Lallah Hart, Dorothy Hager and Mario Bianchi.

Another Keystone which has Max Asher as leading comedian and Peggy Pearce in a featured part, will be known as "Courts and Cabarets." This is still in production, with a big cast that includes Mariana de la Torre, Myrtle Reeves, "Baldy" Belmont, Milburn Moranti and Eddie Gribbon.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and His Comedy Crew, Including Al. St. John and Buster Keaton, Flagging the Limited in "A Country Hero"

Harry Edwards, who recently joined the Keystone staff, is making a dumb waiter and artists' model story. Alatia Marton, Rose Carter, Sylvia Ashton, Dorothy Hager, together with George French, late of Christie Comedies, Milburn Moranti, and Fred Mack appear in this subject.

Kay Bees Doing Well

With "Betty Takes a Hand" finished, Jack Dillon, directing Olive Thomas, has taken up the making of "Limousine Life," which is an adaptation of a magazine story of the same title. The cast for this Triangle picture is now being selected.

Although painfully injured in a fall in which two ribs were cracked early last week, Director Raymond Wells is continuing with the making of "Man Above the Law" which is laid on the painted desert country.

Director Lynn Reynolds used a great number of extra people practically every day of the past week in the making of big ball room scenes for the "Gown of Destiny," adaptation from the Earl Derr Biggers story. Alma Rueben and Al Sears are the principals. Tierto Buzzi, a French actor, was engaged to take the role of the designer.

The subjects finished at the Triangle during the past week are: "A Sudden Gentleman" by Thomas N. Heffron; "Because of the Woman" by Jack Conway, and "The Maternal Spark" by Gilbert P. Hamilton.

Wyndham Gittens will during the coming week begin the filming of a crook story. The continuity for this is now being made by Gittens, aided by members of the Triangle scenario department. Monte Blue is to take the principal role in this subject.

Members of the Triangle producing organization, and friends of the film colony, are this week offering consolation to George Chesebro of the Triangle organization, who is mourning the death of his mother which occurred at a Los Angeles hospital early last week.

Universal Moves Forward

There is no change in the production program at Universal City this week, all of the producing units continuing on subjects started previously. This is the first time in the history of the film municipality that this condition has existed.

The last scenes for the Mae Murray subject being made by Robert Leonard, "The Eternal Columbine" will be finished within the next few days, as will also the western photoplay "Back to the Right Trail," which features Harry Carey with Molly Malone. Allen Holubar has started on filming the James Oliver Curwood Canadian gold mine story, "The Girl Who Dared," which has Dorothy Phillips in the featured role, and Wm. Stowell playing the opposite lead. Director Joseph DeGrasse is still working on "The Catamount," with Franklyn Farnum and Edith Johnson, and the Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford western, "The High Card" by Elliot Clawson, will shortly be finished. The serial companies continue, "The Bull's Eye" organization now being busy with the fourth episode, and Director Harry Harvey and "The Mystery Ship" cast working on the tenth. Director Elmer Clifton has completed filming "The Love Claim" starring Herbert Rawlinson and is now engaged in editing the same.

Chester Bennett, location director for Universal City, and Gladys Tennyson, former leading woman of comedy companies, now a member of the dramatic stock were married Thursday, November 15, and have been showered with congratulations by all of the Big U staff.

Metro Plans Ahead

Inasmuch as the Edith Storey Metro Company under the direction of Tod Browning has completed the last scenes for the first western made subject, "The Legion of Death," plans are now under way for the filming of "Revenge." Western Representative B. A. Rolfe has engaged Wheeler Oakman to play the leading role opposite Miss Storey in this subject and other members of the cast will be selected shortly. This story is from a scenario by H. P. Keeler.

The Viola Dana Metro Company in charge of Director John Collins, is spending ten days on the Mojava Desert for exterior scenes of "The Tiger Cat." A big setting has been erected there including an adobe house of large dimensions with a genuine Spanish patio and garden and adjoining buildings. Clifford Bruce is leading man of this organization, and one of the principal roles is taken by Mabel Van Buren. The scenario or screen version was prepared by H. P. Keeler. The Dana Company was accompanied by William Parker, scenario writer, who is preparing the next Dana scenario. It will be titled "The House of Hearts" and is an adaptation from a Myrtle Reed novel, "A Weaver of Dreams."

Russell Company Moves

After a week of fighting for the imaginary Aztec treasure supposed to be hidden in the manufactured Aztec city near Oxnard, California, the William Russell Company of the American Studio, now producing "In Bad" under the direction of Edward Sloman, have moved on to Brent's Mountain Crag Hotel, where the remainder of the exteriors for this photoplay are to be made. "Big" Bill Russell had the fight of his life in the scenes at the Aztec village, for it was there that his supposed friends turn against him and he fought the entire organization.

"Mlle. Tiptoe"

A new story was taken up by the Mary Miles Minter American Company, which is "Mlle. Tiptoe," from the story of the same name by Arthur Berthelet, adapted for the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney. Henry King is continuing as director of this producing unit. A feature of the photoplay is that Miss Minter will wear fashionable gowns in a greater portion of the scenes, but later changes to a backwoods costume. The star will also give a fantastic dance in this photoplay which will be an entirely new feature of her screen work.

Hollywood Hookum

Dec. 8, 1917 NEWS MORE NEWS

HEAR YE! HEAR YE!

The wildest imagination possible will be required for the reader of HOOKUM if he would guess what a veritable Thesaurus of cleverness is to be given him in an early issue.

Every member of this great photoplay colony centered about our beautiful flower clad village has been enlisted by HOOKUM to make this new feature the greatest conceivable. By it the publishers plan to increase the circulation by such gigantic strides that within the space of a few weeks we can truthfully print across the cover of this magazine "More than a billion readers (more or less) each week."

To divulge our plans at this early day would only whet the appetites of our readers to a too great an extent—we fear they could not wait until arrangements could be perfected.

This is but an announcement that we have something of a superlative nature to be created by the brain of the brainiest men and women of the fifth estate. Order your copies early!

Welsh: For your information I'm getting up a contest between scenario writers, publicity men, players, directors and executives whereby each will conduct a column in HOOKUM weekly, and contest for a Christmas present as to who presents the breeziest and wittiest column. Will probably start this next week or week after. JESSEN.

Fair, for November.

Irene Hunt is now taking dancing lessons.

Yes, Fanette, Margery Wilson is a titian blonde.

Lee Ochs was seen on the front row in one of our streets this week.

Walter McNamara is said to be growing a beard.

George Beban was fined ten dollars by his director for not wearing a hat needed in a scene out on location.

Our own dear G. du Bois Proctor we learn will stay on the gay white way. Pathe couldn't get a better man.

R. William Neill has been taking a correspondence course in Western drama through the W. S. Hart film school.

"Slim" St. Clair is very uppish here of late and this week went to Pasadena to spend a vacation with highbrow friends.

R. Arbuckle has inaugurated a ruling that no more pie throwing shall happen at his studio—Hooverizing one would say.

Pete Schmidt flitted in and out of our village of gasoline stations and by postcard authority we have it, he is again before his faithful Underwood.

Jack Mower has been presented with a gun by Duke T. Kahanamouku of Honolulu. It was sent for a Christmas present but arrived too early, and Jack just couldn't wait.

The Balboa press agent sends us a classified ad., or nearly that bad, concerning Anita King losing her pants. Yes, she has been wearing trousers in her last picture.

Bennie Ziedman has been increased in size by a coat of tan accumulated in the Grand Canyon. Some say he has been camouflaging to play the role of an American Indian brave.

When Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., was introduced to a new acquaintance as the next vice president of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation, he replied to dad: "Huh, I'd rather be a second lieutenant."

C. B. de Mille is press-agented to have killed two moose in New Brunswick, and being satisfied with that amount of the big game, is now on his way to our beautiful land of sunshine, fruit and flowers.

Haydon Talbot wants to know where his wife is. She left Los Angeles on three days' notice to sail with Muriel Starr for Australia to play in "The Bird of Paradise," and since that he hasn't had her address.

Bull Montana has been fighting again. The last time he went for three hours and fifty minutes and then Bill Russell stepped in and stopped him, fearing Bill and the opponent would overdue themselves.

A sign in a Hollywood boulevard cafe, near the Triangle Keystone studios: "Eat your lunch here and get Dale(y) Fuller." All of which we claim is a poor kind of a joke, especially if its intended to get business.

Henry Sunshine Comedy Pathe Lehrman is going to make a two reel subject featuring Ham Lloyd Hamilton and a fierce leopard. Nobody can tell where he got the leopard. Certainly not a member of the film colony zoo.

George Periolat, who is now running around half ashamed of himself because his present part in "Mlle. Tiptoe" at the American studio provides that he shall not put on make-up. He insists that it's as bad as doing a savage act.

Amy Jerome, according to the week's mistaken identity story, drew two pays in one day. It all happened because Mena Studio Manager Driscoll did not recognize her as she passed the pay window and slipped out the usual five to the extra woman.

Nell Shipman had the unique experience of trying to shove a Standard Oil truck up the street with her automobile. Now the universal joint is said to be up in front of the hood and a portion of the radiator is hanging on the rear of the top.

Jack Cunningham is chesty these days. With pride he will point out to his intimate friends that he has three subjects in production, "Betty Takes a Hand," "Limousine Life" and "Real Folks." Seems to be a habit of becoming prolific at the Culver City lot.

Disregarding all rules of the superstitious, Harry Edwards had the property man swing an 8 x 10 plate mirror about on his set in order to get the proper reflection, and it was cracked from one end to the other. The date of this was November 13, but everything still goes well.

Tom Walsh, employment and casting director at the Ince studio, is treasuring the diploma a hairlip man received from a Los Angeles or Hollywood photodramatic college. The journeyman actor insisted upon leaving the valuable piece of paper that Walsh could show it to Mr. Thomas H. Ince.

Baby Marie Osborn found it convenient to take some water out of a Diando studio radiator so that she could make mud pies while the company was on location. The chauffeur had to walk two miles to get a bucket and water to fill the tank because she forgot to turn off the stop cock.

When a story was sent out that the Christie plant had been leased to another comedy concern film exchange managers and exhibitors began wiring the Christie boys to know if it was true, and now Al. E. claims that it's a darn fine thing to know that you'd be missed and that somebody really cares for you.

Harry McCoy, who has been Keystoning for the past three years, has stepped into vaudeville. Friends from the studio numbering about sixty honored him on the first night and did several reel comedy stunts, including the presentation of a beautiful vase (of the break-away type), which was handed to him on the head.

Eddie Gribbon has invented a noiseless way of eating soup. His prescription provides that it should be filled up with broken crackers until it becomes of a pulp consistency and the diner shall then use a knife for conveying it to his mouth. Gribbon contends that the oval shape of the spoon is what makes the noise.

If the keeper of properties of the Ince studio needs any of the handsome draperies purchased especially for interiors of Fifth avenue palaces he can find them in the private office of Bert Lennen, who writes publicity at the Ince studios. Lennen has a wonderful office, finished in real classy style, and has gone even one step farther than that—he has tea every afternoon at four.

McClure Shows "Mother" at Red Cross Benefit

Through the courtesy of McClure Pictures, which organization is offering "Mother" for state rights distribution, the picture was shown on Monday, November 19, for the benefit of the Red Cross movement. The Reverend William H. Jackson, a prominent clergyman and an active participator in the Red Cross campaign, was responsible for the presentation of the George Loane Tucker feature, given at the club house of the Nassau County Red Cross Society at Oyster Bay, L. I.

Sponsored by McClure Pictures and offering as star Elizabeth Risdon, at present appearing in the William Faversham production of "Misalliance," now on tour, "Mother" was adapted from the widely read novel by Eden Philpott, entitled "The Mother."

Buck Added to Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange Forces

The newest member to be added to the distributing forces of Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures is A. G. Buck, who takes charge this week of the Philadelphia offices. Mr. Buck has managed the K.E.S.E. Philadelphia Exchange for the past year, and his activities and success have made him prominent in that territory and one whose services have been highly regarded by his associates.

Before coming East, Mr. Buck was manager of the Chicago branch, Fox Exchange, for a year, and before that served the same company satisfactorily in St. Louis. "I am looking forward to my association with M. H. Hoffman, Inc.," said Mr. Buck, "because I feel that its product and methods will give satisfaction to the exhibitor."

Pyramid Enters Field with Four Comedies

Newly Organized Pyramid Comedies, Inc., to Show First Four to Trade—Ray Hughes Featured—Werner, Abrams and Palmer Executive Heads

PYRAMID COMEDIES, INC., a newly organized producing company, with Arthur Werner, Charles F. Abrams and Harry Palmer as executive heads, will show its first four comedy productions to the trade this week. Ray Hughes, an eccentric comedian, is featured in Pyramid Comedies, and it is said that he is a comedian of more than ordinary accomplishments.

The policy of the Pyramid Comedies, Inc., is to make twenty-four productions a year, two reels each and release them semi-monthly, either the 1st and 15th of each month, or the 7th and 23d, in order not to conflict with other comedy releases and to enable exchanges receiving other comedies on either of these dates, to make their releases to fill in with the Pyramid productions.

The production arrangements have been completed, and the production establishment of the concern will be at Fort Lee, N. J., for a short period, after which productions will be made in Hollywood, Cal.

Ray Hughes, the featured comedian, is supported by well-known comedy players, with established reputations as comedians. William A. Seiter, well-known comedy director, is in personal charge of productions.

The four completed pictures are both unusual and sensational. The titles under which they will be released are "In and Out," with the action revolving around difficulties in a hospital; "Beauties and Bombs," in which the usual destruction and unusual comedy situations occur in a restaurant; "Love and Lunch," staged at a studio, within a studio, and in one of those get full quick lunch-carts; and "Beach Birds," which was produced at Long Beach, N. Y., with several thousand habitues of that place enthusiastically participating.

The advertising and exploitation is under charge of Harry L. Reichenbach, who announces a novelty in the form of a press sheet to be known as the semi-monthly tickle containing numerous stories, and which, he says, can be used as a herald by the exhibitor or to clip from to fill his publicity wants. The release dates for these comedies will be announced later. Mr. Hughes, the comedian, has been engaged for a period of five years.

"The Warrior" Making Record Sales in Middle West

The General Enterprises, Inc., film spectacle, "The Warrior," has been sold by Sawyer and Lubin for the States of Ohio and Indiana, to James Grainger, general manager of Allen Film Corporation, of Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Grainger bought the territorial privileges to "The Warrior" for Illinois, Michigan, Nebraska and Iowa during the recent sales trip made by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin in the Middle West. The many inquiries received from exhibitors relative to bookings for "The Warrior," induced Mr. Grainger to add to his purchase the States of Ohio and Indiana.

Contracts were also negotiated during the past week whereby W. E. Drummond, manager of Special Feature Co., of Knoxville, Tenn., becomes the owner of "The Warrior" for the southern territory embraced by the States of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida.

A good record in sales has been made by the picture featuring Maciste, as more than three-quarters of the country has been sold within the space of six weeks.

Harry Grossman, Oro President, En Route to Coast

HARRY GROSSMAN, president of the Oro Pictures, Inc., left last week for the Coast, where he will complete arrangements for the distribution of the Oro releases, and to discuss with the directors the plans for future productions to be made at the Bernstein studios, Los Angeles.

Before leaving, Mr. Grossman announced that the Celebrated Players Film Company, of Chicago; Abe Kaufman, of Memphis; Modern Feature Photoplay, of New York; Boston Photoplay, of Boston; Philadelphia Ideal Film Exchange, of Philadelphia, and Sidney B. Lust, of Washington, D. C., as a few of the leading independents that had signed for Oro pictures. The independent exchanges that have already received Oro franchises have stated that the Oro plan is a sound business proposition and that Oro pictures, judging by the first three releases, is the first program that assures the exhibitor of receiving a picture very close to the ideal. The Oro plan of distribution through independent exchanges is based upon such commercial lines as to compel the making of nothing but good pictures.

Mr. Grossman will make a number of stops en route to the Bernstein Studios, studying the conditions and placing Oro franchises in all open territory.

Good Reports on "The Fringe of Society"

"The Fringe of Society," the late Hoffman-Foursquare picture, produced by George Backer Film Corporation in seven reels, is being received with enthusiasm by exhibitors throughout the country, Hy Gainsborg, sales manager, reports. Ben S. Cohen, who has reached Denver on his trip to the Coast in the interest of this and other Hoffman-Foursquare Pictures, tory have heard of "The Fringe of Society" and want to see it screened. Similar reports have been received from the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges in other cities.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Awakening"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE AWAKENING" may justly be termed an unusually good five-reel picture. Its properties of suspense, appeal, atmosphere and realism are pronounced, while at the same time it possesses the customary vital points apparent in the general run of World-Brady releases. The name of the author is not listed on either film or press sheet, but it might be guessed that the story is an adaptation of a work of some French author of renown. It is so simple and straightforward in the telling and at the same time so abundant in sustaining interest that it certainly bespeaks the hand of some master, whether of the past or present.

It is superbly acted by a cast headed by Montagu Love and Dorothy Kelly. Mr. Love it may safely be said has never been seen in such a congenial role as that provided by the character of Jacques Revilly, the uncouth and forbidding artist, whose awakening occurs when the homeless Marguerite enters his life. He instills into the part certain qualities of gruff sympathy and strength of character, wrought by Jacques, early years of long suffering, that stamp him at once as both a sympathetic and admired figure. Mr. Love's make-up is, by the way, perfect. Miss Kelly, who returns to the screen in the role of Marguerite after a regrettably long absence, is thoroughly charming John Davidson and Frank Beamish are happily cast in the respective roles of Chapron and Varny.

George Archainbaud has given "The Awakening" the best production borne by any Brady picture since the old Peerless days. The atmosphere of the Parisian Latin quarter that has been obtained by both interior and exterior setting is convincing and never obviously striven for. The continuity is excellently arranged and the photography and lighting of the very best.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jacques Revilly (Montagu Love), an artist of the Bohemian quarter in Paris, is known as "The Beast," because of his uncouth and forbidding appearance. His only friend is Varny (Frank Beamish), a fellow artist who has penetrated beneath Jacques' exterior and found a loving heart within. On Christmas Eve when Jacques is returning to his hovel after a celebration in a cafe, he stumbles upon Marguerite (Dorothy Kelly) huddled on a door step. He carries her home with him, and warms the faint spark of life back into a flame. She accepts the hospitality of his home, and soon after the two grow to love each other dearly. Chapron (John Davidson), another artist, who boasts of his many feminine conquests, bets that he can win Margurite away from Jacques within the month. And he wins by foul means. A duel is arranged for between Jacques and Chapron, out of which the former comes slightly wounded, but with honor avenged. And Marguerite, because of his great love for her, elects to stay with him despite the fact that she believes herself unworthy of his name.

Joseph Granby and Josephine Earle contribute good supporting performances.

"Over the Hill"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"OVER THE HILL" is a melodrama that builds too long for the insignificant climax that caps it. It is one of those pictures that contains as its chief element what someone once designated as "just action." There is a large cast to be introduced and its many principals have not been any too well planted, while the author's delineation of the veteran publisher of "yellow" newspapers is rather unskilful when the framework of the story is considered and the introduction of the old minister, played by Dan Mason, is irrelevant to the main thread of action.

But these faults are in themselves slight. They merely serve to enlarge on the minus quantity that represents the plot. For reel after reel little happens of interest. The author seems to have floundered in the mass of characters and the theme of clean newspaper ethics versus sensational practices never dominates until the very end. As directed by William Parke the picture presents a satisfactory production, worthy of a much better foundation.

Gladys Hulette has been awarded a part that is quite slim considering her ability and name. William Parke, Jr., this time appearing as a juvenile heavy; Chester Barnett, as hero, J. H. Gilmour and Paul Clerget appear in supporting parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Amos Winthrop (J. H. Gilmour), owner of a string of "yellow" newspapers, sends his son, Roy (William Parke, Jr.,), a waster, to Columbia, a small town, to learn the details of the business on the Daily Pioneer. He finds a congenial companion in the person of the editor, Barnes (Richard Thornton), a fellow with an acute sense of sensationalism. Allan Stone (Chester Barnett), business manager of the paper, a clean minded fellow, has given Esther (Gladys Hulette) a position on the Pioneer. These two are constantly at odds with Roy and Barnes. Lawlor (Paul Clerget), owner of the Columbia department store, has persistently refused to advertise in the Pioneer owing to its character. Esther learns that his daughter (Joyce Fair) has planned a secret marriage with Columbia's leading baseball player. Esther acquaints Lawlor with this and they prevent what would have been a certain catastrophe. Roy learns of the planned elopement and writes a sensational story, featuring Lawlor's daughter and the baseball player. Esther to prevent its circulation burns the entire edition and then smashes the plates. The next morning Lawlor hands her his advertising contract. She and Stone rejoice in the triumph of clean journalism over sensationalism, while Winthrop removes his disgraced son and Barnes from the Pioneer.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Thirteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PERRY MASON and his associates in crime contrive a means whereby Ilma is entrapped in a piano box in "Over the Falls," the thirteenth episode. Perry and Stayne then make off with the box and girl in an auto-truck, while Harry and Kismet pursue via aeroplane. They overtake the villains, who after throwing the box in the river, flee. Harry attempts to rescue the box and its precious treasure by lowering himself from a bridge by a rope, but the rope breaks and Harry himself only escapes by a hair's breadth. When last seen the box is bumping dangerously over the water falls.

"The Sudden Gentleman"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HERE is a comedy-drama of a conventional sure-fire type, whose comedy often soars to the heights and whose drama, though it can never be taken altogether seriously, furnishes the required amount of sustaining interest. Its central figure is a happy-go-lucky Irishman, who suddenly becomes ward of a fortune and an aristocratic young lady. There is a fortune-hunting count after the ward, and an adventuress after the Irish gentleman himself, but a small dash of wits and a much larger one of fists proves effective and in the end hero and young lady, no longer aristocratic, however, are in each other's arms.

He who craves light entertainment will discover in "The Sudden Gentleman" many satisfying qualities. William Desmond is a good lead, who seems to have entered into the spirit of the story, refusing to become too ridiculously sincere even when the author would have him. His initiation into a home of wealth is done to the usual accompaniment of gawkish table and society manners, tricks generally worth while in the comedy line and surely so here because so well done. And his fighting always adds realism to the character name—Garry Garrity. Mary McIvor is good as the changllng young lady and Jack Richardson is the heavy.

All connected with the picture's production have contributed of their best. R. Cecil Smith is author, Joseph Anthony Roach, scenario writer; Thomas Heffron, director, and R. E. Irish, cameraman.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Garry (William Desmond), an Irish blacksmith, receives word from America that he has fallen heir to millions. Taking charge of the establishment, he immediately incurs the enmity of his cousin and ward Louise (Mary McIvor) by his awkward ways. Later, however, he blossoms forth into a real gentleman and Louise suffers a quick change of heart. Count Louis (Jack Richardson), finding his plans to marry Louise all miscarrying, has recourse to the road house and a woman to get Garry in a tight place. Garry's fighting blood rises as a result of this and when Louise breaks the engagement he so soundly drubs the Count that a confession arrives and all ends well for the lovers.

Margaret Shillingford, A. Hollingsworth, Donald Fullen, Alberta Lee, Walter Perry and Percy Challenger complete the cast.

"The Ship of Doom"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SHIP OF DOOM," written and directed by Wyndham Gittens, possesses behind a gripping story, a theme which immediately takes it from the ordinary run of features and elevates it to a more lofty plane. In all probability it will make no big splash in the list of box-office reports, for it has no stars of country-wide renown and there are some passages in it that will doubtless fail to penetrate far beneath the thick skin of fan satiated with the more superficial features of the day. And yet Mr. Gittens has scored a distinct success for himself, his company and the art in general, for "The Ship of Doom" reflects a knowledge, a comprehension of life, that has seldom if ever before shone forth from the screen.

The central character is Martin Shaw, a fisherman, who has killed for the sake of Clara, the woman he loves. His crime detected, he takes flight and Clara accompanies him. There follows suffering for both, hardships big enough to break the grip of the strongest. Fate is relentless and Martin crumples and falls from the strain of it, only to rise again, aided by the same fate that is this time kind. It is a stirring picture throughout, with the man-made justice of the courtroom for once omitted, the justice of conscience or, if you will, of God, superseding it.

The episodes that take place on the freighter of the high seas, where the cruelty of Shattuck runs amuck, the action in the lifeboats and the final meting out of deserts on the far away island are filled with strong, vital action. As director Mr. Gittens has done exceeding well. The sea stuff with the mutiny and the burning of the ship to the water's edge is strikingly realistic. The types were selected with care. Monte Blue makes a thoroughly realistic and effective Martin Shaw, and Claire McDowell as the woman, acts with a skill that is rare. Frank Brownlee as Shattuck, the sea captain, contributes an unusually fine study of the relentless villain.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Martin Shaw (Monte Blue), a fisherman, kills Whittlesey (Arthur Millet) because he has insulted Clara (Claire McDowell). Forced to flee the village, where he is under suspicion, Clara accompanies him. They take refuge on a vessel bound for the South Sea Island, captained by "Sundown" Shattuck, who is the essence of brutality. Clara attracts his attention, and, though he marries the two refugees, the ceremony is little more than a joke with him. He is prevented from violating the woman, first by a mutiny of his men, and second by a fire which, breaking out in the hold, completely destroys the vessel. Shattuck, Clara and Martin are in the same lifeboat with four or five sailors. The boat is too heavy and so they draw lots to see who will go overboard. Martin gets the broken match. He is given a keg as a buoy and left to the mercy of the waves. When a drifting row-boat is sighted, Shattuck decides that it is the place for him and Clara. Later they drift to an island where Martin has already found refuge. Shattuck again attacks Clara, but the quicksands serve her in good stead and the captain is swallowed up in them. Martin urges her to go back to civilization and leave him alone to pay for his crime, but though a rescuing party offers to take her back she stands by her husband.

Three Christie Comedies

(Christie—One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"STEPPING OUT," "Betty Wakes Up" and "Almost Divorced" are the three late contributors of Al. Christie to the screen. They are of the straight comedy type with a dash of the slapstick element, evident in all three. Of the three "Betty Wakes Up" is the most original in story and the least interesting. "Stepping Out" is so obviously fashioned by the author, to bring about a series of events calculated to give rise to a series of humorous situations, that its humor is lost in the attempt. The comedy situations find development in a series of mix-ups occurring when two newly married couples get acquainted. "Almost Divorced" is based upon the old idea of the rich relative dying and bequeathing to his kin an amount of money providing he be married or not married—in this case both, since the climax comes when the kin is notified that the money is due in the event of his marriage. He had been notified before that he was to receive the money in the event that he wasn't married before a certain hour. The mixup resulted from a wrong interpretation of the will.

No one of the comedies is above the average as sources of comedy entertainment. They are fair. The members of the cast are the brightest spots in them. Smiling Billy Mason and Betty Compson are featured in "Almost Divorced." Betty Compson is featured in "Betty Wakes Up" and Smiling Billy and Jay Belasco, supported by Ethel Lynne and Helen Leslie, do the honors in "Stepping Out." All three comedies have been given good production. The photography is of the highest order. Miss Compson is good to look upon and will brighten any production by her presence. She and Billy Mason would shine if given better stories.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS," with Annette Kellermann, the William Fox spectacle, which after a run at the Lyric theatre, New York, and other high-price houses throughout the country, is now to be put within the reach of the smaller exhibitor, was shown to the trade at the Lyric last week. A large audience in which there were many exhibitors attended this second trade showing.

"The Small Town Guy"

(Essanay—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

THIS is a Taylor Holmes picture, but it lacks the punch of some of his earlier efforts, such as "Efficiency Edgar's Courship" and "Fools for Luck." The story was taken from a novelette in Munsey's Magazine, entitled "A Picture of Innocence," and seems to be rather more bare of humorous possibilities than might be hoped for. At any rate, while the picture is undoubtedly good, it doesn't come up to the Taylor Holmes standard, because of the role he is forced to enact. In places it is draggy and the action lags.

The Essanay star does some good character work, nevertheless, and makes one feel that he is really looking at a small town guy. There is a good deal of humor in the picture and it no doubt will appeal to a great many audiences. Helen Ferguson, who plays opposite Mr. Holmes, is certainly one of the coming stars of the screen. Her work is splendid and she seems to have the happy faculty of being able to portray emotion without ever straining or overdoing it.

Fred Tiden and Mark Elliston, as the pair of crooks who make life miserable for the "small town guy," fill the roles of the light-fingered gentry extremely well and give excellent support. The fight near the end of the picture in which the "dub" lays out the city parasites with healthy wallops to the jaw is an exceptionally good piece of acting.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

To their disgust, Swell Dresser (Fred Tiden) and Slim McClearn (Mark Elliston), two Chicago confidence men, are forced to stay overnight in Compton Center. Ernest Cledhill (Taylor Holmes) meets them and they get him to go to the city to make his fortune and so that his ability won't go to waste in the little burg in which he lives. They use him as a tool in soliciting funds on commission for a new clubhouse, but Ernie is too green and gets caught. The authorities, however, see his innocence and let him go, advising him to stay away from the gang.

He goes back home to learn that his deceased aunt has made him her beneficiary. Ernie hesitates in telling his sweetheart, Eleanor (Helen Ferguson), about his troubles in Chicago. The two crooks return to town and try to collect "hush money," threatening him with exposure.

Ernie is then swindled in a land deal, but luck saves the day when a syndicate finds it needs his property for a dam. He cleans up big, so that when the crooks come back to him for the silence bribes his fighting spirit is up and he lights into them.

The story ends with Ernie attaining his heart's desire, cleared of the big-city stain, and with Eleanor in his arms.

"Tom, Dick and Harry"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

BILLIE RHODES is becoming more charming than ever in her single reel comedies, and this, her latest to be released, shows her off to the full. Always coquettish, she has plenty of admirers, but in this instance there are three ardent suitors trying to outdo each other to gain her winsome smile. Tom, Dick and Harry, in their endeavors to land, euchre themselves and engage in fisticuffs, while Harry (Jay Belasco), who by the way, has already married the guileless Billie several times, does so again, evidently to make it binding.

It's a clever little comedy and capably carried through; the scenic effects are fine and the release date is November 27.

"Her Dog-Gone Dog"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

JAY BELASCO and Billie Rhodes, ever popular in their single reel comedies, score another certified success in "Her Dog-Gone Dog." Invited to a masquerade party Billie decided, and Jay reluctantly agreed, to go as Buster Brown and "Tige," the dog, respectively.

Matters would have moved smoothly had not Jay, tired of leaping and "woofing" while the rest of the crowd were spooning and otherwise enjoying themselves, so at the first opportunity he escapes from the ball room. The sight of a tramp suggested an idea to him and a few dollars convinced the Knight of the Ties, so he put on his disguise and joined the party. After having visited the refreshment room the tramp got into a fight with one of the guests and behaved with Billie and all others like a real dog. And in the meantime Jay was sleeping. Finally the hostess called up the police department. In the meantime Jay had changed clothes with the tramp and, disguised again, walks into the ballroom. He finds Billie sore at him and a policeman who wants to take him to the police station. Jay escapes and after a lively chase enters the Browns home again. The tramp too returns—is recognized by Jay, who explains to Billie.

This reel contains many humorous incidents and is certain of a good reception. November 13 is the release date.

"The Mate of the Sally Ann"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY LISLE M. ALBRIGHT

IT has been a long time since Mary Miles Minter played in a picture that carried the charm of this one. Besides having a beautiful sea background and a story that is different, there are a lot of subtle touches that make the "Mate of the Sally Ann" one of the most delightful pictures of the season.

And the real hero of the story—if one may judge by the being about whom the most human interest lies—is not a man, but the cleverest dog that ever cast a shadow. The things he can't do and doesn't do are scarcely worth doing and the audience that can resist him has just had a glimpse of the snaky locked Medusa.

Perhaps it sounds unfair to give a dog such praise before the work of Alan Forrest, George Periolat and Jack Connolly is even mentioned. They all give Mary Miles excellent support, but so does this dog. And when the shaggy rascal picks up by the tail a pup that is having trouble navigating up a gangplank and deposits him on deck at the feet of his mistress one can scarcely keep from giving him a hand.

Miss Minter, as the little wild flower of the seashore, whose crotchety old grandfather won't let her go near other people, never did better work than as Sally. Henry King, who directed the production, deserves a lot of credit, for it's mighty hard to pick flaws in any part of the picture. It's a specimen of Mutual-American work that will give exhibitors who have switched to Mutual in order to escape the fifteen-cent per reel tax a feeling that they made rather a good move in getting such a picture for their patrons.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Captain Ward (George Periolat) is the skipper of an old beached tub, and Sally (Mary Miles Minter) is his granddaughter and first mate. Sally is the victim of her grandpa's tyrannical guardianship, the old man preventing her from meeting anyone because of his hatred of society as the result of his daughter's death at the time of Sally's birth. Each day the captain vows vengeance on Sally's father, whoever he may be.

Jack Gordon (Jack Connolly) and Hugh Schuyler (Alan Forrest) live in a big house by the sea, the latter reading law with the judge. One day Judge Gordon's dog runs away and makes up with Sally, who is playing on the beach. When the dog leaves her she follows him back home.

In the mansion of the judge Sally meets a pair of admirers and friendship and love both ripen. Impressed by the resemblance between the girl and the woman he secretly married and lost through a miscarriage of letters, the judge finally goes to see the captain and finds that Sally is indeed his own daughter. The romance is completed when she consents to marry Hugh Schuyler.

"The Judgment House"

(Blackton-Paramount—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE JUDGMENT HOUSE," a photoplay bearing on the eternal triangle, is J. Stuart Blackton's first contribution to the Paramount program, adapted and personally directed by the producer from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel. A distinguished cast which includes Conway Tearle, Wilfred Lucas, Violet Heming and Paul Doucet was assembled to portray the various characters in Sir Gilbert's lengthy and involved story.

These very qualities of the original work evidently led Mr. Blackton into an attempt to simplify his picure by various elisions. Situations, sometimes by-plots themselves and characters more or less prominent between the covers of the book have been deprived of a corresponding position on the film. That this pruning was of good intent is obvious. But in wielding the pruning knife the producer has not only shorn the plot of the unnecessary twigs but has seriously wounded the trunk.

As a result "The Judgment House" is seldom clear enough to be interesting and the characters are not definite enough to meet anything approaching enthusiastic response. The continuity is practically lost and the action muddled.

The production which Mr. Blackton has given the picture is adequate and the photoplay and camera effects in general are worthy of unstinted praise.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jasmine (Violet Heming), impressed with the strength of Rudyard Byng (Wilfred Lucas), a man who has made his millions in South African diamond mines, marries him though really loving Stafford (Conway Tearle). Byng dissipates and after three years Jasmine's life is miserable. Stafford, too much of a man to return her renewed love for him, learns that she has a suggestion of an affair with Fellowes (Paul Doucet), Byng's secretary. He prevents Byng from killing Fellowes by arguing him into believing that his wife is innocent of any breach of faith. The Boer war breaks out in South Africa and Byng, regaining his hold on himself, leads a British regiment. Stafford also partakes in the war, while Jasmine acts as a Red Cross nurse. Byng distinguishes himself by various heroic acts and at length rescues Stafford from the thick of the fight. Dying, Stafford urges him once again to pardon his wife, and so Byng goes to her repentant.

Crazy Thunder, an Indian, Florence Deshon and Luciel Hamill are seen in supporting parts of more or less prominence.

"Gift o' Gab"

(Essanay-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN this light comedy Jack Gardner is seen in a George M. Cohan type of role, talking or "gabbing" himself into success to the tune of a considerable number of thrilling stunts. In the first scenes of the picture one is treated to the sight of Mr. Gardner in football togs making the winning touchdown for his college in the last three minutes of play. Then comes the celebration which eventually discloses the star driving about in a sea going hack, jumping from his high perch to a limb of a tree, from there to the top of a passing automobile, from there to the roof of a trolley car and from there to the roof of still another. These stunts, executed with the right touch of dash and easiness, throw a new light on Mr. Gardner's abilities.

Subsequent to the celebration there is his unsuccessful business career as an inventor, followed by his ultimate success as a salesman because of his inborn gift of gab, and a happy ending to his love affair. The contents of the five reels is pleasing as a whole. The action moves at a good gait and there is a plentiful supply of comedy to keep the laughs coming regularly.

The director has given the picture good staging in every respect. Helen Ferguson is a charming heroine and Frank Morris a very human looking and acting college boy.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tom Bain (Jack Gardner) discovers that he must have something more than a fine record at football to provide for the needs of Peggy Dinsmore (Helen Ferguson), sister of his college chum (Frank Morris). Riding up and down grades on a railroad train gives him the idea of inventing a machine to bore tunnels through hills. He interests local capital through talking, sells his machine with more talk—and the machine is a glorious failure. But the president of the railroad company is so impressed with his gift of gab that he gets a job as a salesman and so is enabled to claim Peggy as his bride.

"The Hidden Hand"

(Pathe—Third Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AT the opening of this episode, entitled "The Island of Dread," the Hidden Hand is about to open the secret packet with the locket he has stolen from Doris. Her captors release her for the moment to see what the packet discloses. Doris quickly upsets a retort of powerful explosive which is standing on the table and the den is soon afire. The explosion knocks the Hidden Hand to the floor and before he is able to recover himself Doris has seized the packet and fled.

After more exciting interplay between the various parties, Doris, accompanied by Ramsey, the detective, sets out for the Whitney summer home on an island. The Hidden Hand has loosened the propeller on their launch and when far out on the water it slips off. A storm comes up and wind and rain drive the boat ashore. Doris and Ramsey take refuge in an old shack. When night falls Doris reclines on the bed, while Ramsey (his sense of virtue evidently getting the better of his common sense) seats himself on the shack's step in the pouring rain.

The Hidden Hand and his aides arrive. Ramsey hears noises and going to investigate is attacked by the band. He flings the packet from him as he sees himself overpowered. They bind and leave him on the shore. Doris is then captured and taken prisoner to the enemy's launch. Far out on the water she leaps overboard and hides under an upturned rowboat.

Doris Kenyon, Sheldon Lewis, Mahlon Hamilton and Arline Pretty continue in the leading roles.

"Her Silent Sacrifice"

(Select—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"HER SILENT SACRIFICE," Alice Brady's first picture under this banner is an adaptation from Henry J. W. Dam's play "The Red Mouse," made by Eve Unsell and directed by Edward Jose. Miss Brady has the type of part with which she has long been associated and which as a consequence she knows full well how to play. The character of Arlette, the misabused girl from Brittany who promises to sell herself to an old roue when he has made a success of the man she loves, an artist, gives her ample opportunities to display her emotional talents. And she performs with such sincerity that some few inconsistent situations in the course of the story's run are given a shading of strength that would otherwise be probably lacking.

The plot, with its constant playing up of the pursuit of the girl by the roue and its wealth of pointed subtitles, shoots its bolt somewhat further than the boundaries of strict propriety define. It is the bartering of virtue for shallow worldly success done in minute detail. That the roue is prevented by death from obtaining his lustful desire doesn't lessen the strength of the sex element in the least nor diminish the effect. This is only mentioned in fairness to both producer and exhibitor. Probably the majority of audiences are eager for such highly seasoned entertainment and only the very conservative will be at all likely to take offense at it.

The very character of the plot is responsible for its suspense, a property of which it possesses an abundance. Its happy termination is reached logically through a sequence of exceedingly well presented and acted scenes. The presentation given it by Mr. Jose and the camera work contributed by Benjamin Struckman are admirable as to detail and ensemble. R. Peyton Gibbs contributes some excellent work as the roue, Henry Clive is a pleasing artist, and the support adequate to the last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Arlette (Alice Brady), the nameless granddaughter of an innkeeper (Arda Le Croix) of a Brittany village, is branded a witch by the superstitious townfolk. Two strangers come to the village, Vale (Henry Clive), an artist, with whom Arlette falls in love, and Prince Boissard (R. Peyton Gibbs), a man she immediately dislikes. Learning the poverty stricken condition of Vale and realizing that the Prince, through his influence as a patron of the arts, can make him successful, Arlette finally accedes to his proposition; that providing he make Vale famous, she will give herself to him (the Prince). And so fame comes to Vale and Boissard demands his price. Meeting Vale again, Arlette's old love for him is renewed, but she agrees to stand by the bargain. But Sarthe (Edmund Pardo), servant of the Prince, who has long sought vengeance for the manner in which he has been mistreated, stabs his master while he attacks Arlette. She is then free to marry Vale.

Mrs. Blanche Craig, something of a co-worker with the Prince, contributes some typical character work.

"The Silent Lady"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS was the case with "The Cricket," the last production in which little Zoe Rae appeared, much of its entertainment value is due to three humorous characterizations given by a trio of veteran character actors. Harry Holden, Winter Hall and Edward Brown are the three in question. They appear as keepers of a lonely New England lighthouse, also the guardians of Zoe, a child of the sea. The lives of these three old codgers are set forth in great detail and the detail is most of the time humorous to a degree and at times touched with wholesome sentiment. That their various experiences will meet with response is a certainty, as even an off-audience at the Broadway theatre enjoyed them heartily. A sailor went into convulsions, two old ladies chuckled and a middle aged couple were constantly smiling.

Zoe Rae herself also pleased and another bit of comedy is contributed by Lule Warrenton as the housekeeper. And then there is a love interest, supplied by Gretchen Lederer, as the nurse, and the doctor. In fact it is the individual performances and the realistic detail supplied by Elsie Jane Wilson, who directed, that makes "The Silent Lady" the enjoyable picture that it is. The production is adequate.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Naomi (Zoe Rae) lives in the lighthouse with three old salts. When she is taken sick a doctor is called who brings a nurse, Miss Summerville (Gretchen Lederer), to take charge of her. The old men are somewhat aghast at having such a young woman in their home and their efforts to assume an indifferent attitude amuse her thoroughly. They learn finally that she has a past and Philemon (Winter Hall), the keeper of the light, a staid old New Englander, commands her to leave the place. But her past is proven quite innocent and the manner in which the old man is softened and Miss Summerville made happy by the love of little Naomi and the doctor forms a delightful conclusion.

"Molly Entangled"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

VIVIAN MARTIN appears as an Irish maid in "Molly Entangled," written by Edith Kennedy and directed by Robert Thornby. Miss Martin's attractive personality serves to brighten a story that, while it possesses a well evolved plot, never rises to dramatic or humorous heights.

Mr. Thornby has injected a delightfully homely atmosphere into the picture. The whole of it transpires in Ireland and there is not a false note in any of the scenes. The supporting types were well selected and the cast in general does effective work.

"Molly Entangled" is an average picture on its merits of story and production. Miss Martin does charming work and where she is popular the picture will be warmly received.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Molly Shawn (Vivian Martin), a maid of Ireland, lives with her father (Noah Beery), the blacksmith, who is indebted to the Barrys for his shop. Jim Barry (G. S. Spaulding), the profligate heir to the Barry estate, is in danger of losing it lest he marry. During a carousal he falls and is so severely injured that the town doctor pronounces that he will die before morning. In order to save the fortune for his mother (Helen Dunbar) Jim summons Molly and her father and putting the facts before them asks the girl to marry him. This she does, but with the arrival of the city doctor it is learned that an operation will fix Jim up as good as new. Molly in despair gives up hope and her sweetheart (Harrison Ford) is also resigned. But then there comes the startling revelation that the man who read the wedding ceremony for Molly and Jim was no priest at all but a fugitive from justice. It is within Jim's power to keep this information to himself, but, his better nature predominating, he confesses and restores Molly to her faithful Barney.

C. H. Gowland, Jane Keckley and W. A. Carroll complete the cast.

"The Hungry Heart"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

DAVID GRAHAM PHILLIPS'S novel, as adapted to the screen by Charles Maigne and presented by Pauline Frederick and cast, is far from being the best picture, or as good as some pictures, in which she has been seen. "The Hungry Heart" lacks strength of purpose, a convincing supporting cast and smacks too strongly of the risque. Miss Frederick is called upon to present a rôle that is lacking in the human, homely quality. The fact that Robert C. Vignola, the director, has seen fit to force certain situations by making his characters arrive at a desired location at the critical moment, may be overlooked by an audience. The fact also that Nancy is rendered speechless, at the desired time and through the agency of a slight accident in falling, and that later when it becomes necessary for her to speak, she recovers said faculty, apparently without any special medical treatment —these defects in scenario and production may be overlooked, also. And if some of the sub-titles can be read and forgotten and the scene showing the wife's lover fleeing from the house down the long stretch of roadway, can be seen and forgotten—then "The Hungry Heart" will have presented an entertaining bit of dramatic work before the camera and on the screen.

"The Hungry Heart," as presented, is not the best example of good story telling on the screen. Nor is it a good example of good dramatic work. Miss Frederick is handicapped by a poorly written script and poor direction. In the scenes which call for emotional action and convincing facial expressions, Miss Frederick rises to dramatic heights that are seldom attained by her contemporaries on the screen. In some of the scenes this strength of dramatic interpretation is evident in the star's work, in the story and in production but viewed as a whole, this latest work of Miss Frederick for the screen is not up to her standard. This lack is through no fault of hers. Members of her supporting cast are not convincing. Howard Hall, in the principal male rôle is kept from presenting the strong, virile man that he looks, by the nature of his part. He is not convincing as the neglectful husband. Robert Cain is a good type but does not register dramatic skill of action or expression. Helen Lindroth overacts in every scene in which she appears. Eldean Steuart, a youngster, does a bit well.

The exterior scenes are beauties. The photography is all that could be expected for clearness. The lighting effects get the best results.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Courtney Vaughn (Pauline Frederick) and Richard Vaughn (Howard Hall) have just returned from their honeymoon, when the story opens. Richard is a chemist, and he becomes so interested in his work that he neglects his wife. The arrival of a little son does not help matters. Five years elapse and Basil Gallatin (Robert Cain) comes to the Vaughn home to assist Richard in his chemical experiments. Mrs. Vaughn, longing for companionship, meets Gallatin at every opportunity. They become fast friends. There is an explosion at the laboratory, and certain instruments are destroyed which Richard must replace. He leaves for New York to get them. During his absence Nancy (Helen Lindroth), the servant, is awakened one night and, suspecting Gallatin's intrusion, goes to Courtney's room and discovers him there. Nancy is injured when she falls in attempting to leave for her room, and the fall renders her speechless. Richard returns. Soon after Nancy recovers her speech and tells him all. Gallatin has left, fearing Richard. Divorce proceedings are commenced, and Courtney is granted her freedom. Richard leaves. Soon after Gallatin hearing that Courtney had been divorced, returns to her home. Richard had also returned, asking leave to work in the laboratory until he could establish another. During his stay they both realize that each had done wrong and a new understanding resulted. Gallatin is refused by Courtney and, fearing trouble, leaves. Richard and Courtney are united in happiness.

"National Red Cross Pageant"

(National Red Cross Pageant Committee—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

UNDER the direction of William Christy Cabanne, the scenes enacted at the National Red Cross Pageant, staged at Rosemary, Huntington, Long Island, October last, have been registered by the camera, and the result is five reels of most interesting film. The scenes are enacted by artists of both screen and stage, including Ethel Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, John Barrymore, Hazel Dawn, Ina Claire, Tyrone Power, Frances White, William Rock, Blanche Yurka, Gladys Hansen, Rita Jolivet, E. H.

Sothern, Lumsden Hare, Marjorie Rambeau and Helen Ware. Mrs. H. P. Davison, wife of the chairman of the Red Cross War Council; Mrs. Ben Ali Haggin, and other prominent society folk, are seen in important impersonations.

This is, without a doubt, the most gorgeous pageant ever staged in this country. The costumes are gorgeous, the scenes have been given lavish and appropriate settings and the principals are all recognized as artists in the dramatic field. As a subject of interest on the screen, the National Red Cross Pageant, as reflected by the camera, is deserving the place of honor on any exhibitor's program, and can supplant the best feature on the program without loss registered in the box-office.

The picture is divided into two episodes. The first shows how universal happenings have led up to the world war that is now waging. The second, entitled "The Drawing of the Sword," the more dramatic of the two, tells of the entry of the Allied Powers, one after the other, in the cause of humanity. The picture is not simply a series of pretty pictures, but it tells a story in a most convincing manner. The suspense element is as much in evidence as it would be in a dramatic masterpiece. It holds the attention from first to last. There has been no attempt at trick photography or the use of the fade-out. In spots the picture gives evidence of poor cutting. The action jumps, caused by poor assembling. The absence of the dissolve effect and other methods of turning from one scene to the other is responsible, in a large measure, for this disturbed action.

These views of the National Red Cross Pageant present the unusual to the screen. There has been seen nothing just like these pictures before. In addition to the prominent artists whose names are mentioned above, Adolph Bohm's Russian dancers are seen in action, as are prominent exponents of esthetic dancing. The picture should be shown by every exhibitor in the United States, and every exhibitor can be assured that he will have shown a picture that every man, woman and child has enjoyed.

"Who Goes There?"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

HARRY MOREY, Corinne Griffith and good support with the latest work of Robert W. Chambers to be adapted to the screen by Vitagraph, as a script to interpret, present a picture that is of sure-fire calibre. "Who Goes There?" is good material of photodramatic work. It makes possible strong, convincing action, holds the interest to the last and presents a cast of capable screen artists. Mr. Morey is an ideal type for the role of an officer in the Belgian Guides. Miss Griffith, seen for the first time opposite Mr. Morey in the principal feminine role, enacts her part with true dramatic feeling, and makes a striking contrast to the virile, strong character presented by Mr. Morey. The two work together to advantage. In this production, Miss Griffith does the best bit of acting since her appearance in leading roles for Vitagraph.

"Who Goes There?" presents a picture that is entertaining in every scene. The story runs smoothly with action emphasized in every scene. Director William P. S. Earle has taken advantage of a powerful dramatic scene to introduce his main character and theme. He does not rely solely upon the timely element of the story to bring its intent forcibly before an audience. A flash of the scenes which call for unpleasant happenings, but which are essential to the story, is all that is shown. Later in the telling of the story, Mr. Earle has resorted to flashbacks of this initial scene. He could have left this to the imagination of an audience and have accomplished better results. One flashback would have been sufficient to fix in the minds of an audience the thought that the second and third flashback suggested. Excepting this minor difference, Mr. Earle has produced a picture that will stand the scrutiny of the most discriminating without presenting a noticeable fault.

It has been given a good production, the cast does commendable work, the cameraman was on the job every minute, the scenarioist gave the director a good script from which to work, and the sub-titler finished with appropriate and snappy explanatories.

Harry Morey works like the artist he is. Corinne Griffith renders fine support. Arthur Donaldson gives a good account of the German officer. Mary Maurice is seen to advantage in a bit. The story is not always based on sound reasoning, but it furnishes interesting narrative on the screen.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kervyn Guild (Harry Morey), a former officer in the Belgian Guides, a regiment of nobility, is captured with other Belgian refugees. He is brought before the German commanding officer and promised his and the freedom of the other refugees if he will go to London and bring back the girl whom General Von Reiter (Arthur Donaldson) loves. He promises in the hope of saving the lives of hundreds of other Belgians. He arrives in London and locates the German's sweetheart, Karen Girard (Corinne Griffith). In planning his escape with the girl, Guild scents trouble because he notices that he is protected by German agents and hunted by British secret service men. At the dock his baggage is passed by a German inspector and he and the girl are safely landed aboard the ship. The girl has taken a small portfolio which she keeps locked. Guild becomes suspicious and demands that he see the contents. She refuses to give him the key. The boat is held up by a British warship but the cruiser is destroyed by a torpedo.

Landing in Holland, they are assigned room in the house provided for them by Gen. Von Reiter, until his arrival. Guild notes that the Belgian natives are in danger of attacks from the Germans and he resolves to assist them. While he is preparing to enter active service, General von Reiter arrives and demands from the girl why she does not love him. She says that she loves another and he forces her attentions. Guild arrives in time to prevent this action and, in a duel, wounds the officer. The General forgives him and the girl and furnishes them passage in safety.

"His Old-Fashioned Dad"

(Falcon Features—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

DANIEL GILFETHER and Mollie McConnell as Dr. Silas and Mandy Morton, respectively, make a charming old couple of the indulgent, self-sacrificing kind for a reckless, though plausible son. Emory Morton, the son (Richard Johnson) gives a very fair characterization of the wayward boy who, though knowing of his parents' sacrifices, still goes the limit at poker playing, whiskey drinking and general carousing.

The picture is based on the ever virile theme of the old-fashioned parents stinting themselves of almost the necessities of life to enable the son to obtain an education. It is a well defined, straight cut story, well directed, nicely photographed, full of pathos, and shows most clearly to what lengths loving parents will go to help a son whose profligacy they never dream of.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Emory Morton, son of an old-fashioned country doctor, is enabled to take a medical course at college through the sacrifices of his mother and father. His indulgence in the usual failings of college life leads to repeated requests for money, and at last the horse and cow are sold to meet his demands. All this greatly depresses the doctor. He takes out a life insurance policy. When another request for money is received, this time the excuse being illness, he determines to visit his son. Meantime Emory's engagement to Nettie Wright is in danger of being broken as her father decides that the boy must first make good financially.

One day, by accident, Emory discovers a bacillus which he realizes is of vital importance, and when the doctor arrives and discovers his son playing poker, Emory tells him that he is old fashioned in his ideas, and insists that it is necessary for him to gamble to obtain money to develop his wonderful discovery. The doctor is stunned as he realizes that perhaps he is old fashioned. On the way home there is an automobile collision and he and another passenger are taken to a hospital. That night the other injured man dies, and Dr. Morton changes charts with the dead man in order that his wife and boy may profit by his insurances. The deception is successful. When the insurance is paid to the widow she promptly gives it to her son and he continues his research work and redeems himself with the girl.

The widow lives alone and her fear of tramps becomes an obsession. Meantime the father, a tramp and derelict, gradually works his way to the old neighborhood, yearning for a glimpse of the old home. Late that night the widow sees the woor knob move, whereupon she shoots through the door, only to discover that she has killed the husband she thought dead.

"Hard Luck"

(Essanay Comedy—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THIS single reel comedy, arranged and directed by Arthur D. Hotaling, introduces a new stunt by way of revenge resorted to by a restaurant patron because he is compelled to pay for a steak that was so tough it could not be eaten. He has signs painted which read: "Free Meals at Joe's," and hires a sandwich man to travel the town bearing the good tidings. The result is that Joe, the restaurateur, unaware of the scheme, does a land office business until time comes for the payment of the checks, at which time the sandwich man makes his appearance for a good square meal. The result is better imagined than expressed. It's a harmless, amusing comedy, and should be well received wherever shown.

"Reaching for the Moon"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

UNTIL Douglas Fairbanks falls out of bed in the fourth reel of the five that chronicle the events occuring during the time that he is "Reaching for the Moon," we are all but convinced that he is in reality King of Vulgaria, and thoroughly appreciating what the fellow meant when he wrote, "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." So artfully has Anita Loos and John Emerson, working in collaboration, fashioned the script of "Reaching for the Moon," and so cleverly have they led the audience up to the point where it is perfectly feasible to believe

Mary Garden, the Majestic Star, Will No Doubt Dazzle Anew the Blase Screen Public in Goldwyn's Elaborate Feature, "Thais"

Claire Du Brey, Whose Alluring Presence Scores in Bluebird Productions

Marion Davies, the Pathe Star, Who Will Shortly be Presented in "Runaway Romany," Which Is Said to Be a Child of Her Own that Alexis Cæsar Napoleon Brown is entitled to the crown of Vulgaria, that the reviewer will wager that there isn't a half dozen persons in the millions who will see Mr. Fairbanks in his latest creation for the screen, who will anticipate this most welcome but unconventional awakening of this most distinctive Brown person. The awakening is welcome because we are thoroughly convinced that this fellow Brown would rather be back in the button factory transferring items from the debit to the credit side of Bingham's ledger than to be King of Vulgaria and have to hear the "honor and obey" stuff from Princess Valentina.

There is a touch of the burlesque given Mr. Fairbanks's latest work that renders this production distinctive as compared to other Fairbanks' pictures. There are few exhibitions given on the screen today that can be referred to as original in development. The idea of having enacted on the screen the unprobable or impossible, and then to explain it away by running a sub-title or showing a flash of the hero or heroine waking from a dream is old stuff, but to have Douglas Fairbanks enact what he has seen in his dreams and to accomplish this without conveying the slightest hint that he is "only dreaming" until he catapults from bed, is clever originality. Well done Anita Loos, John Emerson and Douglas Fairbanks, enter thou into the kingdom of good scenarioists, good directors and clever actors, respectively.

This development of the dream idea should not be encouraged in dramatic work for either screen or stage, but it must be confessed that the authors of "Reaching for the Moon" have pretty nearly succeeded in convincing, one at least, that it's not a bad idea after all.

Anita Loos and John Emerson have done faultless continuity. There isn't an obstacle left in the way of true dramatic action. It rings true from the opening flash to the fade-out. If one word were added or one subtracted from one of the sub-titles there would be confusion. They are meaning, emphatic accents, accenting action, not supplying it.

Some will shake their heads after witnessing this performance. They will be disappointed. Not because the picture lacks dramatic merit but because it lacks Fairbanks' stunts. Mr. Fairbanks displays as much pep if not more than usual, but he does not jump from second-story windows to the branches of a tree, scale fences six feet in height or leap from the back of a charging horse—none of these—and this is the work that his audiences have been educated to expect and unconsciously do expect. The nature of the story is such that the authors could have made possible some of these thrillers without destroying its smoothness or dramatic worth. They have seen fit to let Mr. Fairbanks convince his audiences that he is an actor as well as a stunt artist and in this they have done admirably, in the opinion of the reviewer.

John Emerson shows in creation of this work for the screen that he has few equals for accomplishing detailed work in production. The scenes covering three reels or more of this production are laid in an Italian city—presumably Venice—where the streets are canals. Mr. Emerson did not take his company to the Italian city, but he could not have reprodueed a street of Venice on the screen with more realistic results if he had set his camera on the banks of the Grand Canal and shot the actuality. The directorial work in these scenes is to be highly commended. The shots of the Plaza Hotel are evidence of this detailed work.

Some clever bits of comedy have been made possible by the authors. The scene showing Brown scanning the menu, noting the prices and choosing the least expensive dish and drink and the close-up of the menu and its prices give rise to some of the best bits of clean humor recorded on the screen. Richard Cummings is a typical business man and idealizes Old Cummings. Eileen Percy has little to do but does that little well. Millard Webb's absence would have detracted not a little from the picture. Frank Campeau makes a villainous pretender. Eugene Ormonde has a minor role.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Alexis Caesar Napoleon Brown (Douglas Fairbanks) is a clerk in Old Bingham's (Richard Cummings) button factory. He entertains high ideals, so high, in fact, that Old Bingham thinks that he would do better outside of his employ. Brown's sweetheart, Elsie (Eileen Percy), is a firm believer in concentration of thought if one would realize his or her ambitions, but she confine her ambitions to the acquisition of a husband and a neat little cottage in Jersey.

Brown aspires high. He would be king—a ruler of nations. He is fired from Old Bingham's employ and goes to his room to think it over. An idea strikes him. A distinguished foreigner had registered at the Plaza. Brown looks him up, and engages a table next to the one occupied by him. He gets a good look and leaves. He returns to his room to think it over and lies down to rest.

He is interrupted by the distinguished stranger who has come to announce that he is heir to the crown of Vulgaria, and wishes him to depart at once to be crowned. Brown and he leaves on the boat. The stranger notifies him that because there are spies aboard, he must not eat the food served for fear of poison, and he must not speak aloud. His troubles had begun. It wasn't such a cinch to be a king. They arrive in Vulgaria, and he discovers that there is a pretender, Black Boris (Frank Campeau). Plot after plot is devised to bring death upon Brown. A grand reception is arranged, and Brown is to meet his future wife and queen, Princess Valentine. The princess proves to be an old maid, not good to look upon. He resolves to quit his job of king and return. Then he wakes from his dream, returns to the button factory, gets his job back, and he and Elsie plan to buy a little cottage in Jersey on the installment plan.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE eleventh chapter of this interesting and exciting serial, "A Fight for a Million," shows Helen still on the heels of the Baron and the members of the Syndicate, and also discloses the fact that Bonner, who up to the present has been Helen's ardent champion and co-worker, has gone over to the syndicate. But it will doubtless be shown that in so doing he has some ulterior object to serve, which object might possibly be the discovery of the lost express, and the garnering of the attractive reward therefor. In the preceding chapter Helen got a glimpse of this same express in a tunnel, but being discovered, the band dynamited the fimountain side, and so obliterated the scene, on account of which Helen was unable to retrace her steps.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal-Mutual—Two Reels)

The Baron's gang have already mined a large quantity of gold from Thurston's property, and are on the point of removing it when word comes that Thurston has sufficiently recovered his health to permit his taking a trip to inspect the mine. This news is not calculated to reassure the men—Pitts particularly, for he is playing a double game and is working under a power of attorney, which Helen does not believe he acquired honestly. They therefore decide to remove the sacks of ore before the arrival of the train which is to bear Mr. Thurston.

Helen hears of their scheme and is at her wits' end to devise some plan to circumvent them. Things are now moving apace, Helen as spry as ever, the Baron's clique perhaps more cunning, and excitement runs high.

This chapter is fully up to the preceding, and again may a forceful climax be expected in the next.

"Four Ebony Comedies"

(Ebony Comedies—One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THE first four comedies produced by the Ebony Film Company, one reel each, with the cast composed of colored comedians, were shown for review last week. They present the slapstick variety and should go big in the houses what cater to the colored folks. As a filler for the program of the exhibitor who caters to the white patrons, these comedies cannot be recommended, as they present a quality of comedy that is not accepted as wholesome. The director has carried the slapstick stuff too far, presenting such scenes as members of the colored race throwing batter at one another, eating peas with a knife, coated with molasses to insure safe passage to the mouth, and other so-called rough stuff that can be appreciated only by those who see life from this angle.

With the scenes referred to cut out, the Ebony company would have short features that would be accepted in any theatre excepting perhaps in the South. There are scenes in all four comedies which reveal good, wholesome humor, but the bad effect left by the rough stuff counteracts any good effect that might have been felt either before or after. It is said that these comedies have been run in colored houses and have kept the house in an uproar. There is no reson why these comedies should not be run in other theatres, if the rough stuff were eliminated. The featured player in each of the four comedies gives evidence of good talents for comedy work. R. W. Phillips directed.

"Breaking In"

(Jaxon-General Film—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

POKES AND JABS give a great display of slapstick comedy in this single reeler. Pokes having taken a full course in villainy, decides to become a burglar and enlists Jabs as his assistant. They have some highly exciting experiences, first breaking into a house infected with measles, and later falling foul of athletic Edna, who has been waiting for such an opportunity to display her prowess. She vanquishes the couple in short order. They are eventually arrested.

Perfect Light Control
At the will of the Operator

THE amperage can readily be regulated to light or dark pictures as easily as turning gas up or down.

At the same time, the voltage lowers and raises automatically in proportion to the changing length of the arc.

The Transverter insures a perfect arc, a steady, bright, white light and more artistic projection of pictures without waste of current.

You can make a perfect dissolve with two-arc Transverter

SILVERTIP

Silvertips Will Give You Perfect Projection

TRY THEM!

To absolutely center and prevent the crater from wandering is one of the biggest problems in present day projection practice. The least flicker is sufficient to spoil the best picture and give the audience the impression that careless operation is responsible for the poor pictures on the screen.

There is only one way to avoid such annoying occurrences—properly designed projector carbons must be used. The small diameter, heavily plated Silvertip used with National upper is now the standard D. C. trim in America's representative theaters.

For A. C. Operation

the new White A. C. Special gives a pure white, flickerless light which is absolutely noiseless, a direct current arc effect with alternating current.

Write for our booklets describing these standard projection carbons.
A carbon for every current requirement.

Standard Equipment

THE following letter just received is of sufficient importance to publish, for it brings out one point overlooked in the editorial referred to in the November 10 issue—namely, the case of substitution of inflammable film in machines carrying special sprockets:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh avenue,
New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: The writer read your editorial in the November 10 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, just received, entitled "Special Width Film," with much interest.

The writer has been interested in various phases of the motion picture business for the past fifteen years, and since the introduction of standard film and perforation, has taken your attitude absolutely.

Clever salesmen and managements in some instances have convinced individuals and also some schools and other institutions to buy such equipment, to discover their mistake later on, with possible disgust and detriment to the entire industry. This is the case in certain schools, who were practically presented with such an equipment through the sale of newspaper subscriptions, to find out later that the film library actually met about one or two per cent. of their needs. Incidentally we may mention that we have inflammable film to fit these very machines, of which we will be glad to send you a sample upon request.

We have written hundreds of letters on this very subject, have spent weeks with numerous city authorities and underwriters, and came within an ace of taking part of this subject matter into court, which may yet happen, in order to assert our attitude and rights.

Will you kindly put us in touch with the proper parties of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, as the writer desires to put in an application for membership.

Wishing you much success in your efforts, and assuring you of our approval and co-operation, we remain,

Very truly yours,

WHY fool ourselves? Why do everything possible to cripple our industry? Why not come out in the open and all work with the same tools? Why try to sell the public something which is fundamentally wrong? Every man who uses pictures should be able to rent film from any exchange and not be at the mercy of one small producer whose product is so limited as to be practically worthless.

The idea of safety and protection is based on theory only, for non-inflammable film can be made standard width just as well as inflammable can be produced for special sprockets. To be sure, it is a talking point for the promoter and gives the prospectus writer new fields in which to allow his imagination to roam unrestrained.

We have heard of the wonderful libraries of educational and special instructional film which were to be produced for special projectors, but as yet they are almost as far from being practical realities as is possible. Some companies have started, some are still starting, some have offices, others are in a nebulous state, but on the whole they are, as anticipated, absolutely unable to fill the present needs. The brains behind these companies, however, would be of inestimable value to the industry were they to bend their energies toward making film of the standard width, so that all schools, institutions, theatres and others owning small or large projectors of standard requirement could take advantage of their product.

THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers have gone into the question of standard sprockets most thoroughly and have recommended that those used on the recognized theatre projectors be adopted universally as standard. These men represent the active mechanical brains of the business and their attitude is beyond criticism in this matter, as well as in the matter of film width, which has already been discussed in the NEWS. The sooner we recognize their recommendation the better for all of us interested in the progress of motion pictures. The question of inflammable or non-inflammable film is aside from the point in hand, as either can be manufactured so as to be interchangeable, no matter what the size or shape of the sprocket or the number of teeth employed thereon.

We have all heard the old quotation, "You can fool all of the people some of the time—some of the people all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time." This applies to the "special" mechanical phase of the picture business absolutely and the sooner it is realized the sooner we will have a unified industry working continually toward one common end.

E. K. GILLETT.

EQUIPMENT OPERATING PROJECTION QUESTIONS ANSWERED

The Porter Continuous Projector

IN recent years the efforts of many inventors have been concentrated on the perfection of continuous motion picture projection, and many methods have been proposed and patented whereby the use of the revolving shutter could be eliminated from motion picture projectors, and the intermittent type of film movement also dispensed with.

A projector which operates without the customary revolving shutter and intermittent movement is known as a Continuous Projector, and any machine based upon these principles which can produce satisfactory results on the screen will have numerous advantages, not the least of which are the economy of light and a reduction of the wear and tear on film.

After several years of experiment, Mr. Edwin Forsythe Porter of Boston, Mass. claims to have solved the problem of continuous projection, and the result of his labors is the Porter Continuous Projector, which is being exploited by the Motion Picture Appliance Company, 93 Broad street, Boston. We have not seen the new Continuous Projector and cannot, therefore, describe its performance, but we understand that a perfected machine has been constructed and a public demonstration will shortly take place in Boston. We are indebted to Mr. Fred L. Hall, treasurer of the Motion Picture Appliance Company for the following brief description and diagrams of the Porter Continuous Projector, which we are pleased to submit to our readers.

The optical system of the Porter Continuous Projector is identical with the system used in intermittent projectors, with one exception.

The rear lens of the objective is split in two parts and mounted on two shafts which connect with the shaft that carries the sprocket on which the film runs direct from the upper magazine, past the aperture plate, and into the lower magazine. This divided lens is made to revolve at the same speed as the sprocket, and as the pictures move up sixteen per second on the screen, the revolution of the rear objective deflects the light downward at the same speed that the images move upward, thereby neutralizing their movement and holding the picture steady on the screen.

Fig. 1.

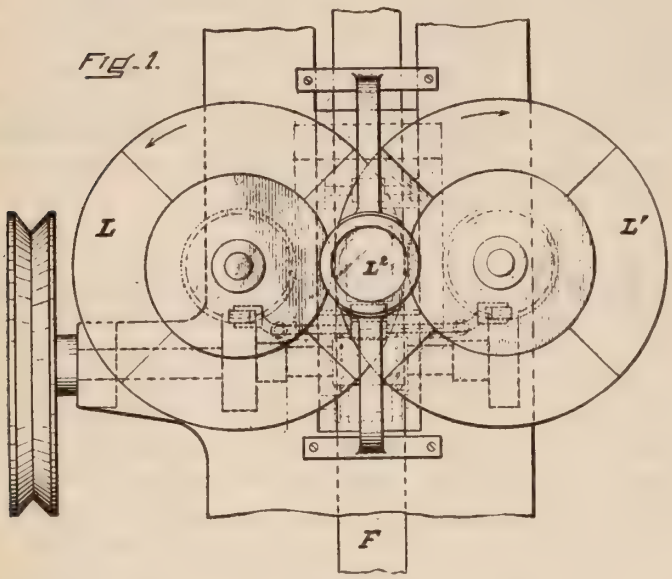

Fig. 2.

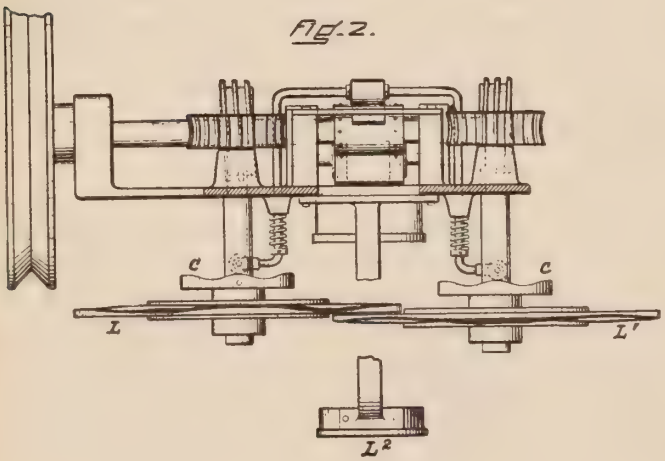

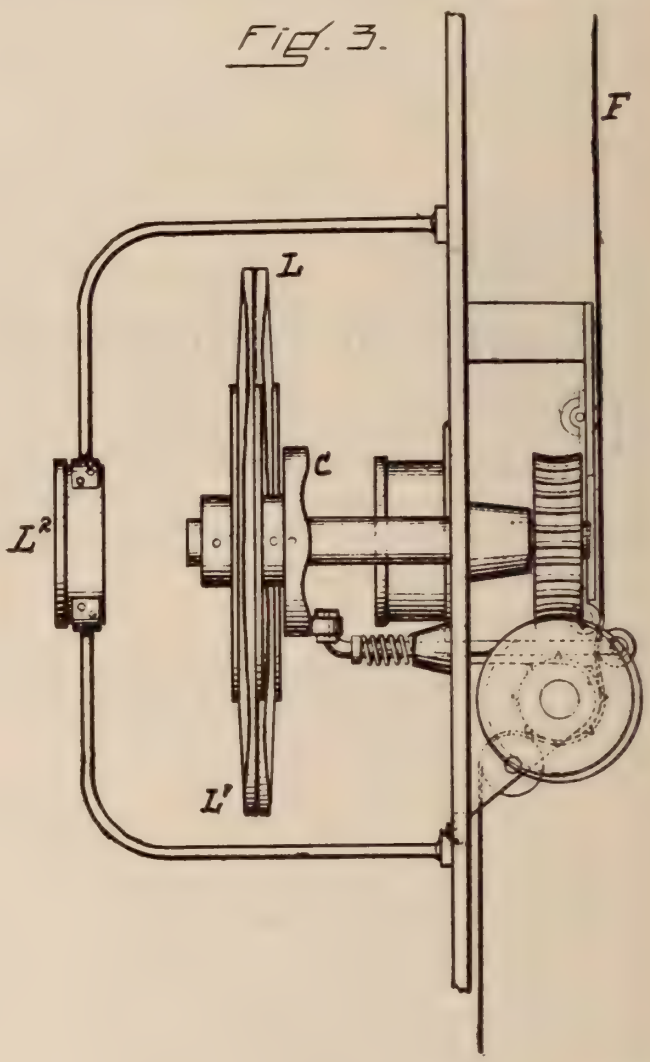

Fig. 3.

Inasmuch as there is some inherent variability in a revolving lens, a cam is placed on the same shaft that the lens revolves on, and by generating the cam any variability or irregularity which may exist is said to be thereby eliminated.

The use of any combination of lenses and prisms alone does not fully compensate the movement of the picture on the screen. In every case there is a slight residual rhythmical up and down movement of several inches. This residual up and down movement, which is inherent in all combinations, is of course fatal, as it is necessary to produce the effect of a rock-steady picture.

Just here is where the cam is useful, by moving the front lens of the objective up and down. This up and down movement being opposed to the rhythmical movement of the picture on the screen, can be made by exact opposition to counteract the movement on the screen and bring the picture to a standstill.

In continuous projection, two pictures are momentarily superimposed on the screen, and of course, require accurate registration, one over the other. In this projector, means is provided for the establishment of such registration, which can be made exact by adjustment for any distance from the screen.

This adjustment is accomplished by bringing the rear and front lenses nearer together or farther apart, so that they can be registered for any length of projection, adapting it to any condition of distance.

In the figures, L and L^1 are the rotating back lenses of the objective; L^2 is the front lens; C, C are the cams and F is the film.

Film Punching, Screen Ghost, Etc.

W. J. FALLON, Sioux City, Iowa, writes:

"Enclosed you will find several stencil marks which I cut out of a practically new Mutual Picture, the name of which is Olive Tell in the "Unforeseen." I received same from the Omaha branch. Now, my dear friend, I don't think you or anyone with a sound mind would stand to let these go through the machine if you could possibly help it.

"I don't think it is necessary to put in quite so many of them, especially like this. I run my show coupled up and these marks are put in 3 on the front of each reel and 3 on the back end, I presume for change over signals which is ridiculous to my idea of thinking. The greatest fault lies with the Mutual, Triangle and Paramount films, and I think it should be stopped; at least, if the exchange manager thinks anything of his films, for suppose I cut out 6 pieces to the reel averaging 1 inch apiece. The next fellow does the same thing, and in a short while the reel will be short a couple of scenes, and in a little longer time they will have a tail piece and a leader left. If they call that judgment I don't or I don't think you would either.

"Now I'm going to go for you especially in this week's issue where you say in one article that there is a dividing line between each picture and if we operators will hold it up to a strong light we will see it. Well, that's just where I differ with you for I am sending you a piece of film without a dividing line on it. And if you can see one on it I think you had better join the U. S. Army as a special look-out man, for you certainly have got wonderful eyesight.

"Now I'm going to ask you a question and I suppose you will hop on me and hop on me hard; well anyhow here goes.

"I have one of the prettiest Ghosts you ever laid your eye upon once in a while.

"I am using ¾" cored National upper and ⅝" cored National lower carbons, using 55 V-50 Amp. through a Fort Wayne General Electric Generator 6½" & 7½" Meniscus Biconvex Condensers. 7" Gundlach objective with a throw of 131 feet.

"Now for my grief. Probably I'll be running with as pretty a crater as you ever wish to see and light on the screen is perfect. Then all of a sudden Mr. Ghost will appear and I'll have one H—— of a time losing him, but I'll finally lose him. Both my relief man and myself lay it to the carbons, for once in a while the binder in the core lets go and we have a wonderful effect until we change carbons. We have overcome this somewhat by putting the carbons in the lamp house and leaving them there for a day or so.

"I would certainly be pleased to have you help me if possible."

IN REPLY: We were surprised upon counting the spoils of war enclosed in Mr. Fallon's letter to note that as many as twenty-five identification marks, stencilled through the film by the exchange, had been removed from a five-reel picture which was certainly not over a week or two old.

We commend the correspondent's rigid adherence to the advanced policies of the National Anti-Misframe League in removing all of these stencil marks, and we believe that any operator who takes pride in the results which he produces on the screen would have done likewise. With the Anti-Misframe League constantly growing, it will soon be a waste of time and labor for any exchange to stencil their films, as these unsightly markings would be immediately removed upon detection by any professional operator.

The correspondent is mistaken in his assumption that these stencillings are applied by the exchange as change-over signs. No such motive actuates the exchanges in thus defacing their property, but rather the desire to identify their films in case of theft. It appears upon even superficial consideration that a film thief would have no more trouble in removing these identification marks than did our progressive correspondent, Mr. Fallon. The stencilled clippings have been sent to the exchange where they originated with a proper presentation of the demerits of such procedure.

It is with feelings of amusement second only to those undoubtedly enjoyed by Mr. Fallon that we acknowledge the receipt of a piece of film very densely printed (part of a fade-out or something similar) which shows absolutely no dividing line between pictures, even when held up to bright light, as we recommended in a recent issue should be done in order to detect the dividing line in the case of darkly printed scenes.

We said on that occasion that the dividing line would always be found by holding the film up to bright light, but this was obviously a general remark, and not to be taken too literally. There are doubtless other films similar to the one forwarded by Mr. Fallon, which show no dividing line between pictures in the case of dark scenes, but experience confirms the statement that in most all instances the dividing line between the pictures of a densely printed film will be readily found by holding the film up to a bright light.

Now we come to Mr. Fallon's ghost, which is of the irregular or intermittent type according to his description, and which we believe could be easily laid. If, as the correspondent thinks may be the case, the carbons are at fault, it would be a practical idea to try another brand for a time. We suggest that Mr. Fallon do this and report results after thorough tests.

On the other hand, the problem might concern the optical system, and we should like to inquire of the correspondent if he ever tried two 7½" condensors with his 7" projection lens, instead of the 6½" and 7½" combination he now uses. It really seems, in view of the fact that the screen ghost is not constantly in evidence, that the trouble might be due to carbon faults, but even granting the improper burning of the carbons at times, these ghost effects might be prevented from appearing on the screen by certain arrangements of the projector optical system.

If, as is frequently but improperly recommended, Mr. Fallon has his condensers at such distance from the aperture that an image of the arc crater is exactly focused thereon, he can expect to see any peculiarities of the arc's burning exactly reproduced on the screen; because the projector lens, when focused, will project the aerial image of the crater just the same as it would a film picture, if the crater image is focused at the machine aperture. It is therefore advised to experiment with different distances from condensers to aperture, because not all published data on this adjustment is correct, as is well known to advanced students of motion picture projection.

Members of the I. P. A. in Earnest

THAT the members of the International Projection Association, Inc., are in earnest, and sincere in their desire to improve their knowledge of all things pertaining to their craft was exemplified on Friday evening, November 16, at their club rooms, 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, N. Y., when the first of a series of lectures, taking up the subject of "From Power House to Operating Room," was delivered by Mr. Frank Pircher, E.E. and B.Sc., to a representative gathering of motion picture operators.

The subject of this lecture; which was only a step along the lines to be pursued by the I. P. A., and Mr. Pircher, was entitled "Electro-Magnetic Induction," and, the speaker confining himself strictly to non-technical terms as far as possible, made clear to his hearers just what was meant by electro-magnetic induction and its effect on the various devices in use in the operating room.

At the conclusion of the lecture some time was given to a general discussion, and the intelligence of the boys was most marked; their questions and theories expressed, showing that they were avidly assimilating the information being given them. And when one takes into consideration the fact that Mr. Pircher had been at work all day, and it was necessary for him to arise at 7 a. m. in order to be on the job again (the lecture ending at 2:30 a. m.) too much credit cannot be given to the man who is not only willing, but does make sacrifices in order that those with whom he is affiliated, and who are not as well informed as he, may be enabled to obtain without cost information that is of practical value. The next lecture will be held at the club rooms on Friday, November 30, at 12 o'clock, midnight, when Mr. F. H. Richardson will speak on the subject of "Efficiency in Service in Return for Adequate Renumeration."

Film Expert Endorses Article on Splicing

R. D. HANISH, General Manager, Rex Film Renovator Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio, writes:

"I wish to compliment the article which appeared in your Projection Department on November 10, regards to patching film. I used to be manager of the old Buckeye Film Projecting Company, which originated in Dayton, Ohio, in 1909, consolidated with the Cincinnati Film Exchange, and moved office to Columbus, naming the exchange the Buckeye Lake Shore Film Company, and then sold out to the Mutual Film Company. I instructed all of our inspectors to make patches as described as proper by your Projection Department.

"The write-up given in the above issue was a dandy but did not exactly show all the faults if a patch is made with the entire sprocket. When a full sprocket is used for the patch, in endeavoring to scrape the emulsion from the film the inspector is too careful of scraping too hard on the edge of the film where sprocket hole is located and will not clear away the emulsion entirely. By neglecting to remove all emulsion completely across the film, the cement will not adhere or will not weld firmly.

"The writer in his many visits to the various exchanges throughout the country finds that wherever they use patches as condemned in your illustration the middle of the film is firmly welded, but both sides of the film of the patch are loose, and when a film patch is made with both sides loose, the edges do not hold firmly and is the cause of the sprockets pulling greatly.

"I have hammered at managers of exchanges, especially in film departments, that the condemned patch (loc. cit. Fig. 1) is not the proper patch to follow or to instruct anyone to make, but it is like talking to a brick wall, and I think for the benefit of the film industry that the illustrations given should be run from time to time, not only to impress upon the exchange the proper patch, but for the operators throughout the country in general. It will succeed and be a great benefit to your National Anti-Misframe League.

"Have also noted many of your film cement recipes in your Projection Department and have no reason to condemn them, but I have a film cement formula, which I am enclosing, and we have published this in our catalogues for many years and the exchanges that have adopted this cement claim it is the best they have ever used. Have some of your inquirers for a good film cement formula try this."

COMMENT: Mr. Hanish brings up some practical points which were rather outside the scope of our article, which, as its title ("The Mechanics of Film Splicing") indicates was descriptive of the purely mechanical strains on film splices in their passage over the sprockets of a projector, and the elimination of these stresses by the use of a form of join which would be a mechanical fit around the teeth of a projector sprocket.

We intended to dwell at a later date on the actual technique of the splicing operation, such as scraping, cementing, pressing, etc., but some of these points are well emphasized in Mr. Hanish's letter.

In view of some of the film splicing which we have seen we believe that it would be well, as Mr. Hanish suggests, for the diagrams reproduced in the article mentioned to be widely circulated and closely studied by operators and exchange men, although we can state that prior to the receipt of Mr. Hanish's letter we had already received a number of communications from operators in which they stated that our demonstration was all in favor of the proposed type of splice, and that they had, in fact, often thought of writing in recommendation of the same style of join.

A good film cement formula is always of interest and value to operators, and we are pleased to reproduce herewith the one suggested by Mr. Hanish. It is compounded as follows:

Collodion	1 part
Sulphuric Ether	1 part
Amyl Acetate	1 part
Accytic Ether	1 part

Seattle Hospital Installs Simplex

THE Seattle Stage Lighting Company, of Seattle, recently installed a Simplex projector in the Tuberculosis Hospital at Seattle, Wash. The Simplex was mounted on a portable platform so that it can be moved from one ward to another and in this manner each floor secures its own entertainment without interfering with the patients on the others.

The operators' union furnishes an operator one day a week without cost to take charge of the machine and run the show.

Jensen & Von Herberg's New Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., known as the "grandest in the West" is using Simplex projectors.

The Class A theatre, Seattle, Wash., has also installed two of the latest model Simplex projectors.

Some other recent installations include such well known theatres as the Temple Theatre, Lorain, Ohio; Hippodrome Theatre, Sidney, N. Y.; Pastime Theatre, Ansonia, Conn.; the Margaretville Opera House, Margaretville, N. Y.; Linden Theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Elliot Theatre, Newark, N. J.; Lyric Theatre, Toledo, Ohio; Adelphia Theatre, Reynoldsville, Pa., and the Happy Hour Theatre, Reynoldsville, Pa.

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Local 415 Joins Anti-Misframe League in Body

As additional evidence that the merits of the National Anti-Misframe League are appreciated by progressive operators and operators' organizations in all sections of the country, we are pleased to state that at a regular meeting of Local 415 I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Miami, Arizona, held on November 11, it was decided that Local 415 should join the N. A. M. L. in a body. The names of the members of Local 415, which embraces both Miami and Globe, Arizona, were accordingly forwarded by the secretary, E. E. Wise, and will be noted on the roll of honor.

We can state with assurance that other locals and operators' organizations will also be enrolled in the National Anti-Misframe League in due course, and we congratulate the Arizona operators on their progressive move.

General Comments

FRED FORSTER has been in town for a few days collecting orders for his "Missouri Waltz," by Frederick Knight Logan. If Forster does not take back orders for one hundred thousand copies it will be rather surprising. When he comes in from Chicago, where his main office is, he seldom has time to breathe.

"Just as Your Mother Was," Harry Von Tilzer's new ballad hit, has been made into a motion picture and shows all the earmarks of a regular Von Tilzer ballad winner.

A number of singers and picture musicians are just beginning to realize that "Valley Rose," by Branen and Lloyd, is a real ballad hit.

Dick Gerard, author of "Sweet Adeline," is back in the business and has just closed a deal with a publisher for two of his songs. Dick says that twelve publishers told him that "Sweet Adeline" would never sell a thousand copies. And maybe it did not.

Harry Tenny is now professional manager for Jos. W. Stern & Co., and says that "When the Moon is Shining," the new war song by Private Frederick Rath, is making quite a hit with performers. Bob Miller is acting as an assistant to Tenny.

An Outline of the Cinekrome Color Process

AS a sure proof of our oft repeated contention that color cinematography is coming to the fore as a logical advance in motion picture presentation we have here to record the results of another color process which has arrived at the stage of practical demonstration.

We refer to the Cinekrome process, which has been evolved by the Kunz, Wheeler Moffat Company at their laboratories in Boston, Mass., and is being exploited by the American Cinekrome Corporation, of which J. C. Gibson is president.

The new process was demonstrated at Wurlitzer Hall, West Forty-first street, New York City, on Friday evening, November 9, and we proceed to give an outline of the new method. While we have examined the mechanisms used in taking and projecting the Cinekrome pictures we must state that at the present time it is unfeasible to give the same our customary thorough treatment, as many patents on the new process are still in abeyance and we have no wish to work a hardship upon the gentlemen who have labored to bring the Cinekrome process to its present stage.

As the result of our observations at the demonstrational exhibition may be of some interest we shall, however, describe the quality of the results by the new method, and as a necessary prelude we give a slight outline, in very general terms, of the manner in which the Cinekrome process is worked.

The Cinekrome process is a two-color process but is not an alternating or successive method, as the red- and green-sensation pictures are projected simultaneously and are superimposed on the screen, as in the Technicolor process recently described. Aside from this point there is no similarity between the Cinekrome and Technicolor systems, having, as the component pairs, or cycles, of red- and green-sensation images are adjacent to one another on the film strip in the Cinekrome process, instead of being separated by the height of two pictures as in the Technicolor process. It is at once apparent therefore that entirely different optical devices are required, both in photographing and projecting the Cinekrome pictures, in order to record and to project simultaneously the adjacent pairs of red- and green-sensation pictures.

The Cinekrome color-sensation negative images are photographed in sets of two (a red and a green) and the red and green images adjoin one another on the film. Both the red- and the green-sensation image of each set or cycle are recorded simultaneously and through the same lens, which is a desirable consideration in any method of color cinematography and constitutes an important feature of the Cinekrome process. It will be obvious to students of the color processes that the simultaneous production of two images by one lens requires the use of a reflecting system, and it further appears that some arrangement of prisms is most suited for this purpose. While we cannot at present give a thorough description of the reflecting system of the Cinekrome camera we may draw attention to the fact that the light rays from the lens are divided and sent along two paths (necessary to the formation of two images) by the use of a selectively reflecting and transmitting surface interposed between two components of the reflecting system. It is claimed that the selective action of this combined reflecting and transmitting surface permits of the red picture receiving all of the red light (neglecting losses by filter absorption) while the same is true of the green light which produces the green picture. This statement requires substantiation, for we have not as yet seen this selectively reflecting and transmitting surface. Messrs. Kunz and Moffat, who have worked the thing out, advise us that it is a metallic coating specially deposited on one of the surfaces of the optical system of the Cinekrome camera.

It is quite a difficult matter to simultaneously photograph pairs of red- and green-sensation pictures right next to one another on cine film, as any experimenter knows, and systems of prisms are notorious for the number of extra and entirely undesirable reflected images which they produce. We have viewed the focussed pair of images on the ground glass of the Cinekrome camera, however, and can testify to the uniformity of the respective red and green images (produced simultaneously by one lens) and also to the absence of flare-spots or extraneous reflections. The respective red-orange and blue-green color-filters used in securing Cinekrome negative records are apparently mounted just in front of the exposure apertures for the respective red and green pictures.

We turn with enthusiasm to a brief description of the method by which these Cinekrome color pictures are projected, because the projector used in this process is one of the most ingenious, interesting and convenient specimens of cinematographic mechanism which we have examined in many a day. The Cinekrome projector is of the duplex type (two machines in one) and was designed by J. E. Robin of the American Standard Motion Picture Machine Company and constructed under the supervision of the same gentleman.

We hope in the near future to present an illustrated and detailed description of this new duplex projector, but for the present a very general description must suffice. Briefly, the Cinekrome projector consists of two complete mechanisms and two sets of magazines, fastened together and mounted on a pedestal. Between the two mechanisms is mounted a motor by means of which both machines are driven, through the medium of gearing and a shaft bearing two clutches. As might be supposed, one of the mechanisms of the Cinekrome projector is specially designed for color projection, while the other mechanism is used for the projection of ordinary black and white pictures. One large arc lamp (and lamphouse) serves both of the two mechanisms and a startling feature in the operation of the new double projector is the ability to change instantly from black and white to color projection, or vice versa, without shutting off the motor and without the use of an additional light source. Like all novelties this procedure is simple when once explained. The two projector mechanisms are swiveled to the base or pedestal of the Cinekrome projector, and by grasping a large lever and turning the same the color projecting mechanism is withdrawn from the path of the light rays and the black and white mechanism is swung around to replace it. The motor by which the mechanisms are driven remains running all the time and by means of the clutches on the ends of the driving shaft one machine is started and the other one stopped in the act of interchanging the mechanisms.

We are not especially concerned at present with the details of the black and white projecting mechanism of the Cinekrome projector, but a few generalities concerning the color projecting devices and methods are in order. As we have stated that the Cinekrome color pictures are photographed in sets of two (a red and a green) it is apparent that this process requires twice the usual (black and white) length of film to record a scene of given duration, but in projecting the Cinekrome positive the film passes through the machine at the usual rate of 16 changes per second. The film is shifted by a large 32-tooth sprocket in sets of two pictures at each shift, and while only 16 shifts per second (normal speed) are made it can be seen that 2 feet of film pass through the mechanism in each second.

As the two component images or pictures of a Cinekrome cycle are immediately adjacent to one another on the film it is apparent that the two image apertures of the projector must likewise adjoin one another; consequently the two apertures can be illuminated by a large spot of light from a single arc-lamp and set of condensers. The light rays after traversing the two apertures of the Cinekrome color projector fall upon two reflecting prisms of special form, which are mounted just in front of the picture apertures, and the rays are then directed to the projection lenses, of which there are two, spaced some distance apart at the front of the projector. These projection lenses are adjustable, both horizontally and vertically, by means of conveniently located thumbscrews, and the red and green pictures projected by the two lenses may thus be superimposed on the screen in exact register. We should like to dwell here upon the design of the reflecting prism system of the Cinekrome projector and some other features of this most novel mechanism, but our remarks along this line must be deferred for a time.

One phase of the Cinekrome process we may describe in full and that is the quality of the results as revealed on the screen. As some difficulty with regard to securing perfect definition is inherent in all color processes where sets of projected images must be superimposed on the lantern screen, it is gratifying to state that the Cinekrome results showed very good definition in most instances, although the definition with these methods which depend upon screen superposition is never equal to that of properly photographed and projected results of successive color processes or ordinary black and white cinematography. It can be said, however, that the definition of the Cinekrome pictures was more than passably good, and with the new camera which the company is building we have no doubt that they will realize the utmost in sharpness which the principle of their method permits.

On the score of color rendition the inventors of Cinekrome have deviated somewhat from the usual course, and we are bound to say a very great ways from the theoretical dictates of two-color photography. We have not ascertained the spectral transmissions of the Cinekrome taking-filters, but we have examined the projecting filters and the Cinekrome screen synthesis may be described as follows: The proprietors of the process have sought to secure faithful reproduction of flesh tints, i. e., the accurate representation of faces, etc., and have accordingly selected as their red filter a filter which is of a magenta or pink color (mixture of red and blue). The exact hue of this pink projecting-filter is such that in order to produce a neutral white upon the screen the (complementary) green filter used in conjunction is of a bright and almost pure green hue.

The general result of this combination, as evidenced by the Cinekrome projections, is that complexions are very well reproduced, being free from any undue ruddiness, and other subdued shades are likewise pleasingly rendered. Greens are vividly evident upon the slightest provocation, due to the saturated hue of the green projecting-filter, while reds cannot be reproduced at all with the filters now under consideration, as the red filter is of a pinkish hue and no deeper red can naturally be reproduced than the actual color of the filter.

This does not imply that other hues are outside the scope of the method, however, as by the employment of other projecting-filters any other range of colors within the scope of the two-color process may be approximated. The arrangement of the filters in the Cinekrome projector permits speedy interchanging or adjustment, and as this is a feature of some interest a few words in description may not be amiss. The mechanism of the projector is accessible for threading by opening a door on the operating side, as in the case of a Simplex projector. Attached to the inner side of this door and at right angles to the same is a rectangular metal frame having openings into which the filters (in the form of rectangular glasses or gleatines) are slipped.

Upon closing the mechanism door these filters are interposed between the light rays from the condenser system and the picture apertures, and we might also add that the revolving shutter of this machine, which is a double one (two shutters revolving in opposite directions), is also located between the condenser and the picture apertures.

We consider that the devices used in photographing and projecting Cinekrome are very practical mechanisms and at a later and more feasible time will present an authentic and detailed account of the apparatus and operation of the Cinekrome method.

ALFRED S. CORY.

Depth of Field in Cinematography

THE enlarging qualities of a photographic image depend upon the size of the circles of confusion of which the image is composed, for it is well known that no lens reproduces a luminous point, or any point of a self-luminous object, as a point in the image, but always as a disc of more or less sensible dimensions. These discs which, considered in the aggregate, form the picture or image cast by a lens, are known as "circles of confusion," and it is customary to state that if the circles of confusion of a photographic image are not larger than 1/100 inch in diameter the photograph will appear sharp when viewed in the ordinary way, and that when the circles of confusion are not more than 1/200 inch in diameter, a negative is suitable for enlarging purposes. Many cinematographers have taken 1/200 inch as a suitable diameter for the disc of confusion in motion picture work, although we long ago pointed out that this was nowhere near small enough to be compatible with sharply defined screen images. Mr. Arthur Lockett, a well known British worker in practical photography, has investigated the proposition and we reprint his remarks, which were published in the British Journal of Photography under the above title.—Ed. Camera Department.

"Depth of field is a subject of special interest to the cinematographer on account of the enormous enlargement of the tiny film pictures when projected, and a much smaller circle of least confusion is necessary than will pass muster for lantern slides.

"To arrive at an idea of what is wanted, take the case of a lantern slide made by contact from a negative having a circle of least confusion of 1/200 in. We will suppose a portion, 2¾ in. square to be projected to 10 ft. diameter, a very usual size. This is a linear enlargement of nearly 44 diameters, and the circles which do duty for points in the image are, therefore, magnified on the screen to 0.22 in. diameter, which is found to be satisfactory in practice when viewed from a proper distance.

"Now, a cinematograph film picture averages ⅞ in. in width, and if this were projected to the same size as the lantern slide (10 ft.) it would mean a linear enlargement of practically 137 diameters. A circle of least confusion of 1/200 in. would, in this case, be magnified to 0.685 in. or over ⅝ in. diameter, which would certainly be considered poor definition.

"To get as sharp a projected picture as was obtained with the lantern slide, the circle of least confusion for the cinema film ought to be 1/600 in. which, with a magnification of 137 diameters, as before, would be enlarged to practically 0.23 in. With a picture 15 ft. wide the circle of least confusion will be 0.34 in. width which is still tolerable. Beyond 15 ft. it is really inadvisable to go. Not only does the definition deteriorate but the figures of players become absurdly gigantic. It may be stated, therefore, as a general rule, that a cinema film calls for a circle of least confusion three times smaller than that permissible for a lantern slide. It is true that many workers are contented with 1/400 in. but the smaller fraction is certainly preferable.

"The writer has discovered a very simple rule, believed to be new, which is readily memorized and enables the correct hyperfocal distance to be arrived at in a couple of seconds. It is as follows:—Multiply the focal length of the lens by 50; the result gives the distance in feet to focus on with a stop of the same f/ number as the focal length for a circle of least confusion of 1/600 in.
